SIR,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that the General in command of Her Catholic Majesty's forces at San Sebastian informed me of his intention to re-establish Her Catholic Majesty's authority at the port of Passages and its neighbourhood, and requesting the co-operation of His Majesty's squadron under my command, which I readily acceded to. Every arrangement having been made to attack the insurgents' intrenchments on the eastern bank of the river Ucumea, this morning Her Catholic Majesty's forces moved in three divisions, and took up positions opposite to the ferdable parts of that river, the artillery placed in position to cover their advance. The British and Spanish squadrons at the same time proceeded close off the entrance of the river, for the purpose of dislodging the insurgents from their positions, and particularly from the convent of San Francisco, which was strongly barricaded, and occupied by a considerable force, to prevent a bridge being thrown across the river. The instant the troops appeared on the banks of the river a sharp fire of musketry commenced, and extended along the whole line of intrenchments the insurgents had thrown up to obstruct the passage of the river, which was promptly answered by the artillery and guns of the squadron. The insurgents were obliged to retire with considerable loss, closely pursued by Her C. Majesty's forces. The insurgents attempted to defend the different strong positions they retired upon, but were compelled to give way. At half-past 9 A.M. the squadron arrived off the entrance of Passages; a few ill-directed shots were fired from the fort at the entrance, which were returned by Her C. Majesty's steam-vessels, and compelled the insurgents to abandon the port, when the squadron entered. I had great satisfaction in noticing the precision with which the shells were thrown from the Phœnix and Salamander. The Marine Bat., under the command of Maj. Owen, were employed in covering the seamen whilst throwing the bridge across the Urumea. I had also great satisfaction in witnessing the zeal and activity displayed by the officers and men of the British squadron and Marine battalion. I am happy to say this service was performed without loss on the part of His Majesty's squadron. I have not yet received any information as to the loss sustained by Her Catholic Majesty's forces, but I am given to understand it does not exceed 30 killed and wounded. The loss of the insurgents is estimated to be nearly 200. I attribute the rapid success of this movement, and the small lose sustained by Her C. Majesty's forces, to the admirable judgment and good arrangement displayed by Lieut.-Gen. De Lacy Evans. The gallantry and good order of the troops under his command have inspired a confidence in this neighbourhood amongst the inhabitants, that their persons and property will be in the utmost degree respected; and I am happy to find that those who had been induced to abandon their dwellings by false representations are now returning in great numbers. I have, &c. JOHN HAY, Commodore.

From Commodore Lord John Hay to Mr. C. Wood, with one enclosure.

H.M.'s Steam-ship Phœnix, Passages, June 7, 1836.

SIR,—I have the honour to enclose the copy of a letter addressed to me by Maj. Owen, commanding the Rl. Marine Bat., informing me of his proceedings on the 6th inst., of which I trust their Lordships will approve. I have the greatest satisfaction in stating, that the judgment with which the various movements of the Rl. Marine Bat. were directed, and the gallantry and steadiness displayed by the officers and men on that occasion, is highly creditable. I have, &c. JOHN HAY, Commodore.

From Maj. John Owen to Commodore Lord J. Hay.

Heights of Armitza, June 6, 4 P.M.

My Lord,—This morning, at 8 o'clock, the enemy drove in the first line of pickets in our front, and occupied the houses, which were shortly after again carried by the 3d and 9th regs. of the Legion, and the Carlists retired to their former positions. At 8 o'clock the fire of the three pieces of artillery, supported by a heavy musketry fire, indicated a serious attack on the position near Alsa. After the attack had continued some time, the enemy received a reinforcement by the foot of the heights on their left, and pressed forward with considerable energy, the division of Jauregui giving way before them. The Quartermaster-Gen. then thought proper to desire the support of the battalion under my command, and we accordingly advanced, amidst the cheers of the other troops, and the Spaniards, supported by us, again moved forward, recovered the position they had lost, and finally drove the enemy from the field. I think it right to add, that it was proposed to me to precede the Spaniards in their last advance, and I hope your Lordship will be of opinion that I exercised a sound discretion in declining to do so. The officers and men were very cool under fire. We have one officer (Captain Garmston) severely, and two men slightly, wounded.

JOHN OWEN, Maj. Commanding.

From Commodore Lord John Hay to Mr. C. Wood.

H.M.'s Steam-ship Phœnix, Port of Passages, June 9, 1836.

SIR,—For the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, I have the honour to acquaint you, that at 3 o'clock this morning three battalions of insurgents attacked the intrenched positions on the eastern height of Pasanges, occupied by the seamen and marines of H.M.'s squadron under my command for the protection of this port. The advanced posts occupied by Her Catholic Majesty's troops, which the insurgents attempted in the first instance to surround, and had nearly succeeded, when a party of marines, under the command of Lieutenant Langly, advanced to their assistance, under cover of a well-directed fire from four field pieces; the insurgents were compelled to retire with considerable loss. I have much satisfaction in reporting the good conduct and zeal displayed by the Commanders, Officers, Seamen, and Marines of the squadron under my command on this occasion, and who have in the short space of four days, by an exertion rarely to be met with, thrown up works and mounted four guns on nearly an inaccessible rock. Lieut.-Langley, of the Rl. Marines, has received a severe wound, which is the only casualty of importance that has happened; but I trust this excellent young officer will be restored to his duty in a short time. I have, &c. JOHN HAY, Commodore.

From Commodore Lord John Hay to Mr. Charles Wood, with three enclosures.

H.M.'s St.-ship Phœnix, San Sebastian, July 13, 18

SIR,—I have the honour to enclose copies of two letters which I have this day sent to Rear-Admiral Sir William Hall Gage. I have, &c. JOHN HAY, Commodore.

From Commodore Lord John Hay to R.-Adm. Sir W. H. Gage, Lisbon.

H.M.'s St.-ship Phœnix, San Sebastian, July 13, 18

SIR,—I have the honour to acquaint you, that having been informed by the Lieut.-General commanding Her Catholic Majesty's forces in the province of Guipuscoa of his intention to make a demonstration towards Bidasson, and, if he found it practicable without undertaking a siege, to drive the insurgents from the fortress of Fuenterabia, and re-establish Her Catholic Majesty's authority. With a view to accomplish this object, I was requested by the Lieut.-General to co-operate with the squadron under my command. The necessary arrangements were immediately made to afford every possible aid, consistent with my instructions. Her Catholic Majesty's forces crossed the harbour of Passages during the night of the 10th inst., and advanced on Fuenterabia by the coast-road. I directed Maj. Owen, of the Marine battalion, to co-operate by land, and I proceeded with H.M.'s steam-ships Phœnix, Salamander, and Comet to the entrance of the Bidassoa, and anchored close off the bar. Two guns from the fortress of Fuenterabia immediately opened their fire on his Majesty's vessels, which was promptly returned, but at too great a distance to produce any material effect. At 9 o'clock A.M. part of Her Catholic Majesty's forces descended the heights, and nearly reached the town, when it appeared a considerable force of insurgents (at least 8,000) had assembled to oppose their advance. At 11 the insurgents were attacked by one division of her Catholic Majesty's army, and, after an obstinate resistance, were driven from their position which enabled her C. Majesty's forces to take possession of the heights immediately above the town. The Lieut.-General, I am informed, considered it impracticable to breach the walls without heavy artillery, and not considering it prudent to remain in the position he then occupied, towards evening decided to withdraw the troops to the heights he had left in the forenoon, which was accomplished in the most perfect order; and on the morning of the 12th the army returned to Passages. The gallantry and steadiness displayed by her C. Majesty's forces who were engaged on this occasion does them the highest credit. Their loss amounts to 9 killed, 40 wounded (most of them slightly), and 20 missing. From the most authentic information, the insurgents' loss is considerable; 350 killed and wounded, including a chief and two superior officers. On observing the troops returning to Passages, I immediately withdrew H.M. vessels from their anchorage. I have, &c. J. HAY, C.

From Commodore Lord J. Hay to Rear-Admiral Sir W. H. Gage, Lisbon.

H.M.'s St.-ship Phœnix, San Sebastian, July 13, 18

SIR,—I have the honour to enclose a copy of a communication I have received from Maj. Owen, respecting the conduct of the officers and men under his command during the time he was detached to co-operate with Her Catholic Majesty's forces. I have great satisfaction in stating, that, in addition to my own observations, I have received the most flattering report of the gallantry and steadiness displayed by the Marine Batt. during the operations. The judgment and zeal with which Maj. Owen conducted this service, as on all other occasions when detached from the squadron, reflects the highest credit on that officer. I have, &c.

JOHN HAY, Commodore.

From Maj. John Owen to Commodore Lord J. Hay.

Passages, July 12, 183

My Lord,—I have the honour to transmit a return of the killed and wounded of the battalion under my command in the affair of yesterday. I do not attempt a description of the operations, because they were principally conducted under your Lordship's eye; and I can only add, that during the time the battalion was exposed to a heavy fire at the advanced position, the officers and men behaved with admirable coolness. I have, &c.

JOHN OWEN

Battalion Royal Marines.

Second Lieut. LAMBERT

JOHN OWEN, Major Commanding

THE LATE LIEUTENANT GENERAL SIR JOHN HOPE, G. C. H.

In Nov. 1778, this officer was appointed a Cadet in Gen. Houston's reg. of the Scots Brigade, then serving in Holland, and after being drilled, &c. went through the subordinate ranks of Corporal and Sergeant; and in Dec. 1779, received an Ensigncy in the same regt., then quartered in Bergen-op-Zoom: he marched with it to Maestricht, where he continued till Aug. 1781, and then returned home. The 26th April, 1782, he obtained a comp., and again joined his regt. at Maestrecht. Having quitted the Dutch service, he was, with other officers in similar situations, placed by the King on half-pay. The 20th Sep. 1787, he obtained a comp. in the 60th; and in Dec. of that year was again placed on half-pay. In June 1788, he was appointed to a troop in the 13th Light Dragoons; and in Nov. 1792, Aid-de-Camp to Lieut. Gen. Sir W. Erskine, with whom he went to Flanders early in 1793. He served the campaign of that and the following year, and was present at all the actions in which the cavalry were engaged. He accompanied Sir William to England in 1795, and who died in March of that year. The 25th March he was promoted to a Majority in the 28th Light Dragoons; and the 20th Feb. 1796, to a Lieut. Colonelcy. In April following he embarked with his regt. for the Cape, and remained there till it was drafted; in Jan. 1799, he arrived in England. On the 19th April he was appointed to the 37th foot; and on 7th Feb. 1800, sailed to join the regt. at St. Vincent's. He remained in the West Indies till Nov. 1804, when he returned home and exchanged into the 60th; his commission in the latter corps was dated 30th June, 1804. On the 1st Jan. 1805, he received the rank of Col., and was placed on the Staff as Assis. Adjut. Gen. in North Britain; at the close of 1805 he was appointed Dep. Adjut. General to the expedition destined for the Baltic, under Lieut. Gen. Lord Catheart; but the troops being recalled, this officer did not proceed on that expedition, but returned to his Staff at Edinburgh. In May, 1807, he was again appointed Dep. Adjut. Gen. to the Forces being up the Baltic under the same officer, and did duty as such. He was present at the siege and capture of Copenhagen. In April, 1808, he was appointed Brig. Gen. on the Staff in North Britain, and subsequently Dep. Adjut. Gen. to the Forces in that country; the 25th July, 1810, Major Gen., and placed on the Staff of the Severn District, from whence, in 1812, he was removed to that of the army in the Peninsula. He was subsequently placed on the Staff of Ireland and of North Britain, where he continued till his appointment to the rank of Lieut. Gen. 12th Aug. 1818. The 6th Sep. 1822, he obtained the Colonelcy of the 72nd Foot.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your politeness in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr Dennis Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions, it instantly affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undermentioned, and 20s other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Lawlin, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salman, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Apriest to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broths, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Rowls, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burge and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

WHOLESOME SUMMER BEVERAGE.—There is nothing of more importance at the present season than the choice of a Beverage. The leading Members of the Medical Profession, aware of the necessity for great caution in this respect, having strongly recommended weak Brandy and Water in lieu of the general class of fermentable liquors, J. T. Betts and Co., fortified by this recommendation, and the constantly increasing sale of the Patent Brandy (exceeding, in the last year, that of the preceding year by between twenty and thirty thousand Gallons), may, with great propriety, dwell upon its peculiar adaptation to the season; not only as a safe and agreeable beverage, but also with reference to its importance in the manufacture of Home-made Wines, in the preparation of Confectionary and Preserved Fruits, and for general Culinary purposes. For all which objects it is peculiarly adapted by that extreme purity and freedom from acid which has been established by the analysis and Certificates of many of the most eminent Chemists.

As Distillers, J. T. Betts and Co. cannot send out less than two Gallons of their Patent Brandy; which may be obtained at Eighteen Shillings per Imperial Gallon, of the highest legal strength, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John Street, which is their only Establishment.

TO THE BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH.

The following case has been forwarded by Johnson Lincoln, Esq., Surgeon of the Royal Navy.

Northallerton, Yorkshire, July 31, 1836.

Gentlemen,—With much pleasure I beg again to bear testimony to the beneficial effects of the Universal Medicine in diseased liver, small-pox, and constipated intestines. The person with a diseased liver was a whitesmith by trade, and was many years in the East Indies in the army; he has been afflicted upwards of twenty-five years, and for the last eighteen months scarce ever out of bed. Complained of most excruciating pain under each scapula, each side, and across the loins. He had a large ulcer in the kidneys, his water the colour of blood, mixed with matter; he was repeatedly blistered, bled, mercurialised, &c., with all the other remedies used by medical men, until he was reduced to a skeleton, when the medical men gave him up as a bad bargain. Then he sent for me. I asked him if he had confidence to take 20, 30, or 40 pills at a dose, twice or thrice in the day, and told him they would be Morison's Medicines. He made answer, he would take anything, and we began with ten night and morning, increasing rapidly, and he had not taken the Medicine above six days before a large abscess burst into the stomach. I immediately gave him a large dose of No. 3, when he passed by stool a good quart of purulent matter. He has now taken the Medicines about five weeks, and three distinct large abscesses have emptied themselves into the stomach, and he has voided two quarts of matter and more. He is a person whose case will do justice to the cause, for no sooner does he find a pain than he takes a large dose of Pills. All eyes are upon me—as this man's case is well known, every one is watching my progress (but I have no fear), the medical men in particular, and it will tend more than publications to open the eyes of the people, as the Medicine was scarce known here before my case appeared in the public prints, and already the Rev. Dr. Townsend, Vicar of this town, and Prebend of Durham, has become a convert, and many others, in particular a Gentlemen residing here from London, by this case, and reading two or three publications brought from London, and many are now taking the Medicine who before thought them composed of poison, at least so our wise medical man told them. I have much pleasure in subscribing myself, Gentlemen,

Your most obedient humble servant,
Johnson Lincoln, R.N.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in full under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 61, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolable upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and it is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during a period of three centuries, and has been found unceasingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where naturе ordained its existence, if not from those causes in which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

retain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed in the Oils sold, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those called by substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprived of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minutely as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, widely entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff-combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 9s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended in the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Pront, Strand; Willoughby, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 3s. 6d.; pints, quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "Joseph Henry Green.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From Bransby Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 15, 1835."

From William Henson, Esq., No. 2, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills. They are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs, three require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great ability.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; J. Edwards; T. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. late B. Godfrey Whalley, 61, Bishopsgate street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

VINCENT'S GOWLAND'S LOTION.—"Simplex Munditiis."—Whether as an appendage of the toilet or a balsamic remedy for all imperfections of the Skin, this celebrated article, to which professional skill achieved the triumph of a specific, will be found maintaining the reputation of its eminent inventor, the late Dr. Gowland. To Ladies it offers an aid, derived from legitimate science, for the attainment and preservation of the most distinguishing attribute of female beauty, a pure and radiant complexion, upon those recognised principles which must ever leave empirical assumption at a distance, and which were never more happily evinced than in the promptly favourable effects of this truly safe, congenial, and elegant preparation. The curative properties of Gowland's Lotion are equalled only by those experienced in its use as a refresher of the complexion, invaluable at the present season as infallibly averting sunburn, tan, freckles, discolorations, &c., and both guarding and promoting the loveliest tints that adorn the female countenance. To Gentlemen, after shaving, it is invaluable. Price 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Observe, the genuine has "M. E. Vincent" signed on the label, and "Robert Shaw, 38, Queen-street, Cheapside," engraved on the Government stamp.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result, the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, burn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend those deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

COPAIBA ENTIRELY SUPERSEDED, UNPARALLELED SUCCESS!—The superiority of WRAY'S BALSAMIC PILLS over Copaiba, Cubebs, and every other medicine, in the cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, Seminal Weakness, Whites, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder or Urethra, and other Diseases of the Urinary Passages, become every day more apparent, from their extraordinary demand and universal success in all the above complaints, as, since their first introduction to the public, thousands of cases have annually been cured. Within three years, prior to which they had been employed in private practice, to upwards of 1,200 cases—many of them most inveterate, and in no one instance found to fail, or to produce those unpleasant symptoms sometimes experienced while taking mercury, copaiba, cubebs, turpentine, and that mass of medicines resorted to in these complaints. Possessing these properties, they agree with the most delicate stomach, strengthen the Digestive Organs, increase the appetite, and improve the general health. They require neither confinement nor alteration of diet (except abstinence from stimulants, where considerable inflammation exists), and, as experience has made proved, they will effect a cure sooner than copaiba or any other medicine in present use, and may be justly considered the safe and efficacious remedy in all stages of these disorders. Prepared only by M. O. Wray, at No. 118, Holborn hill, and sold Wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, No. 95, Farringdon-street; Butler, No. 4, Cheapside; Sutton and Co., No. 10, Bow Church yard, and Retail, by Strolborg, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Sanger, No. 150, Oxford-street; Lowe and Hounsbower, No. 47, Blackfriars road, London; and all respectable Patent Medicine Venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each box.—N.B. Be particular to ask for Wray's Balsamic Pills.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE.—Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical Character, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and efficacious remedy every discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Dulch, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla, Buchu, and other vegetable alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with Secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Blindness, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. Stirling, 56, High-street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London (carriage free), in Bottles, at 4s 6d., 10s., and 22s each.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The Proprietor being apprised of several unprincipled Medicine Venders, who, when applied to for this remedy, substitute, under the name of Cubebs, Sarsaparilla, &c., a worthless and injurious article of their own make, feels it is an imperative duty to say, that it is absolutely necessary, before purchasing, to see the name "J. W. Stirling," Whitechapel, is engraved on the Government Stamp affixed outside the wrapper on the bottle, without which it cannot be genuine.

THE VEGETABLE SYRUP of DE VENOS.—At this period of the year, when, from the increased heat in the atmosphere, inflammation of the blood is of more frequent occurrence, the use of a medicine which cools it, without debilitating the system, must be evident and advantageous, if not indispensible. Of such a nature and properly the experience of more than half a century has proved that the Vegetable Syrup is unquestionably possessed. It has a peculiar efficacy in correcting, purifying, and sweetening the blood; and those who are afflicted with Scrofula, Scurvy, Scaldhead, Eruptions, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from the impurity of the blood and juices, should, especially at this season, enter without delay upon a regular course of the Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this medicine in promoting insensible perspiration, is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure, it operates on the animal juices, and requires only the common restraint of moderation in diet. It is dissolved in the chyle of the stomach, is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects their tendencies in all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe, though a powerful, substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mineral occasions.

The Syrup is prepared by Mr. Cadham, No. 52, Berners'-street, Oxford-street, and sold by her, and, while her authority, by all respectable Medicine Venders in town and country.—See Mrs. Cadham's recently published Treatise on Scrofula, Scurvy, Consumption, and Diseases of the Blood and Liver. Sold by Ridgway and Sons, 169, Piccadilly.

An inspection of Mr Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

The principles upon which this Company is founded have been adopted after mature consideration, and to the assured it offers the combined advantages of two of the most successful establishments of its kind that have been formed of late years—moderate rates of premium and a large proportion of profits.

To the Proprietors this Company offers a secure and profitable investment, it being the intention, at the expiration of every five years, in addition to interest on the paid-up capital, to apportion to them one-fifth of such profits as may then have been realised.

A general statement of the affairs of the Company will be submitted every five years, and of the profits ascertained to have accrued, after payment of interest, and the necessary expenses, four-fifths will be apportioned among the assured for the whole term of life, of one or more years' standing. This large proportion of profits among the assured will render its advantages nearly equal to those of a Mutual Assurance Society, without any of the liabilities attached to such associations.

Applications for Shares to be made by letter, addressed to the Directors, at their temporary Office, in King William-street, Mansion House, opposite Nicholas-lane; at Sir Claude Scott, Bart., and Co.'s, Bankers, 1, Cavendish-square; or the Solicitors, 66, Aldermanbury, where Prospectuses can be obtained.

Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance, to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognising the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5l. per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7½ per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL

—The Council having decided to build a School-house for the accommodation of 300 Pupils, and having opened a Subscription to carry into effect this most desirable object, consider it respectful to the Public, and just to the Naval Service in general, to make known their intention by Advertisement. Drummond and Co., Charing-cross; and Messrs Hoare and Co., Fleet-street. Subscriptions are also received at the Office, No. 7, Jermyn-street; and by Mr. Willey, Coast Guard Office, Custom House.

A very distinguished party sat down to dinner, consisting of the Officers of the regiment, and a number of other gentlemen who have at various times belonged to this distinguished corps, and who came from all parts of England and the Continent. The Mayor of Windsor had also the honour of being invited. The Hall was most splendidly decorated with flags and martial emblems, interspersed with mottoes of the battles in which the regiment had been engaged, groups of evergreens, and stars, &c., formed of arms; and at the end of the Hall was stationed the fine band of the regiment. The table was brilliantly lighted with candelabra, and decorated with superb pieces of plate. Lord F. Fitzclarence took the chair, by command of the King; and on his right was Gen. Macdonald, and on his left Sir E. Blakeney. The ornamental pieces of confectionary were executed by his Majesty's confectioner; and the beauty and taste of all the pieces excited great and well-merited praise. After the usual loyal toasts had been given, Lord F. Fitzclarence, in the name of the King, presented the plate, and dwelt, in an excellent speech, on the merits of this distinguished regiment. The plate, which is a magnificently executed vase, bears the following inscription:—"The gracious gift of King William IV., July 15th, 1836. His Majesty remembers with satisfaction that he became a member of the mess of the Royal Fusiliers at Plymouth in 1780, and he has directed his son, Colonel Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, who had the advantage of commanding the regiment during some years, to present this piece of plate as a mark of his Majesty's approbation, and of his high sense of the gallant and admirable services, and of the exemplary discipline and gentlemanly conduct which has uniformly distinguished the Royal Fusiliers."—The receipt of the splendid testimonial of the approbation of the Sovereign was suitably acknowledged by Sir. Edward Blakeney, who returned thanks on behalf of the Officers of the regiment. The splendid gift is a beautiful vase, standing on a burnished plateau. On the plateau are three lions, and between two of them is the inscription, engraved within a circle, and surmounted by trophies. Between the other lions are similar trophies, with the Royal arms. On the vase itself the Royal arms are repeated, and other military emblems, in frosted and burnished silver. It also bears an inscription of the following pieces, where the regiment had distinguished itself:—"Martinique, Talavera, Badajor, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Toulouse, Peninsula." In the early part of the day the Royal Fusiliers had been inspected in the Home Park. The regt. is to remain doing duty at Windsor until the general exchange of corps takes place.

The practice at the mortar battery with shot and shell on Monday and Tuesday last was not distinguished by any particular success, but the movements in infantry evolutions at a field drill on Wednesday were performed with much precision; they did not use cartridge. Gen. Millar will resume his duties as Director-General of the Field Train Department, &c., on 23d inst. At the fancy fair or bazaar to be held on the 25th instant, the stalls will be kept by ladies belonging to the garrison.

HORSE ARTILLERY.—Capt. Saunders, Lieuts. Warde and Taylor, and a numerous troop have, with four Ordnance guns from Dublin, reinforced Limerick garrison.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.—Capt. Rivers' comp. were landed this week at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich (from Halifax, N. A.), from the Sovereign transport, Lieut. Bredy, R.N., agent.

We hear the report is revived of Lord Aylmer succeeding to the command of the Forces in Ireland.

BARRACK CANTEENS.—The corporation of Portsmouth have come to a resolution that "military canteens in the garrison are unnecessary, and ought to be abolished, and that the mayor be authorised to communicate with the Board of Ordnance upon the subject."—Courier.

Ensign Russell, 40th reg., and Ens. Cole, 6th reg., embark on the 25th inst. for Bombay. Ensigns Greenwood and Fyffe, of 31st, embark next week for Bengal. The duty at Chatham is severe: the men are on guard every other day. Considerable sickness is always consequent on the want of sleep. Three nights in bed, and one on guard, are requisite for health.

A Court of Inquiry, consisting of Lieut.-Col. Pitt, 80th reg., Lieut.-Col. Weare, Provisional Battalion, and Major Bunbury, 80th reg., assembled at Fort Pitt, Chatham, on the 17th inst., to re-investigate, with the aid of a gentleman from the War Office, a remarkable case of alleged purloinment of the effects of a soldier. An inquiry took place some months ago; but we believe the guilt could not be brought home, though the purloinment was proved. The complainant is a Private, named Cohen, to whom the patient he attended had willed the property. The result is not known. These investigations do credit to Sir L. Greenwell and Lord Hawick.

The half-yearly exchange of the Household Troops stationed in London will not take place until September 1.

By the death of Major-General Sir John Hope (see Memoir in our last), Major-General Sir Colin Campbell, from the 99th Foot, has got the Colonelcy of the 72d; and Maj.-Gen. Sir Thos. Arbuthnot the Colonelcy of the 99th.

JUNIOR UNITED SERVICE CLUB.—The dinner which was given on Saturday last to the Duke of Wellington, one of the earliest and warmest patrons of the Institution, went off in a very satisfactory manner. The party consisted of 110 of its members, and the table was spread in the large drawing-room, decorated with full-length portraits of His Majesty, the Duke of Wellington, and the late Lord Nelson; and on the grand staircase leading to the scene of the banquet was placed the portrait of George IV., presented to the Club by his present Majesty, and the marble bust of the Duke of York, executed by Chantrey. The chair was filled by Admiral Sir G. Cockburn, and among those by whom he was immediately surrounded were, besides the Noble Duke, the Earl of Rosslyn, Lord Hill, Sir J. Beresford, Sir J. Cockburn, Sir L. Greenwell, Sir B. Ver and Sir A. Christie; there were besides present Sir H. St. Paul, Sir F. Smith, Sir M. Ximenes, Col. Hanmer, the Hon. Col. Westenra, Col. Sibthorp, Capt. Boldero, and others. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts were drunk in the course of the evening. It was proposed by J. Harrison Curtis, Esq., that a similar entertainment should take place annually.

The Kent freight ship, having on board detachments of the 2d batt. Royals and 66th reg., sailed from Cove on the 12th inst. for North America.

After the King's Levee yesterday, the Judge Advocate-General had an audience of His Majesty to submit the proceedings of some Courts-Martial.

Lord F. Somerset's Levee at the Horse Guards on Tuesday was attended by several military officers.

The Governorship of Edinburgh Castle has been filled up, pro tem., by the appointment of the Hon. Maj.-Gen. Stuart, Com.-in-Chief in Scotland.

PORTSMOUTH, Aug. 19.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Madagascar went to Spithead on Monday; on Wednesday her crew were mustered and inspected by Adm. Sir P. Durham; paid wages on Thursday; and she is to sail for Plymouth to-morrow, to put an officer and a party of men on board the Galatea coal depot, and navigate her to the West Indies. The Glasgow steamer, in the service of the Auxiliary Legion, came into harbour on Tuesday from St. Sebastian, with upwards of 150 officers and soldiers of the Legion; some wounded, invalided, on leave, and quitted the service. She had not any news, the Pluto, government steamer, having brought letters dated the day after the Glasgow sailed. The British ships were lying off St. Sebastian inactive. A small island in the middle of the Bay was in possession of Lieut. Williams, and a party of Seamen and Marines of the Pearl. Pique was taken to dock on Wednesday for a tide, to have her copper scrubbed; she is expected to be hauled out of the basin on Monday. Pantaloon, Lieut. Corry, returned from the Coast of Africa on Thursday: the presents for the Native Chiefs which she carried out, were to be distributed by the British Consul, and he had been conveyed to Portendrie for that purpose. Pantaloon left the Gambia for the 11th July; the Rolla was lying there. She has not had any communication with Rear-Adm. Sir P. Campbell, but heard that he was at the Cape. Columbia tr. st.-v., Mr. J. Henderson, Master and Com., arrived here on Thursday last from Plymouth, after a tedious passage of 44 days from Jamaica: she has invalid soldiers and their wives and children, and some convicts; the troops belong to the 22d and 37th regs., and are under the orders of Capt. Smith. The Forte and Cruizer were at Jamaica, the former preparing for her return to England; squadron very healthy. The Columbia put into Portsmouth for fuel and water, and has gone on to Woolwich to be paid off, her machinery being in a crazy condition. A Board of Admiralty, consisting of the Earl of Minto, Sir Charles Adam, Sir W. Parker, and Mr. Secretary Wood, are expected on Monday to inspect the Dock-yard, Victualling Department, Man-of-war, Marine Barracks, Hospital, &c. Ships in Port—Madagascar at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Inconstant, Pique, Beacon, Pantaloon, in harbour.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, August 19th.—(From our own Correspondent).—The Alban st.-v. has been hauled up under the sheers in the basin to have her boilers taken out. The Blazer st.-v. is to be commissioned by Lieut. Waugh, late of the Confiance. The Flamer st.-v. has had her masts taken out, and will have new ones put in. The Firebrand st.-v. returned to port on Monday, and hauled up alongside the Charger coal depot to take in stores. The Lightning st.-v. has got her stores on board from the Salsette hulk, and dropped down to moorings. The Alban st.-v. has hulked her crew on board the Warrior. The Rhadamanthus will be ready for service in about a week, she is being fitted with gun slides for a 68-pounder aft, and a 32 on her forecastle; the former will throw a shell one hundred weight. An inquiry was held on Monday before Capt. Superintendant Sir Samuel Warren, upon the conduct of the Second Master and the Clerk of the Alban, for various acts of insubordination. The Firefly st.-v. is fitting out with all possible despatch; the Engineers have got her wheels ready for service, and she has crossed her yards. Ships in Port;—William and Mary yt., Sir S. Warren, C.B., K.C.H.; Lightning Admy. st.-v., Lieut. Shambler, and the Firebrand Adm. st.-yt., Master Allen. In Dock:—Blazer. In Basin:—Firefly, Lt. J. Pearse, Alban, Lieut. Tinling; Rhadamanthus, Echo, Flamer, Confiance, st.-vs.; and Messenger st.-v., Mr. J. King.

MILFORD HAVEN, August 16th.—(From our own Correspondent). To-morrow there is to be a splendid regatta here, Capt. Deen, R.N., Steward. The gallant Nelson, while here in 1802, established, perhaps, the first regatta ever known in England—certainly the first ever witnessed in Wales. Since then it has, more or less, ever been continued—sometimes with considerable sport, at others with little or none. On Friday last the Caryafort was launched from Pembroke Dock-yard, under the sole superintendence of T. Pretious, Esq., Assistant Master Shipwright, the builder being absent on leave, and a prettier sight was never witnessed. She was named by Lady Phillips, who also cut away the lanyards which suspended weights over the dry shores, when instantly the noble fabric rushed forth, like a bride to meet the bridegroom, from beneath the shed under which she had been built. She is a sister ship of the Cleopatra. The following are her principal dimensions:—

| | As per Drawing. ft. | in. | As Built. ft. | in. |
| Length of the deck | 130 | 0 | 130 | 0 |
| ,, of the keel for tonnage | 105 | 11 | 105 | 10½ |
| Breadth outside Main Wales | 40 | 8½ | 40 | 9½ |
| ,, for tonnage | 40 | 4½ | 40 | 5½ |
| ,, moulded | 39 | 8½ | 39 | 9½ |
| Depth in hold | 11 | 6 | 11 | 6 |
| Burthen in tons | 918 | 34/94 | 925 | 8/94 |
| Draught of water on launching—forward | 10 ft. 3 in. | | | |
| aft | 15 ft. | | | |

After launching, she was moored off the Dock-yard to one of the buoys, and on Monday morning taken into dock to be coppered. This dock is one of the finest in his Majesty's arsenals, and wide enough to admit the largest ship ever built, even by Capt. Surveyor Sir W. Symonds. The Mulgrave is not yet arrived, but when she does, the officers and men who navigate her here will take back the Caryafort to Plymouth, where she is to be commissioned. It was first ordered that she should be sent to Sheerness; but last week these directions were countermanded, and she is now to go to Plymouth. It is at length definitely arranged that the detachment of Marines doing duty at Pembroke will not be relieved this year; but that early next spring another set of men and officers will be sent there. The economy of employing them in the dock-yard to do the work of labourers, &c., so fully answering the expectations of all parties, insures a continuation of this force to guard the arsenal. Were it otherwise, such a considerable expense in fitting up the Dragon, 74, as a barracks, would never have been entered into; besides which, the arsenal and harbour generally have no other protection whatever. The establishment of this detachment at Pembroke has been the means of inducing many persons to build houses on government land there. 17th Aug.—The Mulgrave arrived this morning, and has run up to the dock-yard, where she will discharge the timber and other stores she has on board for that establishment. She had a fine passage round.

PLYMOUTH, 18th inst.—The squadron under the command of R.-Adm. Sir C. Paget sailed on Thursday last on a cruise to the westward: it consisted of the Bellerophon (flag), Vanguard, Pembroke, Cornwallis, Hercules, Malabar, Scylla, and Patridge. The Minden was prevented from accompanying in consequence of great sickness among her crew. A survey was held on board on Thursday, by Captains R. Thomas Sykes, and Sir W. H. Dillon, Dr. Armstrong, senior Surg. Royal Naval Hospital, and four other Surgeons. Besides those sick on board, above one hundred cases have been sent to the Hospital. The disease is said to be a species of typhus fever, but has in no instance proved fatal. Imogine, 29, Capt. H. W. Bruce, went out of harbour to the Sound on yesterday se'nnight, and sailed on Monday for Rio de Janeiro. Capt. Tait, Com. Smart and other Officers appointed to the Dublin, and other ships on S. American station, are on board as passengers. The Doux de Julho, Brazilian corvette, sailed from the Sound on Monday evening, saluting the flag as she got under weigh, which compliment was returned by the Royal Adelaide. Galatea (coal depot) has been docked, and will take out moorings to be laid at Barbadoes. Lord Wilton's yt. Xarifa, having struck heavily on the Jersey Coast, was docked on Monday, when it appeared that her gripe and part of her keel were carried away. She is to be repaired at the dock-yard. Comus, 18, Capt. Hamilton, was unmasted yesterday, and will be paid off to-day. Russell, 74, Capt. Sir W. H. Dillon, has been re-masted, and will be docked and re-coppered. Sheldrake, Lieut. Passingham, was docked on Tuesday. Nereus, 46, has been brought down the harbour and had her masts taken out for the San Josef. The undermentioned ten-gun brigs in this port are to be thus disposed of: the Wizard to be commissioned; the Icarus, Weazle, and Musquito, to be brought forward for repair: and the Onyx, Ferret, and Procris, to be sold out of the service. Columbia troop st.-v., Mr. J. Henderson, Master and Com., arrived here on Tuesday, from W. Indies.

The Madagascar, 46, Capt. Sir John S. Peyton, will proceed with the Galatea, fitted for a coal depot, direct to Jamaica. Sir John Peyton, on reaching the station, will hoist a broad pendant, succeeding Commodore Pell.

The Ariadne is ordered to be fitted as a coal depot, to be stationed at Alexandria. The Samarang is getting in forward state for commission.

The crew of the Griffon, on paying off of that vessel testified their gratitude to Mr. A. Bryson, Assist.-Surgeon for his attention to them when in a state of sickness in the river Gambia, by presenting him with a full-dress coat, epaulette, and strap, cocked-hat, and sword; the latter with an appropriate inscription.

The coadjutors of Dean, the enterprising diver, who is now in Ireland, have in his absence recovered last week from the wreck of the Royal George at Spithead, an iron 42-pounder gun; and between the buoy of this wreck and that of the Edgar, two extremely handsome brass pieces—one a 42, the other an 18-pounder, and an iron gun, with part of another of similar construction, greatly corroded. The two latter are objects of great curiosity, and must be of great age: the entire one is 14 feet long; they are constructed of thin iron bars; both were loaded with a stone shot, of about the size of a 32-pounder; the entire one rests on a wooden stock, the half of its circumference being embedded therein its whole length, and it had evidently moved on a slide. The two brass guns were cast in the reign of Henry the Eighth—the largest of which weighs 4,377 lbs., decorated with the royal arms, and with the rose and fleur-de-lis alternately; the smaller one weighing 2,622 lbs., with the rose only, having under it the word (the only that can be deciphered) "Colveryn Bastard." These pieces, with the iron-hooped one, were discovered on the same spot, resting on some wreck, which was so completely buried in the sand, that the diver could find nothing to which he could affix a rope.

The Russell, 74, Capt. Sir W. H. Dillon, has been supplied with new fore and main-masts, and will shortly be ready to go out of Plymouth Harbour.

[The following Parliamentary return has just been furnished on the motion of Sir James Graham. We shall hereafter offer some observations upon the data afforded, but the return appears to us defective.—ED.]

THE NAVY AND THE MERCHANT SERVICES.—The number of men that entered the Navy from July 1, 1834, to June 30, 1835, who had previously served in King's ships, was 1,673, and of boys, 1,163; of men who entered the Navy for the first time, 5,638; of boys, 560. Died in hospital, 65 men and 6 boys; died on board ship, 233 men and 2 boys. Discharged with disgrace, 118. Pensioned as invalids, 129 men and 7 boys. Pensioned for long service, 213. The number of men that entered the Navy from July 1, 1835, to June 30, 1836, who had previously served in King's ships, was 1,165; and of boys, 934; of men who had entered the Navy for the first time, 3,935, and of boys, 384. Died in hospital, 63 men and 11 boys; died on board ship, 166 men and 20 boys. Discharged with disgrace, [illegible]. Pensioned as invalids, 241 men and 4 boys. Pension[illegible] for long service, 260. The number of seamen in the Merchant Service of the United Kingdom, made up prior to the passing of the 5th and 6th William IV., was 138,265. The number of seamen registered up to the same period was 78,239. The number of apprentices in the Merchant Service to the same time, 5,429. The number of apprentices which, according to the 4th George IV., ought, in proportion to tonnage, to have belonged to the Merchant Service, was 13,605 at the passing of the 5th and 6th William IV. The number of apprentices whose indentures have been registered since the passing of the same act is 7,853. This number, added to 5,429 before mentioned, makes the total number of apprentices registered up to the present time 13,282.

The Lord Eldon freight-ship, and the Palinurus and St. Vincent convict ships, have sailed from Deptford, the two latter for Australia; the excessive immorality prevailing in that colony has determined the Emigration Committee to suspend further inducements to unprotected females to emigrate thereto.

The Master of the Lightning steamer, Mr. T. Allen, has superannuated on a pension of 24*l.* per annum.

The Princess Augusta is taking on board stores for Bermuda at Woolwich.

The Prince Regent yacht in Deptford Basin will be paid off on Saturday, 20th, and delivered over to Capt. Colgan (who brought home the Liverpool, now Imaum) for the Imaum of Muscat. Mr. Tucker, present carpenter of the yacht, has leave to proceed in her, and then return to England.

Lieut. R. Hyde, R.N., 1815, was recently drowned, having been struck over board by the boom of the Knight of Kerry's yacht, on her passage from Kerry to Cork.

The Alban, Lieut. Tinling, will not be paid off as reported; she is at Woolwich to receive complete new boilers; and at the end of Sept. will proceed to the Mediterranean.

The Sovereign tr., Lieut. Brady agent, arrived this week at Woolwich to unload, and will then proceed to Detford to fit for further service.

We are happy to learn that the East India Company, with its usual liberality, has subscribed 100*l.* in aid of the Building Fund of the Royal Naval School. This is alone a proof of the opinion entertained of the importance and utility of this National Establishment, and we trust that such a noble example will not be lost on those who have the power of promoting a design, in the success of which the welfare of England, as a great maritime nation, must be materially concerned.

Great circumspection is now used in receiving volunteers for the Navy, both at the receiving ship and the outports; hundreds are rejected who would have been gladly engaged at any period of the war, and none but strong able seamen entered. This accounts for the slow progress making by the Pique and Inconstant, at Portsmouth. Were ordinary seamen or boys required they could be obtained in considerable numbers without trouble.

The Portsmouth regatta is fixed for Tuesday and Wednesday.

Vice-Adm. Sir P. Halkett was at Halifax, with his flag in the Melville, on the 10th July. Lieut. Sulivan, 2 Midshipmen, and 26 seamen, had been put in a tender, and despatched to Newfoundland, to afford protection to the British fishery, the Admiral having received information that a dispute had occurred between the French and English boats. [We have elsewhere commented on this subject.—Ed.]

The 5 guns which Mr. Deane's party got up from Spithead last week, were landed at the gun wharf, Portsmouth, on Monday, and have been inspected by a number of persons. The small brass one has "Thys Colveryn Bastard" very legible, and the other is decorated with the arms of Henry VIII. One of the iron guns is out of the Royal George, and has the broad arrow and its weight, 67cwt. 2qrs. 20lb. quite plain. Two of the iron pieces of ordnance, supposed to be from the Mary Rose, are composed of strips of iron, welded round with similar strips, and are very great objects of curiosity.

In the promotions announced in to-day's Gazette our readers will be glad to find the name of Capt. M'Dougall late Commander of the Nimrod and now commanding the Salamander steam vessel on the Coast of Spain, and that of Commander Puget, a son of the late gallant and respected Admiral of that name.

The French have, at present, stationed on the coast of Catalonia three brigs of war, namely, the Courier, Alert, and Sappho, with two steamers.

In consequence of the continued indisposition of Commander Copeland, of the surveying vessel Beacon, the Admiralty has given the command of her to Lieut. Graves, the Assistant Surveyor. She has been removed from the Basin, at Portsmouth, and will shortly sail for the Mediterranean.

Potato Beer.—M. Balling, Professor of Chemistry at Prague, has succeeded in making an excellent beer from potatoes. It is the colour of wine, is very strong, and very agreeable to the taste.

THE CASE OF MR. MORDAUNT RICKETTS.

The inapplicability of this vote of dismissal to be still more apparent if the Court will advert to the constitution of the Bengal Civil Annuity Fund, and to their own connexion with it. The Court have fully recognised the whole body of the regulations which are laid down for the management of this Fund, many of which were insisted on by themselves, and all formally approved by them. So that, without entering on the question whether, by such approval, they are or may not have become by law the compulsory administrators of these regulations, I may safely assert that their integrity and good faith stand pledged to the general tenor, as well as to the particular provisions of them.

Now the whole tenor, as well of the constitution of the Fund as of the regulations for its management, draws the distinction which common sense requires, between a subscriber and an annuitant. A subscriber cannot be treated as an annuitant, nor an annuitant as a subscriber. No one can retain the two capacities at the same time. He who is a subscriber cannot have become an annuitant, and he who is an annuitant must have ceased to be a subscriber.

By the 15th regulation an absolute voidance of the service is indispensably necessary before a subscriber can be entitled to his annuity, and by the 11th regulation a certain payment is required when the annuity is claimed by a subscriber, not by way of continuance of his annual subscriptions, but as a final adjustment of his subscription account "on his quitting the service." The Court themselves caused the 27th regulation to be inserted, which provides that the annuities of the retired servants in England shall be paid through the Company's Treasurer in London, on an order of the Directors; and, to prevent any mistake as to the cases in which these payments shall be made, the Court further required, by the 32d regulation, that notice should be officially and formally given to the Court of Directors by the managers of the Fund in India of the claim made to the annuity by each individual subscriber on his retirement from the service, and of the fact of his having paid his final adjustment money, according to a scale assigned.

Upon these considerations, and upon the further one that no form of resignation, or of the acceptance of such resignation, is not only not laid down, but not even in the remotest manner alluded to, in any of the Company's laws, or in any of the Civil Annuity Fund regulations, it becomes evident that the claim made in India to the retiring annuity, and notified officially to the Court of Directors in England, is considered by all parties as tantamount to a tender of resignation, and that the actual payment of the annuity, by an order of the same Court, implies without question that such tender has been accepted by them.

If this were not so, every payment hitherto made to an annuitant by the treasury of the Company in Leadenhall-street, has been, and continues to be, a gross and fraudulent violation of the regulations which make a previous vacance of the service necessary on his part, and deceives him as to his actual position with the Company; for I call on the Court to declare, not whether their actual practice has ever conveyed any other, but whether it has not always, under the circumstances mentioned, conveyed the identical interpretation of that regulation which is here contended for? Have they ever, I ask, since the establishment of the Fund, received any other tender of resignation than the application for the annuity, coupled with the official notification of the same to themselves? Have they ever signified their acceptance of a resignation in any other way than by the payment of the annuity? Have they ever intimated to the service the necessity of any other, or ever suggested the possibility of a doubt on the subject?

I humbly conceive that I have now established two distinct grounds on which the resolution, which the Court passed for my dismission, should be rescinded. First, that contrary to their own recorded principles, it was founded on a case of suspicion only, and did not result from an investigation, conducted according to the provisions and restrictions of their own laws; so that, inasmuch as I was never properly and duly tried, I was not obnoxious to a penal sentence. Secondly, that such a resolution was inapplicable to the relation in which I stood to them at the time, inasmuch as whatever quibble of law might, under other circumstances, be started in their favour, their own integrity and good faith was, in the present case, pledged to consider all annuitants as no longer in their service.

So much for the moral and judicial grounds on which the resolution itself stands. I now proceed, in the second place, to consider it in connection with the 13th regulation, as leading to the stoppage of my pension, with a view to which result the resolution was evidently passed, as is sufficiently proved by the fact that the Court stopped my annuity before any communication could have been received from the managers of the Fund in India.

In order to show the Court that the 13th regulation, which is made to bear upon me, is utterly inapplicable to my case, I have only to advert to the actual position in which I stood in regard to the Fund at the time the resolution was passed. I had paid up my adjustment money, which finished my dealings with the Fund as a Subscriber. I had been entered on the managers' books in India as an annuitant; as an annuitant I had been received at the India House, and so entered on the official list, published by authority; and as an annuitant for four successive years I had been paid by an order of the Court.

But what are the terms of the regulation of the Fund which is quoted against me? "Any subscriber who may be dismissed from the Honourable Company's Service shall forfeit all right to benefit by the Institution," &c. Now, I call upon the Court to show explicitly how this regulation applies to me? I call upon them to show how and when I ever was in the position of a dismissed subscriber. The Court can no more apply to the annuitant this regulation which, in its terms, is limited to the subscriber, than they can, under another regulation similarly limited, demand of the former the annual contribution which is due only from the latter.

The sum of the matter is this:—I have a vested interest in a certain fund, because it was formed partly by my own annual contributions, and because I furnished these contributions in consideration of a certain future benefit expressly contracted for; namely—a given amount of annuity when my payments should be completed. This future and stipulated benefit can only, by the regulations of the Fund, be defeated by an express contingency, namely, my dismissal from the service whilst a subscriber. I say whilst a subscriber, because the regulations individually and collectively make it imperative that every individual concerned shall have ceased to be a subscriber for one twelvemonth at least, and shall have satisfied a specific claim which the Fund has upon him of parting, before he can be paid as an annuitant, or, in other words, be put into possession of the benefit contracted for. Now this contingency had not occurred when I had fulfilled all the terms of the trust deed; and when, having paid my parting adjustment money, and having for four years actually received my annuity, I had not only ceased to be a subscriber, but, if there is meaning in words, I had finally entered on the benefit of my contract.

When I had thus entered on the final benefit, the contingencies of the contract had inevitably ceased, and as the Court were parties to all these acts, with what pretence of justice or honour can they at this period again call me "a subscriber," attempt again to revive these very contingencies, and, by a kind of ex post facto law, deprive me of the stipulated benefit of which by the express terms and unquestionable intention of the same contract I had been for four years in absolute possession?

The Court which I am addressing I know to be composed of gentlemen of the highest personal honour, and I now beg to be allowed most respectfully to request each individual among them to imagine such a case as mine to have occurred within his own private dealings.

Let him suppose himself, in consequence of having for many years accepted an annual portion of the earnings of his domestic servants, to stand pledged to pay to each of them a stipulated annuity for the rest of their lives. Let him further suppose the payment of these annuities to be, nevertheless, contingent upon two circumstances; the one, that the servant should not have been dismissed his service for misconduct; the other, that on voluntarily quitting it after a given number of years he should further pay down a certain principal sum, which sum, calculated in reference to the gross amount of the whole annual subscriptions of the servant, the master should only be entitled to demand upon this voluntarily dissolution of the contract of service. Would the master, upon some suspicion (however strong), instilled into his mind of the previous misconduct of any one of these servants who had not been dismissed up to the time when he performed all these stipulated acts; would the master, I ask, feel himself, after having received that servant's parting money, and paid his annuity for four years, justified in withholding it for all future time, upon the sole plea that he could, and did now, dismiss him from his service? Will any individual of your Honourable Court rise in his place and say that he himself would, on such a plea, retain in his own pocket the amount of which he thus deprived the annuitant? Would not his conscience demand of him how he could withhold the annuity on the ground that the annuitant had been in his service up to the present date, and at the same time keep possession of that very sum which he was only entitled to receive on the express ground that the service was relinquished, and the man's title to the annuity made good four years ago, when that sum was paid? Is there an individual of your Honourable Court who would stoop to minister to his own benefit, in the face of such a contradiction in terms, and in violation of so plain an agreement.

If there be not one who, in his individual capacity, would hesitate to consider such a course inconsistent with his private honour and integrity, I call upon your Honourable Court, composed as it is of such individuals, to consider what there is in their collective capacity to give them a different view of the principles which should regulate the discharge of their public duties. Does the principle of private honour differ from that of public faith? Is a public body exempted from the sacred ties which bind the conscioncos ond feelings of individuals? Is each man to lay down his own private sense of right the moment he finds himself, and only because he finds himself incorporated with others who may nevertheless be equally imbued in private with similar principles to his own. Or is he at liberty, when he fiods the part which he is called upon to take as a public mao offend the integrity of his private feelings, to shelter himself under the reflection that he is only one among many who commit the act of injustice? If not, if the principles which are to regulate both our public and our private conduct be alike founded upon one comprehensive ond unerring law, I earnestly implore your Honourable Court to carry their high feelings as individuals into the reconsideration of the question, whether, in withholding the peyment of my annuity, they do not, in truth, break the solemn faith they had pledged to me? I was not dismissed when I laid claim to the annuity; I was not dismissed when my claim was officially notified to the Court; I was not dismissed during the whole time I was a subscriber; I was not dismissed when nearly five thousand pounds was accepted from me as a parting payment; I was not dismissed for four years after this claim had been so completely concealed by the Court, that payment was regularly made by them upon it. What then was there to hold the contract in suspension? The terms of it were already satisfied, and, as I have already said, the contingencies, which alone could break it, were long since annulled.

There is now but one point more to urge upon the notice of the Court. It is this:—that even the strongest moral conviction in their own minds that I was guilty of these unproved accusations, would not justify the Court in treating me as if they were proved. The Court have condemned me in secret, upon a case of suspicion only. They have never called on me to rebut any sort of evidence whatever. They have not even gone so far as to pretend that the case against me was backed by testimony worthy of credit. I was once, indeed, before I quitted India, called on by the Governor General to prove the contrary of a mere assertion; and, because I indignantly refused so illegal and unjust a test of innocence, they professed, in their published extract from their despatch on the subject, to take this refusal as a positive acknowledgment of guilt. Against such a deduction I protest; common sense, the interests of society, revolt at it. According to the wise principles of British Jurisprudence, justice is not allowed to strike its victim until his guilt has been proved, according to rules of evidence and forms of Court; divested of such rules and forms the character of justice is lost. Forming, as these do, the only machinery by which the principle itself can work, they become the main security and guarantee for the integrity of it. In all cases, therefore, even those of the strongest suspicion, guilt must be judicially proved before punishment can be awarded. The spirit of our laws, and indeed their letter, enjoins that individual guilt should be rather suffered to escape than that, in order to reach a particular case of it, the flow of justice should be so violently divested, that the image of it should be lost by the disturbance of those pure fountains in which alone it can be reflected.

But in seeking my condemnation, the Court have allowed their own laws to be overlooked; their own forms to be abandoned; they have given an unforeseen and untenable interpretation to the spirit as well as to the letter of an agreement, involving the highest principles of faith between a governing body and their servants. They have entangled themselves in a manifest contradiction in terms, and have been driven to treat the position in which I stood at a given time towards them, as different to that of others whose circumstances were precisely similar to mine.

I submit to the Court, that to persevere in inflicting a penalty on me, which has been awarded under such a violation of justice, of honour, and of good faith, would constitute a public and private wrong, of which they will not, I am sure, be consciously guilty.

In adopting the line of argument which I have taken in this latter, I plead, as a ruined man, for nearly the last remaining provision for a rising family. But I beg it to be understood, that this part of the question has nothing to do with the defence of my character, which lies elsewhere. The grounds which I now urge for the restoration of my property are independent of that on which I defend my innocence. That innocence I have elsewhere established, and my present argument refers entirely to the impropriety of the mode by which the Court have caused so heavy a penalty to be inflicted on me.

This argument is a valid one when urged upon men of honour; and I beg the Court to believe that in stating it I have not wished to say anything offensive to their feelings as individuals, I have urged it in the full conviction that the Court have not seen the matters I have pressed upon their notice in the light and under the bearings in which I have now put them; and though I have been forced to state plainly the various acts of injustice by which I have been made to suffer, yet, so far has it been from my intention to impugn the individual integrity of the members of the Court, that it is to that very integrity that I appeal for the redress of my wrongs, when a reconsideration of my case shall have exhibited the real nature of them. I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, your most obedient humble servant,

SIR,—The Court of Directors of the East India Company have considered your letter, dated the 12th May last, stating the grounds upon which you request the Court to revise their proceedings in your case, and to rescind their resolution dismissing you from the Company's service, by the operation of which you are excluded from the benefits of the Annuity Fund; and I am commanded to inform you, in reply, that the Court decline to depart from the decisions which they have passed on your case. I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

MILITARY PUNISHMENTS.—COL. CHARLES NAPIER IN REPLY TO GENERAL VON GROLLMANN.

SIR,—I have seen in the Times newspaper, of the 9th of June last, a letter* signed V. Grollmann, dated Posen, May 7, 1836. There are a thousand pens far more able than mine which have, no doubt, ere this undertaken the easy task of replying to General Grollmann, but at the same time I may be allowed to say a few words in defence of British discipline when it is in my power, to show that a part of General Grollmann's statement is erroneous. I shall begin by taking a general view of the Prussian officer's letter, dividing it into 22 paragraphs.

In his first and second paragraphs he says, that the honour of the Prussian Army is much injured by the Duke of Wellington's evidence before the commissioners; and he speaks of numbers which refer to returns not within my reach,—these two matters I leave to others.

In his third paragraph he speaks of the tremendous thrashing which the Prussian Army received at Ligny in a sufficiently light manner. An "obstinate struggle" is the term he gives to the signal defeat of 150,000 men. Why, yes, it would be difficult to suppose that such an Army could be defeated without such a struggle; and, after this same struggle, it seems that the Prussian Army went sauntering along, out the dusty high road to Namur, but philandering through "the field paths to Wavre," like idle apprentices taking an evening stroll among the Kennington Gravel-pits. The jaunty gentlemen! no doubt they stopped twenty times to gather posies, in hopes that Buonaparte would come up and give them an excuse to pick a quarrel, and have another "obstinate struggle;" admirable Prussian sang froid, what a narrow escape Napoleon had that they did not take a fighting fit, and return to Ligny! Poor Napoleon! he died at St. Helena, without knowing what a happy escape he had that day.

In his fourth paragraph, Grollmann asks whether the Duke of Wellington, who had been at Waterloo the Army that beat the Prussians at Ligny,—he asks, gaultingly, if this victorious Army could have retreated as scientifically as the Prussians, supposing the English had been defeated as the Prussians were, instead of being victorious as the Prussians were not? Every military man answers yes. For why should not the English troops, who did better than the Prussians in the battle, do as well as the Prussians after the battle? By what means is a battle won? By a good General, good discipline, and good courage. Why was Ligny lost, and why was Waterloo won? Because Wellington was a better General than Blucher, and the British Army better disciplined and more courageous than the Prussian Army. Why, then, should not the British have retreated (had they suffered a defeat) as well, and better, than the Prussians retreated? I repeat, that every military man must answer, that they would have retreated in the same style that they fought, that is to say, with more courage and more science than the Prussians: the chain of reasoning by analogy, from facts, is complete, and cannot be overthrown. In argument, as well as in arms, the Prussians seem to be unfortunate; but, be it remembered, General Grollmann, that if the English Army had been obliged to retreat, it must have done so without that support which the Prussian Army had in its rapid transit from Ligny to Wavre, namely, an unconquered General at the head of an invincible army on their right flank, which circumstance saved the Prussian Army from destruction. The vaunted regularity of the Prussian scientific meanderings through field-paths from Ligny to Wavre was owing to the fierce combat maintained by the British at Quatre Bras. Wellington, with a handful of men, did not flinch or lose one foot of ground till the rout of the Prussian Army warned him that his resistance was no longer of service to his comrade; then, and not till then, did he give ground; and had Blucher been victorious, Wellington would have played the same game for Blucher at Ligny that Blucher did for Wellington at Waterloo. When the rapid army, which "adapts itself to all circumstances," was attacked, the "slow moving" English General was there and in the fight, and saved the rapids; but when the jointed were attacked they were left alone to fight the greatest battle of modern times, without any appearance of the rapids, who arrived to take advantage of, but not to win, the victory. Had Wellington's troops been beaten, the Emperor Napoleon would have destroyed the Prussians; I say destroyed, because I have a right to assume that they, who when they were alone he had always defeated, would have been again defeated; and, under existing circumstances, defeat and destruction were the same; it was one thing for Blucher to retreat with a British Army, fighting unflinchingly upon his right flank at Quatre Bras, and another thing would it have been to retreat before Napoleon from the neighbourhood of Waterloo, with a defeated English Army in retreat towards Brussels upon his proper right and Grouchy, with 40,000 Frenchmen, on his left. The rapids would have preserved their rapidity, and stuck to the "field-paths," that is to say, "short cuts," I have no doubt; what would have become of their boasted discipline I leave the reader to guess. Thus, British valour and Wellington's skill and indomitable firmness in the field of battle twice saved the Prussian Army from destruction, for what would have been its fate after Ligny had not Wellington been at Quatre Bras? Had it not been for the "untoward" customer upon the left of the French Army, Blucher would not have been slowly pursued by the crippled and tortoise-like Grouchy, but have had to abide the terrific stoop of the Imperial Eagle himself, who, with strong beak and rending claws, would have clutched his quarry and scattered its fragments; but fate interposed in the shape of British valour and British discipline. The desperate conflict at Quatre Bras saved the defeated Blucher from destruction. The great combat between the Eagle and the Lion approached, and in the preparation for this awful strife the Prussians escaped. However, General Von Grollmann is not content with telling us that the English Army would be unable to retreat like the retiring Prussians, but, in his fifth paragraph, he adds, that Napoleon was, in consequence of the defeat, unable to retreat, as General Von Grollmann says he ought to have done, that is to say, the Prussian General wishes to show us, first, that the English Army could not boast of such discipline as the Prussian, and then, carried away by the fancied wonders of Prussian tactics under defeat, he settles that Napoleon and French discipline were as inferior to Blucher and his harlequins as he fancied Wellington and the slow English would have proved to be had they been defeated at Waterloo. Let us examine this slightly; we will not be so hard upon the Prussians as to be too searching into the rottenness of their discipline. Napoleon has spent half his life in teaching the Prussians how to retreat (if "practice makes perfect," it must be confessed that Prussians ought to be adepts). therefore, let me ask why Napoleon should not have been able to execute well himself that which he had so well taught Prince Blucher? "But," the reader will exclaim, "Napoleon did retreat, and did not retreat in good order;" granted. But why? For three very sufficient reasons,—first, Grouchy was not where he ought to have been at Waterloo. Second, Napoleon was defeated by the British Army in a battle so tremendous, that the conquerors were unable to pursue; how much more exhausted than must the defeated troops have been? Third, in this state of exhaustion the Prussian Army arrived fresh. French discipline and French courage were able to retreat in any way, for aught that the Prussians could oppose to them; but, on this occasion, their strength had been exhausted in the fight with the English, and it was that, and not Prussian valour, which threw the French Army into confusion. Would the Prussians have retreated from Ligny in good order if at seven in the evening a fresh army had fallen upon them in the "field-paths to Wavre?" No, certainly not.

But is it true that they did retire in such good order to Wavre? "Après la perte de la bataille de Ligny l'armée Prussienne, à moitié détruite et dispersée, fit, dans le plus grand désordre, sa retraite," says the French account, and Mons. Norvins is as worthy of credit as Mons. Grollmann; but whether the retreat to Wavre was good or bad signifies little in this question, because the Prussians were not pursued, and of course there was no excuse for not having retreated well, if they did so, which point I leave to Mons. Norvins and Mons. Grollmann to settle as they can. I by no means intend to cast any reflection on Prussian valour, on the contrary, I am ready to admit that they are tolerable gallant soldiers, but they have been proved inferior to British and French soldiers; they live upon the glory of other times. But with the immortal spirit of Frederick victory departed from the Prussian armies; that they are as well disciplined or better, than the numerous, but inferior, armies of Austria and Russia, is very possible, but when they pretend to compare themselves with the French and English troops in these days, the question does not admit of serious discussion. I repeat that the Prussians' glory was in Frederick, it is still with Frederick—in the grave.

* The letter appeared in the Naval and Military Gazette of the 11th June last.

In his sixth and seveeth paragrepha General Von Grollann admits that many thousand Prussian soldiers rao ear away, unhurt; he says, "this may well cast a slur oon the Prussian disciplioe." He than eoters intn a poliical rotrospect, to prove that it was very natural for these en to fly from the battle,—which no man doubts. Nooe t the congress of Vienna would have expected that men ould fight for a country to which they had been turned er like so many slaves. Using General Von Grollmann's ords, "discipline had not taken root;" no, forsnoth, nen men are thus handed over from one King to aoother, trioliam (which is what tho Prussian General meaos by scipline) does not easily "take root." Men must be ade to take an Interest in the cnuse for which they bear ns before they will fight with vnlour. After all what did ave runaways dn? They took the "field-paths" which d to Westphalia, instead of those leading to Wavre, an roneous direction in the opinion of the Congress, a correct e in the opinion of oll sensible men, who dislike seeing eople made slaves.

In paragraphs 8 and 9, the Geoeral tells us that, after e Battle of Waterloo, the victorious British soldiers, eing exhausted by the fight, the fresh Prussiaos nndertook e pursuit of the routed enemy, in order to "complete e victory." No! the victory was "complete" ere the russian muskets fired n shot in that battle. Thia is, therere, an erroneous statement, given, as I suppose, for the rpose of making it appear that the British had not won e victory till tho Prussians arrived, who, consequently, ed that which waa, till theo, doubtful; an assertion that ither General Von Grollman, or any other man, would enture to make in a direct manner, because the whole facts that battle are before the world, and history will say that Vellington and his army had repulsed the Froneh nrmy eforo the Prussians arrived. The battle was gained. The estruction of the Froneh nrmy was no doubt tho work of e Prussians, but it was not the fruit of their valour—not e fruit of their discipline—not the fruit of their activity, ut the fruit of their freshness!

Another error is, the assertion that the Duke of Wellingon said he could not pursue the French army, because he vanted to restore the discipline of his own. Refreshment is army did want—discipline it did not want; and thereore the Duke could not have said so. The Prussian Comnander had allowed himself to be surprised: this obliged he British General to assemble his army in presence of the nemy, and, after a desperate and successful combat at Quatre Bras, to support the Prussian army. It had fought great battle, unsupported by the defeated Prussian army, which finally arrived at seven o'clock in the evening, fresh or fighting, but too late to participate in the work, which, aving fallen that day entirely on Wellington, his troops ere exhausted. It was the want of discipline, of talents, and f activity in the Prussian Army and its General, that had aused the exhaustion of the British Army; and here let just tribute of admiration be paid to that great Sovereign hose military genius was never more conspicuous than in his campaign. Casting aside prejudice, let us look to the ct, that with his country and his camp filled with traitors o his cause (we will not enter into the question of its justice r injustice), he fell upon two great armies, and having deeated one by surprise, he then attacked the other separately, and was only foiled because that other made a esistance so obstinate, that it may almost be deemed a henomenon in modern warfare; and, finally, because Marshal Grouchy committed no error so gross as at first o appear like treason! No General, and no army in Europe, but the unshaken Wellington and the stubborn rmy that he commanded, would have stood the assault of Napoleon at Waterloo; with any other General the reeat would have been ordered; with any other army it would have begun without orders. The glory of Napoleon, s a great Commander, was not eclipsed by the campaign of Waterloo, it there shone bright and powerful; had Napoleon never made any other campaign, that which terminated his reign would alone have placed him among the greatest Generals; so far as his Military genius was concerned, it was as faultless as it was fatal!

Paragraph 9 is given to the description of the Prussian feats in pursuing the army which had been defeated by the British, Hanoverians, and Brunswickers; the less these feats are discussed the better for the credit of Prussian discipline and morals;—mercy to the vanquished was certainly not among them.

In paragraph 10, General Von Grollmann informs us that the Prussians were obliged to halt a day and a half at Chatillon-sur-Sambre, as they dared not encounter even the defeated Froneh Army without the help of the British Army. This was wise, the French Army would, as usual, have defeated them; it would have been a second edition of Montmirs and of Ligny! He closes this paragraph by asking "which discipline is considered the better—that which adopts only of slowly-ordered movements, or that which adapts itself to all circumstances, and allows of the improvement of every fortunate accident?" we answer in the words of the Poet—

> "He that fights and runs away,
> Will live to fight another day, &c."

and then (after recommending the distich to the Prussian Army for its motto) we ask General Grollmann a question in our turn; where would his "fortunate accidents" have been found for the beaten Prussians to "improve," had not the "slowly-ordered movements" of the British won the victory, and enabled the Prussians to show their faces instead of their heels?

Paragraphs 11, 12, 13, are filled with details of numbers which the Prussian General gives to prove the Duke of Wellington's statement wrong; this discrepancy between the two statements will, no doubt, be explained by those who have access to the returns; in the mean time the public will, unquestionably, confide in the statement of the Duke of Wellington, as coming from much higher authority than that of General Grollmann or any other man.

Paragraph 14 denies the Duke's statement that the Prussians must have retreated in consequence of their undisciplined state; he does not say, however, that the misconduct and cruelty of the Prussians had drawn upon them the indignation of all France, and that, had not peace taken place, the French people, "en masse," would have risen upon the Prussian Army, Napoleonists, Republicans, Bourbonists, all joining in one hurst of execration, and declaring "war to the knife" against this hated army—this justly-hated army.

In paragraph 15 General Von Grollmann tells us that the Prussian Army was without provision or magazine to support it; that it turned out to pillage the countries through which it marched, with nothing but "man and steel, the soldier and his sword;" and he asks if the English Army could subsist under such a state of things. The answer is, yes, and right well, too, while there was anything to plunder, and if it DARED to disgrace itself by pillage and atrocities such as the Prussians committed. Our system is "built" (to use General Von Grollmann's expression) upon not plundering, upon the foundation of honour. What the Prussian system is "built" upon I know not. I saw what their practice was between Waterloo and Paris, it was that of Massena when he retreated from Alurantes. I saw both.

The General goes on to tell us in the substance of paragraphs 16, 17, 18, that the Prussian Army wanted all things that a good General ought to provide, and that Blucher did not provide. That the English HAD all things that a good General ought to provide, and that Wellington did provide. That the Prussians (obliged to help themselves in consequence of being so badly commanded) committed some excesses. All the world knows what some excesses means when 150,000 Prussians help themselves! so I need not shock the humanity of the reader by describing a few that came to my knowledge, or that I saw. I can only beg the reader to recollect that, in this fact, General Grollmann does not prove superior discipline. That the English Army, well provided by the Duke of Wellington's foresight and genius, did not commit some excesses. It dared not commit any excesses, which proves its superior discipline to the Prussians. That the Prussians got first to Paris;—this was very natural. They who live by pillage are unincumbered by magazines, and may well march faster than those who do not pillage, whose discipline is too fine to be disgraced and injured by such conduct. The British General made war on the Emperor Napoleon. The Prussian General made war on the people of France. The one spared, the other ravaged the country; but I leave this to be dealt with by those who have more means than I can command in a foreign country, and who are more capable of replying, answering one sentence only. General Von Grollmann in paragraph 18 asks, "which system of war and discipline then deserves the preference; that which, with scanty and insufficient means, was constantly in marching and fighting condition, ready to take advantage of every lucky accident, and to hinder the enemy, by incessant harassing, from forming again to try once more the fortune of war; or that system which, with every possible want provided for, is still only able to move in established order, and is thereby, even after a splendid victory, hindered from pursuing the advantage already gained, and allows the enemy time to get together again, and cause a renewal of the bloody contest?" I answer that the army which wins the battle is better than that which loses it, against the same enemy.

The Prussians, instead of being at Paris two marches before the British, as General Grollmann asserts that they were, would never have been there at all but for the British! What particular point they would have reached on the shortest cut by "field paths" from Ligny to Berlin, I cannot pretend to say, as I do not know the number of steps permitted which regulates the Prussian pas de retraite; but I conclude it may be averaged at a little faster than the French pas de charge!

[We shall in our next give the conclusion of our gallant and talented Correspondent's letter.—ED.]

MASTING OF THE ALFRED, BARHAM, AND DUBLIN.

SIR,—Your correspondent Tristram has fallen into a great error in recommending to Sir W. Symonds a reduction in the masts of the Alfred, Barham, and Dublin. Three years' experience in one of these ships would induce me to recommend exactly the contrary, viz. to increase the masts to the proper size.

When the Barham was first fitted out in January, 1827, the Navy Board proposed to cut three feet off the masts, and stow her with 220 tons of ballast. Sir John Louis (her than Captain) opposed this, and the Admiral who had commanded the Egyptienne in the war agreed with him, and the ship went to sea with her original masts of a 74 and one hundred tons of ballast. In the three years and a half that she was in commission, she sprung neither lower nor topmast; and, although hove down at Curaçoa, returned to Spithead in June, 1830, not only with the same masts, but with the same rigging.

What were the cases of the Alfred and Dublin I will leave to your correspondent to state: their masts were cut, and they had more ballast than the Barham. But let us follow out that ship. Sir H. Pigot commissioned her, and her masts were reduced. Your correspondent states she sprung her mainmast, and since that she sprung her foremast. Can there be a greater proof than that the reduction of her masts has made her uneasy? During the time she was in the West Indies she was more at sea by one-fifth than while under the command of Sir H. Pigot; beat up three times to Barbadoes from Jamaica, and, besides being once at Halifax, crossed and recrossed the Atlantic.

I will close my letter with giving you a remarkable instance of Naval prejudice. The Admiralty had ordered the Barham to be fitted with chain gammoning by way of experiment, as all the Indiamen, and most merchant ships had used it for many years. It answered most completely and returned in the most perfect order; yet it was removed on her being re-commissioned, and rope substituted.

STATE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

SIR,—In resuming my observations* on the "late Judge Advocate's" letter, permit me to call your attention to another apparent incongruity between his assertions and suggestions. He premises that one cause of the increase of General Courts-Martial is "the diminished powers, which in corps, garrison, and even divisions, are allowed to Commanding Officers in controlling their troops," whereby the means of checking promptly the progress of crime by inflicting summary punishments are greatly circumscribed; and than, with admirable consistency, having shown its baneful effects, he suggests a still more extended application of the principle of curtailing the authority of Commanders-in-Chief of the two minor Presidencies! Not only, mark you, with respect to Military law, but he would have the system of rewards, pay, recruiting, pensions—in short, the entire internal administration of the Indian Army concentrated under "one supreme authority." Leaving the learned gentleman to reconcile this apparent contradiction, I would direct your observations to the following paragraph. He affirms that local Judge Advocates General are the persons "at whose recommendation trials are commonly instituted, formed on charges prepared by themselves on the ex parte evidence furnished by the accusers." Here, Sir, we have many fallacies as allegations. To exemplify this, I would trace a charge through its ordinary stages, by supposing Capt. B. commits some offence: the charge against him, with an explanatory letter, is transmitted by his Commandant to the Garrison or Division Officer, by whom it is forwarded to head-quarters through the Adjutant-General of the superior officer at every intervening stage having the power to call for additional information, or to recommend its adjustment without further reference. When it is resolved to send the case to trial, it is submitted to the Judge Advocate General not to frame an original charge, but simply for the purpose of ascertaining whether it be technically correct, with due specification of date, place, &c. A widely different procedure from the imagination conveyed by the idle assumption that, on accepting this appointment, a man imbibes, ex officio, such a taste for Courts-Martial that, in his avidity to gratify his appetite, he eagerly avails himself of every accusation made by one party against another, without pausing to ascertain the grounds upon which it rests. The foregoing is the ordinary course. Under extraordinary circumstances, and in complicated cases, the facts are laid before him for his opinion; but never until they have been subjected to the inspection of the intermediate authorities and the Commander-in-Chief, unless, perhaps, in the event of a Court of Inquiry having previously investigated the matter; yet even there he acts under the instructions of his superior. The implied complaint that the charges are drawn up on the ex parte evidence of the accuser is a singularly infelicitous remark for "a late Judge Advocate." I should have imagined the veriest tyro in the study of law would have been aware that charges are of necessity formed on ex parte statements: the word itself signifies the imputation of crime preferred by one party against another. It is an axiom of law that a prisoner shall be informed of the full extent of the offence for which he is to be arraigned, and that no testimony of a criminatory tendency is admissible, unless it has strict relation to the terms of the indictment. And how can these rules be more rigidly complied with than by framing the accusation on ex parte evidence? It is an error to suppose a strongly worded charge is unfavourable to a prisoner; on the contrary, it is frequently beneficial to him, malice defeating itself by amplifying the truth, and of course failing to establish the averment. The proceedings before grand juries are purely ex parte; to object, therefore, to the system, is to impugn what has hitherto been considered a privilege of the highest order in British jurisprudence.

Upon another point, likewise, I am constrained to express my dissent from the statement of "a late Judge Advocate." I am not aware of the prevalence of the dark gloom he declares has for some time pervaded the minds of the Indian Army. For the last two or three years of my sojourn in that country, my duties brought me into constant confidential communication with a large portion of the Madras officers of all ranks; and I certainly did not receive any such impression as that with which he is imbued. I should rather suspect the picture has been darkened to his mental vision by viewing it through a false medium, coloured to his own morbid feelings. And my suspicion appears to acquire confirmation from the fact of his ascribing this "dark gloom," in some measure, to such felicitous and ideal causes as "slowness of promotion, reduction, and diminution of superior commands and staff places." Tardiness of promotion is only a partial affect, some regiments being more fortunate than others. Although it is certainly very distressing that men will not die to please their friends, still gravely to assign this as a cause of general gloom is being rather too figurative; and if the writer will advert to his favourite analogy of former days, he will find that we had then Cornets of 14, 15, and even 16 years' standing—a thing now unknown. With regard to the diminution of commands and staff, I cannot reply better than by briefly referring to the evidence of Sir J. Malcolm before the Military Committee of the Commons. He was questioned why "since in 1813 the total force amounted to 199,960 men, and in 1830 to 194,685 men, the staff, which was then 170, should be, in 1830-31, 254?" He replied, "It originated in the different organisation of stations and divisions, and the greater extent of country occupied since 1817-18." Subsequent to this statement having been made, I am not conscious of any material reduction, though, should "the late Judge Advocate's" advice be attended to, three most lucrative appointments (the Judge Advocates General) will be abolished, or at least withheld, from military men; affording another specimen of the lucidness of his logic in first decrying a system, and then advocating its extension.

If the latent elements of discontent do exist in the Indian Army, they are more likely to be called into action by the injudicious obtrusion of the crude, ill-digested opinions of dissatisfied men regarding imaginary evils, than from any thing radically defective in our government. The generality of officers, like the mass of mankind in all countries, will not be at the trouble of thinking for themselves; they yield their judgments in the guidance of a few men of more active mind and turbulent spirit, who assert, and repeat, and reiterate that great cause exists for complaint and dissatisfaction, and the poison thus disseminated will gradually take effect. I am satisfied there is in the Indian Army a fund of good feeling, zeal, and pure and honourable attachment to government, which it will take years to eradicate; but I fear it may be shaken by the present pernicious custom of converting the Indian Journals into channels for vituperation and invective against the authorities, and I trust every opportunity will be seized by the well-disposed to mark their disapprobation of a practice so essentially unmilitary. Sir T. Munro observed, in his minute 22d April, 1822, that the effect of the free press would be, "Every military officer who was dissatisfied with his immediate superior, with the Commander-in-Chief, or with the decision of a Court-Martial, would traduce them in a newspaper." The prophetic accuracy of this opinion appears to be fully verified when we advert to the G. O. of Sir Henry Fane relative to some recent Courts-Martial in Bengal, with extracts from which I shall close my letter. He observes, "I think the example which it affords the army is calculated to lead to much mischief, by showing the junior officers at how small an amount of punishment they may vituperate their superiors, and to what an extent they may attach obloquy to the characters of those who, in the enforcement of discipline, may happen to offend them." "This is the third Court-Martial which has recently been concluded, growing out of the very unsoldierlike, and, as I think, improper proceedings of officers endeavouring to write down the characters of others in the public newspapers."

RELIEFS OF REGIMENTS IN INDIA.

Sir,—We must have an earlier relief than the 50th for the 16th; for, observe, the 21st must go to India before the 50th. What was said in your last No. was too true, I fear. According to the present system, the 4th, in 1837, will relieve the 45th at Madras—the 21st, in 1838, will relieve the 54th at Madras—and the 50th the 16th, in 1839, at Bengal. But this must not be. We must not fancy it possible. You must press the gross injustice of not relieving the 45th, 54th, and 16th, by the 4th and 2d regiments, directly or indirectly, in 1837. In which case the 45th and 54th should be relieved by the direct regiments, and the 16th by the 4th, which will go on to India on the arrival of the head-quarters of the 80th in N. S. Wales; but as they will not embark under six weeks or two months from this time, they cannot relieve the 4th for the next seven months.

THE INCONSTANT.

Sir,—Having no doubt of your willingness to correct any mistake in your Paper, I beg to point out one (page 515) as to the Inconstant. That ship was ordered to be built to carry 25 cwt. 32-pounders on her quarter-deck and forecastle, which are prepared for her; and no change has taken place in the original plan of fitting that ship, except in giving her heavy masts and yards, according to a new classification; this, of course, is against her sailing, but was done to meet the wishes of the Admiralty.

U. S. Club, Aug. 17. A Constant Reader.

[Our Correspondent may be assured that our information was correct:—the ports of the Inconstant have been cut down to receive different and lighter guns than those first intended. The masts and yards of both ships are the new classification and precisely alike, and we do not think Capt. Hayes would approve of a lighter rig for the Inconstant—Ed.]

BARRACK ACCOMMODATION.

Sir,—As I am certain you wish for correct information on Military matters, I send you the following on a subject you alluded to in your last Number:

1. The Barrack-Master here has possession of the North Mess-House, in which there is every accommodation for two regts.

2. The Lieut.-Col. of Engineers has possession of the South Mess-House, which is equally commodious and convenient.

3. The Deputy Barrack-Master (a useless office here, and bestowed on a civilian, ex-M.D., a very worthy and obliging man, who does some of the business, but whose only claim to the appointment is having a brother a War-Office Clerk.) lives in the proper Barrack-Master's house, the stores attached to which are empty.

4. Five Barrack-Serjeants, and a few blankets that ought to be in the store, occupy the Barrack accommodation of one hundred and eighty-eight men.

Summing up, let the Barrack-Masters live in the house built for the Barrack-Masters, and dispense with a useless deputy, by giving a civil appointment. Let the Lieut.-Col. of Engineers go to the Ordnance-Barrack, at Brompton, where there is ample accommodation for him.

HALF-PAY OF PURSERS.

Sir,—His Majesty was, at the commencement of the present year, graciously pleased to direct an increase to the half-pay of Pursers in the Navy, and the Lords of the Admiralty were required to consider and determine what the addition should be, that the half-pay might now equalise with that of other Naval officers, and also, that the increase might be as an adequate compensation for their voluntary relinquishment of 1*s.* 8*d.* to 1*s.* 10*d.* in their issues. And an Admiralty circular has been sent to these officers, acquainting them that one shilling per day had been added to the half-pay of the three classes, to commence from 1st May, but with certain exceptions, and among them are these, viz.—"infirmity, age, or disease, which might incapacitate the officer for active service, and also a residence out of His Majesty's dominions."

I entreat, Sir, in your powerful Journal, the insertion of a few observations to show, notwithstanding His Majesty's gracious intentions, how hardly the Admiralty continue to deal with this class of officers; and, firstly, I commence by stating that half-pay has been ever considered by the legislature as a remuneration for past services, and not as a retaining fee or award, therefore, this exception, which prevents an old officer with a broken constitution having the additional shilling, is illiberal and cruel. Secondly, that all officers, in peace, have the privilege of residing abroad, and therefore this restriction to Pursers is manifestly unjust. Thirdly, that in the next war, when the present sufferers by their inadequate half-pay are deceased, the saving to the country by this difference of 1*s.* 8*d.* to 1*s.* 10*d.* will be infinitely more than the aggregate of the one shilling per day, and that, thus, in equity these officers should have now, for their voluntary relinquishment of profit, more than their Lordships have granted. Fourthly, that by this trifling addition the first class will have now, by deductions, less than 6*s.* per day, and the third less than 4*s.*, seems certainly inadequate to their rank in the service and their grade as gentlemen. I have now, Sir, in conclusion, only to notice a discrepancy in their Lordships circulars (for there have been two). The first stated, that this increase was to commence from 1st May; the second (a recent one), from 1st July, a discrepancy that will cause much disappointment, besides which, the delay appears to have been unnecessarily, for many months have elapsed since the grant for the money.

That their Lordships may yet give the subject a more mature consideration, and by nullifying these objectionable exceptions, and a grant of more than 1*s.* per day, testify that they act up to the spirit of His Majesty's gracious intentions to these officers, is the sincere wish of

THE KENTISH KNOCK.

Sir,—My attention has been drawn, on several occasions during my residency in the Isle of Thanet, to the very dangerous state of a shoal named the Kentish Knock. This sand is distant from the North Foreland 22 miles in a N.E. direction: it extends in a north-easterly direction 8 miles, and is about three miles across in the widest part. The S.W. spit of the sand, which is the shoalest, dries for three or four miles at low water. The N.E. end is very precipitous, and consequently most dangerous; insomuch, that I have known on one or two occasions, when a vessel has gone aground at perhaps 11 at night, the men come ashore about two or three in the morning: a boat being immediately despatched to see if anything could be done to save her, and arriving there four hours afterwards, has been unable to discover a vestige of her, she having fallen over the sand into deep water. Probably the danger might in some measure be remedied by the placing of buoys in proper situations; at present there are only two—one a large buoy, the other a small one (called a wash buoy), which only becomes useful in event of the larger one being destroyed. The light ship on the Galloper is 8 miles distant, and consequently can be of but little use in the weather when sands become most dangerous.

Liston's son is a Lieutenant of the 8th or King's Own—he played Doctor Pangloss and Mr. Ferment: Emery's son, a fine gentlemanly fellow, a magistrate, and county inspector of police, played Zekial Homespun and Tyke, his poor father's favourite characters; Fawcett's son is a collector of customs, he played Dick Dowlass and Lord Avondale. Now is not this a strange coincidence? Emery and Fawcett have visited me, and I have met Liston at the 64th mess. Liston is now home on leave; Emery is going to be married; Fawcett is spliced.—At Antigua I met Pearman, of the English Opera, married to a West Indian lady."

An Awkward Mistake.—At the public dinner which took place at Edinburgh last week, in honour of Campbell the poet, that gentleman, in proposing the health of Professor Wilson, stated that when John Wilson, the ornithologist, went to America, he was mistaken for his namesake the poet, landed amidst the clapping of hands all over New Orleans, and was walking into the interior of the country in great state. But the Americans, on being told by the said John Wilson that he was not the great John Wilson, turned round upon him with great indignation, and were going to tar and feather him.

Theory of Attraction.—Amongst sundry ingenious speculations respecting the cause of the earth's attraction and the various phenomena thereupon appertaining, we may hint at that of a gentleman, whose name we are not at liberty to publish, though it may some day appear avowedly in the scientific world. Mr. —— supposes a magnetic pole revolving within the earth. We are ignorant of the remainder of his theory, and of his mode of working upon this assumption; but he arrived at the following results. Proceeding upon a system entirely original, he found his observations and calculations agree exactly, up to a certain point, with those of the late Dr. Maskelyn; but then came a variation. When Captain Sir Edward Parry was first sent out to the North Pole, Mr. —— made, by the system of which he is the author, such observations and calculations upon and respecting the phenomena of those singular regions, as it clearly appeared to him Capt. P. would, or ought to make. Upon the return of that adventurous navigator, and the publication of his voyage, Mr. —— eagerly perused it, and had the satisfaction of finding that Sir E. P. and himself exactly agreed in their scientific discoveries (each having arrived at the same results by different methods) except on a few points. So confident, however, was Mr. —— as to the correctness of his system, and the product of his abstruse labours, that he immediately noted down what Capt. Sir E. Parry was in error, and was delighted to find, in the next edition of his work, that these errors having been corrected, the observations and calculations of that gentleman now exactly coincided with his own. Mr. ——, we believe, wishes, or wished, hereby to establish that if, up to a certain point, he could prove his own system correct, he held in his hands the means, by pursuing it further, of solving some hitherto unsolved problems respecting attraction, &c.

In commenting upon the Order addressed to His Majesty's 41st Regiment, which we exclusively gave in our last, we trust we shall not be considered to exceed the bounds of criticism, which as impartial journalists it is our duty to exercise respectfully, as well upon the actions of our superiors as upon those of the humblest drum boy. Emanating from the source it does, we should be the last to impugn the justice of the Order, or doubt its expediency; but it has occurred to us, that there must be many Officers in the regiment (and we have authority for saying so) who have been in no way connected with the disgraceful transactions, which gave cause for so sweeping an animadversion from the General Commanding-in-Chief.

We find, upon reference to some Indian returns in our possession, that during the fourteen years which the 41st have served in India, fourteen Courts-Martial have been held upon nine of its Officers, or, in other words, five Officers have been twice and four Officers once tried by Courts-Martial; and, although there may be others in the corps equally deserving of censure, we think that the punishment of their misconduct should be visited on those who have deserved it, and on them alone *.

It must be long ere a regiment can recover from such a censure as that we have been obliged to record, and unless steps be taken to remove those who have been the cause of it, and to appoint in their room Officers of acknowledged credit, we fear it will be very long ere a better class of Officers can be induced to enter a corps so stigmatised.

Doubtless the future Commanding Officer will be endowed with considerable powers, but how much more difficult will he his task if, instead of one or two refractory members, he finds that he has to command many, in league with each other, who, although they may yield a sullen obedience, cannot enter into his views with that zeal and readiness which can alone ensure the maintenance of discipline and good conduct; and here we beg not to be considered to speak harshly of the Officers of the 41st, or to think unkindly towards them; what we have said applies only to such as have by their misconduct brought so heavy a punishment on the whole regiment.

A circumstance, somewhat similar, occurred to a regiment, which shall be nameless, in the year 1811, but instead of allowing those who had brought the disgrace upon it to remain, His Royal Highness the Duke of York removed the whole of them either from the service or to other corps, and thus, by supplying their places with officers of distinction, caused that regiment not only to regain its former rank in the Army, but to obtain a much higher place in their estimation than it ever held before. Something of this sort we trust may be done in order to remove the stain which must otherwise remain indelible for many years, if indeed the leaven be not communicated to those who succeed to the vacancies caused by the usual casualties.

The misconduct of the men is, as we said in our last, another proof of the deleterious effects of protracted service in India, and we do not hesitate again to affirm, that if the returns of crime committed in a regiment, which has been upwards of ten years in India, be collated with those of a regiment which has been stationed any number of years elsewhere, they will bear no comparison. We think it, however, our duty to state, that but one murder and one threat of life has occurred in the 41st during their fourteen years' service in India, and, horrible as it may appear, we know that these crimes have occurred more frequently in other regiments who have served that period in India.

It is not, however, our object to extenuate or defend, knowing as we do by experience that the good or bad conduct of men depends mainly on the vigilance and ability of their officers: we trust ere long to be able to record an Order of a different tenor from that which it became our painful duty last week, from our priority of information, to be the first to publish.

Various reports have been in circulation for this last fortnight respecting the cause of a sickness, apparently contagious, which has broken out on board H.M.S. Minden. It is attributed by some to the poisonous nature of the African teak, of which the ship is built, and others suppose the association of that with oak timber, when she underwent such extensive repairs, has produced a kind of fermentation, which the heat, generated by the crew, has set at work, and thus infected the atmosphere which the men respire between decks. But as doubtless the timber used on both occasions was well seasoned, we cannot suppose that such an effect could be produced.

We incline to the opinion, that it is the horrible stench arising from the coal tar, with which the ship has been freely injected, which has caused the sickness, partaking, as we understand, of nausea, and which a morning paper has designated as sea-sickness, and should it continue to prevail she will doubtless be paid off. This ship, built upon the lines of the Culloden we believe, is badly reported on, as to her sailing qualities, swimming moreover very deep, her lower deck ports barely five feet from the water's edge. We hope soon to see the Minden, and others of the same construction, consigned to the only use they are fit for, namely, receiving hulks; and we trust that the Collingwood and other ships, laid down upon the lines of the Vanguard, will be proceeded upon with all despatch, so that we may as quickly as possible possess a fleet creditable to the nation, instead of mixing up with it such vessels as this and others which would, by their dull sailing, and other comparative defects, retard the operations of our Navy, without materially adding to its strength, being greatly inferior in point of force to the generality of the two-decked ships of our maritime rivals, and therefore unfit to oppose to them in line of battle.

Since the above was written we have heard that orders have been despatched to fumigate the hold of the Minden.

We understand that it is intended to transfer a large part, probably half, of the Madras Cavalry to Bengal, and orders we know have gone out authorising a transfer, but leaving the details and arrangements to the Supreme Government. The occasion, it appears, originated in an application from the Bengal Government to the Home authorities for an increase of Cavalry, required to protect their extended frontiers, especially towards the North West; and the Home authorities considering the Madras Presidency as not requiring eight regiments of Native Cavalry, in consequence of that Presidency having no longer a land frontier to protect, have come to the resolution of making a transfer of four regiments to Bengal. Now, the question will be, how this shall be done in a way to avoid injustice to the parties concerned? In the first place, the Troopers and Native Officers of the Madras Cavalry receive much higher rates of pay than those of Bengal,—are they to be reduced to the Bengal standard of pay, and if so, will they consent to serve there on a reduced allowance? If not, are they to be discharged or pensioned, and the horses and European Officers only transferred? Again, at Madras, Officers commanding regiments of Cavalry have the saddle contract which Officers commanding Troops hold in Bengal;—will compensation be made to the former for the loss which the transfer will occasion to them? Again, how will this arrangement affect the Senior Lieutenant-Colonels of Cavalry in Bengal in promotion and off-reckonings? and how will it effect the prospects of the transferred Officers in the same?

And here we cannot help noticing the very faulty formation of the Court in Leadenhall-street which admits of Officers of the Indian Army becoming Directors of the East India Company while they continue in the Service, as in the instance of Colonel Lushington, and thus legislating for their own interests. This gallant Officer is a Colonel of a regiment of Madras Cavalry, and has not yet become entitled to off-reckonings on the establishment; but should his regiment be one of those transferred to Bengal, he would come more immediately upon the off-reckoning fund, and therefore, is it not clearly his private interest to support this proposal of a transfer?

In the foregoing remarks, as regards Col. Lushington too, we merely wish to show that his position may throw his interests at variance with his duty; not to suppose, however, that he individually would be influenced by this, for we believe him to be a person of high honour, and quite incapable of intentionally acting in opposition to his most conscientions feelings of duty; but it is the general principle which we think objectionable, that any officer should at the same time be master and servant.

The Proprietors of East India Stock should be made aware of these anomalies and objections to Military Officers filling the situations of Directors of the East India Company, and also remaining on the effective strength of the Army, more particularly as there are candidates in the field at this moment, who, if elected Directors, would be exactly in the same position.

We have frequently had occasion to point to the growing evil which the Statesmen of 1814 appear to have overlooked, when they wantonly ceded to France and the United States possession of certain stations on the coast of British North America, for the purpose of erecting the necessary buildings to cure the fish, and also a considerable extent of fishery ground, whereon they were equally privileged with our own subjects. A very short time elapsed ere they not only assumed an absolute and despotic sway over the ceded district, but as might naturally be expected followed our fishermen into prescribed waters, insulting them, and frequently destroying, and even appropriating, their property. Matters have been for many years progressing at this rate, until the audacity of the interlopers has arrived at such a height, as to induce them to make claims and adopt a line of conduct which can no longer be tolerated. The French employ full 10,000 persons in the Newfoundland Fisheries, all under certain restrictions as to services and under bond to return to France should their Navy require them. The Americans, like ourselves, appear to attach little importance to this fishery as a nursery for seamen, for as it is now conducted the principal part of the persons engaged can learn little to qualify them for that employment; but the French and Americans are equally chargeable with encroachment upon our limits, and obstructing our people, and though the ill-judged policy of the Statesmen of 1814 has brought about this evil, we trust that our present Ministers will put an effectual check to it, by directing the Admiral on the station to send a few vessels to break up the establishments which have been formed without permission upon the British territory, and drive these intruders back within their prescribed limits. Should this be neglected, we predict that, like the Channel fishermen, the parties will undertake to right themselves, and the result will be constant quarrelling and bloodshed, until they involve their Governments in the dispute. The coast in question is ours by conquest, as good a right as that by which we hold Quebec, and the encroachments, which many years of apathy have permitted, should now be promptly and effectually checked.

We revert to the subject at present because the daily journals have made the publication of some recent outrages, which have occurred, a handle for attacking our Foreign and Colonial Secretaries, as if complaints of the conduct of the French particularly was a thing of yesterday. Now this is not honest. Ever since the establishment of this journal we have called the attention of successive Governments to the subject, frequently pointing out the evils which a tolerance of the system perpetuates; and the parties have arrived at their present audacity from the long apathy which it seems to have been the practice to observe, not for one or two but for upwards of twenty years.

In again bringing under the notice of the Commander-in-Chief the protracted service of the regiments in India, we can hardly hope to state facts or use arguments which are unknown to his Lordship. It has been candidly admitted by Sir W. Gordon, the Quartermaster-General, that the Infantry regiments serve from eighteen to twenty years in India, and in other countries ten years:—let us also make a statement, as we wish to do, impartially. We have twenty Infantry regiments in India, all of whose effectives, except the recruiting parties, are in that country. We have also four regiments in Australasia, all of whose effectives are abroad, one of which proceeds to India on the arrival of a fifth regiment from England.

Thus, there are twenty-four complete regiments serving abroad for a period of from eighteen to twenty years, without having any effectives, save the recruiting parties of ten or twelve individuals, serving in the United Kingdom. This is in itself a hard lot to which above 20,000 of our soldiers are doomed by the present system, but it is rendered still harder by comparing the lot of the soldier serving in all other foreign stations.

The period of service assigned to all the regiments abroad, except in India and New South Wales, is ten years. Here is about half the length of service which the regiments in India perform. Now, the regiments in the Colonies, as well as those in India, consist of ten companies each; but of every regiment serving in our other Colonies only six of the ten companies serve abroad, each regiment leaving in the United Kingdom four companies; in fact, a small second battalion, called a four-company depot, under one Field Officer, four Captains, and sometimes more than the complement of Subalterns, Serjeants, Corporals, Drummers, and rank and file. Compare with this double advantage of half the length of foreign service, and having four out of ten companies at home, which is enjoyed by all corps serving abroad except in India:—we say, compare with this double advantage the double disadvantage under which Indian regiments labour. They perform twice as great a length of foreign service, and have one Captain, four Serjeants, four Corporals, one Drummer, and six or eight privates, recruiting, all others being in India. Such is the simple statement of the widely different circumstances under which the regiments in India and in our other Colonies are serving. We would not here be supposed to express an objection against the depot system; but we cannot see justice in banishing twenty regiments to India for twenty years, while regiments serving in other countries have the two-fold advantage of half-length of service and four whole Companies at home. The reverse would seem more near justice to our Army: ten years' service for entire regiments, twenty years' service for regiments which leave four Companies out of their ten at home.

All that can be reasonably urged on the score of distance and expense to justify, if pecuniary considerations could justify, such a length of banishment as our Indian regimen's undergo, would equally apply to corps at Ceylon. But what is the fact? The 58th, 61st, 78th, and 90th have only six out of their ten companies in that colony; their several four-company depots being in the United Kingdom. Who will justify this? In Ceylon three-fifths only of each regiment serve, two-fifths remain at home. In India, only a few miles apart from Ceylon, more than nine-tenths of each regiment serve, and one-tenth, never one-fortieth seldom serve at home, even one year out of twenty. This is the grievance of which our regiments on the Continent of India complain. The British soldier asks this boon, and this only,—an equal share of foreign service. We feel how difficult would be the arrangement to effect this; but we also know that an arrangement can easily be made for the relief of regiments in India in fifteen years, nay, even in ten years; but to accomplish this, favouritism to particular corps must cease, and a rigid roster be established. We cannot expect a better class of recruits to enlist when these glaring facts stare every thinking young man in the face. But we will give the train of reasoning we lately heard from a young soldier who purchased his discharge. "If I become a soldier, I shall be banished for twenty years to a baneful climate, for defending my King, my country, and the laws; I shall proceed to India for twenty years of banishment, probably as one of a guard over felons, sentenced to seven years' banishment in a good climate, for breach of the same laws I uphold; and if I live to return after twenty years' exile, I may, if well-conducted, receive sixpence per diem, when the convict I guarded will have been free after seven years, and, if reformed, by settling in New South Wales, become a healthy and wealthy citizen thirteen years before I shall have left India,—for sixpence per diem and a broken constitution! In all but character the convict has the advantage. If, then, character in the Army will not raise my lot above, or equal even to, a time-expired convict's, farewell the Army."

In our paper of the 23d ult. we gave insertion to the two charges preferred against Capt. Raines, of the 77th Foot. We now learn that the Court, in the first instance, found that officer guilty of both charges, and sentenced him to be dismissed the service; but in consequence of testimonials produced as to former conduct, the Court recommended him to the favourable consideration of His Majesty.

The re-assembling of the Court, which we noticed at the time, arose, we understand, out of a merely technical objection taken to the finding on the first charge; an objection which, on a review of the evidence, does not appear to us to be borne out. The Court, therefore, acquitted Captain Raines of this charge, but adhered to their sentence of dismissal.

The King has extended his pardon to Captain Raines with a view to enable him to retire from the service by the sale of his commission.

It is rumoured that Captain Stuart, 67th, will be appointed to the 77th, in the room of Captain Raines, who will be removed to the former corps for the purpose of selling.

Great difficulty is found in raising Recruits in England. The 38th has been compelled to raise men in Ireland. Even the Marines cannot complete their establishment. The fine old soldiers who came in under Wyndham's Act, are not now to be had. What man will enter a service in which he is liable to twenty years' Indian transportation, and hardly a chance of surviving to receive the petty and almost insulting pension of sixpence a day?

The Board of Admiralty leave London to-morrow morning on their annual tour of inspection to the several Dockyards. They first proceed to Portsmouth, where they will be probably occupied the whole of next week in inspecting the different establishments; from thence to Plymouth, where Sir Charles Paget's squadron is ordered to meet them, and in company with which they will probably go to sea for a short distance, and, after visiting Falmouth and Pembroke, return in about three weeks to London.

The report of the Select Committee on Shipwrecks has just been published. It is a very able and comprehensive document, drawn up by Mr. Buckingham, the chairman, and the inquiry appears to have embraced every particular of our Mercantile Maritime Interest, upon the success of which the Royal Navy is so closely dependent. It also suggests various remedies for evils which have long been complained of, into the merits and practicability of which we shall enter at an early opportunity, having no space for such purpose in our columns this week.

The Port Papers have at length been reluctantly obliged to admit the truth, as regards the merits of the ships forming the squadron under Sir Charles Paget; that our statements respecting the superiority of the Vanguard are fully borne out in a detailed account which has appeared in a Plymouth Paper, although nothing is said as to the result of the trials of the 5th and 7th inst., when that ship displayed a still more evident advantage. They now admit that in smooth water and light winds she is a noble man-of-war, but that her qualities in rough weather remain to be tried. Very true; but it appears to us, that if a ship spreading a smaller square of canvas in proportion to the bulk propelled than others in company—in other words, having less motive force exerted in propulsion, nevertheless evinces greater speed, it stands to reason that, when the necessity for reducing that propulsive force to the extent that each ship can bear (in other words, reefing and furling) arises, her superiority will be more manifest still, for this situation will not only bring her to an equality, but give her a decided advantage, owing to her capability of exerting greater motive force, by carrying more sail than ships of a narrower construction. But supposing that she does not excel other ships in point of sailing, but merely equals them, is her extraordinary stability, space for stowage, berthing her crew, room at quarters, to light her long 32-pounders, &c., to be overlooked?

However the breeze has not always been so light as our contemporary asserts; for if so, how comes it that the situation of the ships have, according to his own showing, been reported as follows:—Vanguard 5½ degrees, Pembroke 8 deg., Cornwallis 11 deg., Bellerophon 7½ deg., under single-reefed topsails, top-gallant sails, courses, jib, and spanker, going from 7 to 8 knots? It will be seen that in this situation (when we have heard it positively asserted the Vanguard might have carried royals) the other-guns of some of the ships could not have been kept horizontal, neither could their lower-deck ports have been opened, or the guns have been fought on the lee side; and if this occurred in light or moderate breezes and smooth water, what is to be expected in a rough sea and blowing weather? It has been the practice in the squadron, during the late cruise, to limit the ships to the same sail as the Admiral carried; but of course this will not be insisted on when set trials for superiority take place, otherwise the stability, and any other advantage a ship may possess, are qualities thrown away. All trials, exercises, and evolutions, whether at sea or on shore, should assimilate as nearly as possible to reality: thus, in chasing an enemy's ship, the rule should be, not what quantity of canvas that or any other vessel spread, but what the party chasing could carry with safety to the masts, the object being to attain the end in view by means within the power of the Commander, leaving it to his skill and judgment to bring the capabilities of his ship into play.

This admitted, we shall find that the harder it blows, indeed, whenever the breeze freshens to such an extent as to make it necessary for a competing ship to reduce her canvas to the same limits, taking the number of square yards for tons displacement—the Vanguard will have a greater advantage, being then brought, in the first place, on an equality; and next, by her greater breadth, read at rigging and stability, enabled to carry more sail in proportion to displacement than her rival; and under such circumstances, when she will have a power in reserve—that is, when she has the means to spread more sail, as long as the masts will bear it—will be her most advantageous position, in comparison with those ships which cannot safely do so.

The Hampshire Telegraph, whilst reluctantly conceding that (notwithstanding its previous assertions to the contrary) the Vanguard has hitherto proved a good ship in smooth water, insinuates that her hold is half empty, because 40 tons of iron ballast have been taken out. Now the space occupied by the ballast removed was about 186 cubical feet, or, to speak comparatively, equal to three water tanks containing two tons each, or six tons of water, a space hardly perceptible in the capacious hold of that ship *. But it is our firm conviction that a man-of-war, properly constructed, (particularly a line-of-battle ship,) requires no ballast whatever; and if Sir William Symonds has not already reached this desideratum, he is in a fair way to arrive at it.

In constructing a machine of any other description than a ship, the projector never thinks of adding extraneous matter, particularly weight, to a body intended to be propelled. His object is so to mould the form and arrange the materials as to gain the necessary strength and stability by the judicious application of these alone. We think the principle of ship-building admits of the same deduction, and that, by proportioning the length and breadth, a certain rule may be attained, which shall render any other weight than that contained in the hull, furniture, armament, provisions, and crew of a man-of-war an incumbrance. The weight of the armament, stores, provisions, and crew of the Vanguard probably amounts to 1200 tons, and is not this sufficient, without extraneous and useless matter? If more weight is wanting, let it be in the shape of something that may be turned to profitable account, such as coals for the supply of a steam tender occasionally, or stores and provisions for a foreign garrison or station. However, we firmly believe that, except in merchant ships, which must of course be ballasted when they have no cargo, that substance can be dispensed with under a proper adaptation of a ship's form; and we trust we shall see experiments instituted to prove such to be the case. When this is once attained, the art of ship-building (to which what are pompously designated scientific rules appear to have been always as great an incumbrance as the iron ballast), may be said to have reached perfection.

British Association.—Monday the members are to assemble at Bristol. The council of the Literary and Philosophical Institution, in Park-street, have ordered their rooms to be repaired, &c., and every preperation made for receiving the expected guests. The Marquis of Lansdowne, as president, will receive the visits of his friends at Mr. Moutrie's, in College green, which has been fixed on as a convenient temporary residence for his Lordship. Amongst other subjects of scientific research which will be brought before the association, we see announced an important discovery by Mr. Mullins, M. P. for Kerry, of the establishment of a new locomotive power, in the appropriation of galvanism instead of steam in the propelling of vessels and carriages. The Theatre Royal has been fitted up for the evening assemblies, at which ladies will attend, where an abstract of the proceedings of the day, in the different sections, will be read, and some of the most attractive experiments repeated; the pit of the theatre has been floored over for a promenade, and there will be a daily ordinary at the Horticultural Room, near Park-street, towards which Lord Bathurst has kindly offered to contribute one, and Sir J. Smyth two fat bucks.

Lord Dufferin.—The death of this nobleman took place at his residence at Ballyleidy, on Monday, the 8th instant. His Lordship has left no issue, and is succeeded in his titles and estates by his only brother, the Hon. Hans Blackwood, now Lord Dufferin, whose eldest son, the Honourable Captain Price Blackwood, R.N., is married to the eldest sister of Mrs. Norton.

We regret to record the death of Sir J. D. Erskine, of Torry. This amiable gentleman died suddenly, in London, on Saturday week.—Fife Herald. The demise of this gentleman will, in all probability, give considerable employment to lawyers, and afford ample food to scandal-mongers. Lady Louisa Erskine (now wife to Sir George Murray) gave birth to a daughter (who is still alive) shortly before her divorce, but whose legitimacy is challenged by Capt. Wemyss, M.P., as heir of Sir J. Erskine.—Edinburgh Obs.

Lord Harborough, who recently suffered much from ill-health, is on his annual voyage in his yacht. His Lordship generally resides in great seclusion at his seat, Staplelord, but the lady of his Love is said to have vanished from his hall, no one knows whither.—

Forgery upon the Bank of England.—The Directors have had an investigation into the circumstances connected with the transfer of a large amount of stock under (as alleged) a forged power of attorney. The party implicated is in custody, and acted as an executor or trustee under a will. The amount stated to have been sold out is between 7,000*l*. and 8,000*l*. The details relative to the transaction are the subject of conversation in the City; but as it is said other parties are likely to be implicated, it is unnecessary at present further to allude to them.

The Secretary at War.—Lord Howick and his Lady, after passing a short time at the seat of his father-in-law, Sir J. Copley, at Sprotsborough, Yorkshire, will proceed on a visit to his father, Earl Grey, at Howick.

British Auxiliary Legion.—St. Sebastian, Aug 10.—Yesterday 150 more men belonging to the 6th reg., who had been disarmed and deposited in the castle in consequence of their claiming the right to quit the service at the expiration of the first year, were embarked on board the Reyna Gobernadora for Santander; they will be marched to the Convent of Corban, in the neighbourhood of that city, and placed under the controul of the Spanish authorities until the Government shall have decided upon the matter. On the 9th, which was the day the year expired, about 200 others of the same regiment ceased to do duty—they will also be sent to Santander in a few days. The remainder, consisting of nearly 200, have expressed their willingness to re-engage for another year; they will, in all probability, be drafted into other regiments. Some trifling disturbance took place a few nights ago between the 3d Infantry reg. of the Legion, and the Spanish 2d Light Inf. reg. They were quartered near each other, and the men of the 3d having received some money, many of them got drunk, and then quarrelled with their neighbours. I am sorry to add that on the same day this regiment, on being ordered to proceed to Passages to relieve some other troops, refused to do so; the consequence was that the 4th reg. went in its place.

We learn by the Glasgow steamer, which arrived at Portsmouth on Monday, that the mutineers of the 6th regiment and Lancers were under guard waiting a conveyance to England. The hospitals were crowded with wounded and sick, and the army in a state of great disorganisation, and not to be depended upon. The men brought home in the Glasgow were put on board the Swiftsure to be paid arrears and then discharged.

The agents of the Spanish Government in London are placed in difficulties in a financial point of view, certain bills presented this week not having been duly honoured. In consequence of this event, orders for sending out fresh reinforcements to the British Legion have been discontinued, and the volunteers who were about to proceed to the north of Spain are to be disbanded. Don Carlos has issued an order, dated 7th inst., for the greater part of the individuals, formerly belonging to the British Legion and now in his army, to be sent to France in order to be transported to England.

Passengers and Invalids who arrived at Portsmouth on the 16th, per the Glasgow str. from St. Sebastian: Cols. Finucane, Swan, Fortescue; Capts. Holmes, St. Ledger, Palmer, Bedford, Ogilby, Peirce, Towo, Ximina, Hogarty, M'Dougal; Lieuts. Munns, Wade, Winderbank, Scarf, Desuy; Drs. Crosa, Hornbrook, Vugan, Harris; Messrs. Yardly, Ormona, Mancha, Street, Riddle, Robertson, Tod; Mrs. Ogilby and child. Invalids, 136; women, 9; children, 8; seamen and freemen, 8; servants, 7;—in all, 194. The Glasgow sailed from St. Sebastian the 12th Aug.

The Court.

The King will leave St. James's Palace at half-past one o'clock to-day, and proceed to the House of Lords in state, for the purpose of proroguing the Parliament. The new state harness, which cost 3,500 guineas, will be used on the occasion should the weather prove favourable. About five o'clock their Majesties will take their departure for Windsor Castle, where great preparations have been made for the celebration of the King's birth-day on Monday. A grand dinner will be given at the Palace, to which invitations have been issued on a very extensive scale. Their Majesties on Tuesday intend to be present, with the distinguished visitors, at Egham races; and on Wednesday the King, after reviewing the troops at Windsor, will give a grand dinner to the Officers.

The Duke of Cumberland arrived at Nordeney on Thursday morning, where he landed and remained with his son, Prince George, till the evening, when the Royal Duke re-embarked in the Firebrand steam-packet, and landed at Hamburgh on Friday evening. His Royal Highness slept at Hamburgh, and on Saturday morning left that city to join the Duchess at Berlin.

Their Majesties arrived in town soon after one o'clock yesterday, from Windsor Castle. At two o'clock the King held a Levee, at which the following officers were present:—

Admirals—Sir C. Rowley, Sir T. Hardy, Oliver, Sir T. Rodd, Page. Generals—Sir W. Gordon, Sir W. Lumley, Sir E. Blakeney, Sir R. Donkip, Sir H. Bayly, Earl of Carnwath, Thornton, L'Estrange, Durham, Sir J. Maclean,

* The Vanguard has at present on board 330 tons of water, being nearly 50 tons more than the Bellerophon, and if the tanks and casks on board were all filled she could take 411 tons, besides six months' provisions. In fact, this ship could transport a regiment of soldiers to the Cape, with all their paraphernalia, and still retain provisions enough to victual her crew on the passage home. With precisely the same spread of sail as the Bellerophon the weight to be propelled thereby is about 180 tons more in the Vanguard than in the former ship.—Ed.

Copts. (R.N.) Sir W. Symonds, F.G. Bond. Cols.—Sir J. Reynett, Sir A. Christie, Damer, Sir W. Herries, Wilson, Hon. H. Murray, W. Bell, O'Malley, Lester, Baker, O'Reilly, Lygon, Todd, Meyrick, J. E. Jones. Majors—Greaves, White. Lieuts. (R.N.)—Pearse, Ackerley. Capts.—B. Layard, Baker, M. Biddulph. Lieuts.—Whitmore, Freer, Paget, R.H. Vyse.

The following were presented:—

Lieut.-Col. Lord Brudenell, on his departure for India; Lieut.-Col. Crowder. Officers of the 7th Fusiliers—Lieut.-Col. Ferquharson, Maj. Stuart, Capts. Lord H. F. Chetwynter, Hope, Morshead, Strangways, Norman, Barton, Bowles; Lieutenants Sir W. O'Malley, Yea, Bunyon, Ponsonby, Brandling, Eyre, Mildmay, Kirwan, Hutchinson; Ens. Greenwood; Ens. Fowler, on his appointment to 88th reg.; Lieut. Gilley, on return from foreign services; Lt. White, 31st, on return from India; Cornet Preston, 7th Hussars; Cornet Donovan, 13th Drags.; Ens. Boyle, 48th reg., on appointment; Cort. Mackinnon, 16th Lancers, on appointment; Sub.-Lieut. Lord Earlsfort, 1st Life Gds.; Ens. Bourke, 17th reg.; Ens. Burney, 72d reg.; Capt. Kennedy, R.N., H.M.'s guard-ship Temeraire; Capt. Sir J. Franklin, R.N., to take leave on proceeding to Van Diemen's Land as Lieut.-Gov.; Com. W. S. Smith, on returning from foreign service; Com. Scallon, R.N., on appointment to H.M.'s sloop, Brune; Com. Hon. P. Cury, on going abroad; Capt. Layard, Ceylon Rifle corps, on promotion and return from India; Capt. Orr, 88th reg. on return from the Ionian Isles; Dr. Shean, on appointment to Rl. Fusiliers; Commander Maroonelle, on receiving Third Class of the Guelphic Order, and to take leave on proceeding to Van Diemen's Land; Lieut. Col. Lester, Bombay Artil., on return to India.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 15th August.—The Medical Witnesses Bill was read a third time and passed.—On the House going into committee on the Stannaries Courts Bill, Lord LANGDALE opposed the Bill. The LORD CHANCELLOR and Lord WYNFORD agreed that the Bill was defective in many of its details. The Bill then went through a committee, and various amendments were made in it.—Lord MELBOURNE moved the second reading of the Corporate Property (Ireland) Bill. Lord LYNDHURST would not oppose the second reading, but he proposed in committee to strike out as much of the preamble as declared the existence of abuses, and also to remodel such of the clauses of the Bill as he might find it necessary to alter to meet his objections. Lord HOLLAND said he knew by dire experience what the noble and learned Lord meant when he talked of new-modelling clauses that he did not like. The Bill was read a second time.

TUESDAY, 16th August.—The Slaveowners' Compensation Bill, the Slave Treatise Bill, the Common Fields Inclosure Bill, and the County Elections Poll Bill, were severally read a third time.—The Greek Loan Bill went through committee, and was reported without amendments.—Lord DUNCANNON moved the second reading of the Civil Offices Declaration Bill. The Duke of WELLINGTON moved that the Bill be read a second time that day three months. On a division the Bill was lost.—The Church Temporalities (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.—The House went into committee on the Corporate Property (Ireland) Bill, when Lord LYNDHURST brought forward his amendments, which were agreed to, on the understanding that the discussion on them should be taken on the bringing up of the report.—Their Lordships went into the consideration of the Commons' reasons and amendments on the Prisoners' Counsel Bill, and Lord LYNDHURST moved that their Lordships should adhere to their amendments. The motion was agreed to without a division. . . . .

WEDNESDAY, 17th August.—The Greek Loan Bill, the Small Debts Bill, the Stannaries Courts Bill, and County Elections Polls Bill, were read a third time and passed.—On the report of the Inns and Alehouses Bill being brought up, Lord WHARNCLIFFE moved the omission of the sixth clause, which gave to magistrates the power of determining at what hours these houses should be kept open. Agreed to.—A conference was held with the Commons on the subject of the Prisoners' Council Bill, when the Lords gave in their reasons for adhering to their amendments.—The resolutions on railroads and other roads were agreed to.

THURSDAY, 18th August.—The Pensions Bill, the Coal Trade Bill, and the Inns and Alehouses Bill, were read a third time.—Lord LANGDALE moved that the Common Law Officers Bill be read a second time that day three weeks. Agreed to.—Lord LYNDHURST, in moving for a return of the number of Bills brought forward in both Houses, took the opportunity of defending the policy observed by himself and his party. A long recriminating debate ensued.—The Copyright Bill was committed and reported.—On the motion that the order of the day be read for the House to resolve itself into a committee on the Municipal Elections Bill, Lord LYNDHURST moved, as an amendment, that the order of the day be read that day three weeks. After a short discussion the amendment was carried by a majority of 16.—The Municipal Funds Bill, Municipal Jurisprudence Bill, Municipal Boundaries Bill, and List of Voters Bill, were committed and reported with amendments.—The Corporate Property (Ireland) Bill was reported, and the amendments agreed to.

FRIDAY, 19th August.—Lord LYNDHURST gave judgment in the case of Wharton v. Lord Durham, reversing that of the Court below.—Lord GLENELG presented a petition from Singapore, praying that that port might be continued a free port, and not be made liable to a duty upon their imports, which was about to be imposed on them by the East India Company.—Mr. BERNAL and others, from the Commons, brought up the Prisoners Counsel Bill, stating that they did not persist in their opposition to the Lords' amendments to the Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 15th August.—A new writ was issued for Warwick, in the room of Sir C. Greville, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.—On the motion of Lord MORPETH, the Grand Juries (Ireland) Bill was laid aside, and a new Bill introduced, embodying the amendments made by the Lords.—The Malt Duties Bill was postponed till next session; and the County rates Bill thrown out.—The Poor Laws Loan Bill was read a third time and passed.—In answer to a question from Captain BOLTON, Lord PALMERSTON stated that official accounts had been received of the late movements in Madrid, and of the disembodying of the National Guard. Mr. G. PRICE wished to know whether the British force under Lord John Hay was to remain neutral, or to take part for or against the friends of the Constitution of 1812? Lord PALMERSTON stated, that in any conflict that might arise between the Queen's Government and the Constitutionalists in Spain, the force under Lord John Hay would remain neutral. The squadron was acting in pursuance of the engagements of the quadruple treaty. That treaty has reference to the civil war carrying on between the Queen and her party and Don Carlos and his party, but has no reference whatever to any national divisions between those for the Constitution of 1812 and those for the Queen's Government. The British auxiliaries in Spain are a force in the pay and under the orders of the Spanish Government. Sir John FELEY begged to make an observation, having reference to the position of Gen. EVANS, which he considered rather critical and difficult. An order had been sent for three battalions of Spanish troops at Vittoria, under the command of Gen. Evans, to leave the Legion and return to the army of Cordova, which order was disobeyed. The noble Lord had stated that the Legion from this country was under the orders of the Spanish Government. The Spanish Government thought proper to name Cordova as Com.-in-Chief, and Cordova had given orders for three battalions to rejoin him, after having on a former occasion detached them from his army. He wanted to know how this insubordination was to be accounted for. No answer was made to these observations.—The Pensions Duties Bill was read a third time. On the question that it do pass, Mr. WAGHORN moved the omission of the clause which exempted the pension of the Duke of Marlborough from the payment of the duty imposed on other pensions. Mr. BROTHERTON felt that he should not be doing his duty to his constituents if he did not oppose this clause. He felt satisfied, indeed, that this country never could be happy or prosperous till war was discountenanced, and warriors held in less estimation than at present. After a short discussion the House divided—against the clause, 36; in favour of it, 34; majority against the clause, 2. The Bill was then passed.—The Jewish Civil Disabilities Bill was read a third time and passed.

TUESDAY, 16th August.—The Exchequer Bills Bill, the Copyright Act Bill, the Kingstown Harbour Bill, and the St. Clement's (Oxford) Marriages Bill, were read a third time and passed.—Mr. HUME called the attention of the House to the petition from the House of Assembly of Upper Canada, and after some severe restrictions on the conduct of Sir F. Head, moved, "That the Provincial Government of H. M.'s Province of Upper Canada ought, agreeably to the Act 31 Geo. III., c. 31, and the royal instructions, dated 1818, to be conducted by H.M.'s Lieut.-Governor, by and with the advice and assistance of an Executive Council, composed of men possessed of the public confidence, and whose opinions and policy should be in harmony with the opinions and policy of the people of that province, as declared by the majority of their Representatives in their House of Assembly, by which the contentment, peace, and prosperity of that important province will be increased, and the willing and loyal attachment of its inhabitants to the mother country be best promoted and secured." Sir G. Gipps defended Sir F. Head, and hoped that the Honourable Member would not press his resolution. Mr. HUME consented to withdraw his resolution.—Mr. G. PRICE moved "That the despatch or despatches of Mr. Villiers, announcing the proclamation of the Constitution of 1812 at Malaga, Saragossa, Cadiz, &c., and the recent events at Madrid, be laid on the table of this House." The motion was negatived without a division, but Lord PALMERSTON subsequently agreed to furnish extracts from the despatches. The Lords' amendments on the Medical Witnesses Bill were agreed to.—Mr. RICE said that it was intended to remove the management of the mail-packets from the Post-office department, and give it to the Admiralty.—Mr. HUME begged leave to ask the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER under the belief that the clause which made it impermissible on the proprietors of newspapers to have a separate die had been left out of the Bill, whether it would not be possible for him to give directions to the Stamp office to furnish separate dies to such newspapers as might require them?" Mr. RICE said, he believed the clause had not been omitted; but assuming that it had, it was his intention to give each newspaper a distinctive die.

WEDNESDAY, 17th August.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL stated, that as there was not much business to occupy the attention of the House on to-day, he would move that at its rising it do adjourn over to Friday.—Mr. HUME, on behalf of the Member for Gloucester, gave notice that early next session he should renew his motion for the admission of ladies to the gallery of the House.—Lord J. RUSSELL announced that the whole of the 24 convicts from Hampshire, who had been transported for machine-breaking and riot, had been pardoned, except ten, who were undergoing punishment for offences committed in the colonies.—The Public Works (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.—Sir R. DONKIN presented several returns connected with the Ordnance Department. Mr. HUME said that he had moved for these papers at an early part of the session, for the purpose of having them prepared for the next session, when he would introduce a motion with the view of consolidating the Ordnance Department, and showing the whole expense attendant thereon.

FRIDAY, 19th August.—Mr. Buckingham gave notice of his intention to move certain resolutions relative to the reduction of the interest payable on the national debt early next session.—Mr. HUME presented a petition for an extension of the Rights of the two-penny post. The Lords' amendments to the Stannaries Courts Bill were agreed to.—The Lords' amendments to the Parliament Elections Bill were carried, on a division, by a large majority

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Ministry is dissolved, in consequence of a division created by the question of an intervention. M. Thiers having persevered in considering a direct and immediate intervention as necessary to the government required the adoption of such a determination. He obtained a majority in the Council; but a predominant majority having formally declared itself on the opposite side, the five Ministers who demanded the intervention have resigned.—It is stated that a Congress of the European Powers is about to assemble, to deliberate upon the affairs of Spain.

SPAIN.—"St. Ildefonso, 13th inst., 6 A.M.—A military insurrection has compelled the Queen Regent to accept, at two o'clock this morning, the Constitution of 1812. All is perfectly tranquil here at the present moment. The soldiers have returned to their barracks."

HOLLAND.—His Majesty has decided that every young superior and other Officers serving in this country and who possess the requisite qualifications, shall be transferred to the army in the colonies, and that a number equal to that sent from the mother country to the respective colonies shall return, and, retaining their right of promotion, and enjoying the pay of their respective ranks, shall be à la suite of a corps, and be at the disposal of the Minister of the Colonies, to be employed in such temporary commissions as may be thought necessary for the interests of the Colonial Service. The number of superior and other Officers that remain in this kingdom, on the above footing, shall never exceed twenty-four, among whom there shall be no more than one Colonel, two Lieutenant-Colonels, and eight Majors.

Theatres.

STRAND.—On Monday evening something misnamed a musical burletta was played for the first time. The piece is called Innocent Sins, and it certainly possesses the sin of being innocent of every thing necessary to constitute a burletta. The plot is old, absurd, and uninteresting; the dialogue flat, dull, and unprofitable, without one line of wit. Since writing the above we have been informed the piece will be withdrawn after this evening.

QUEEN'S.—On Monday evening we had a new burlesque at this theatre, from the pen of Mr. Benson Hill, which proved successful. The piece is a burlesque on Knowles's play of William Tell, and the principal points in the original are turned to good account. The scene in which the peasants are compelled to bow to the cap of the tyrant, and that in which Tell shoots at the apple placed on his son's head, are ludicrous in the extreme. The peasants' march round the tyrant's cap to the tune of "All around my Hat," and, as Young Tell says, "a shocking bad hat" it is. Several of the songs, or rather parodies, are very amusing, and pleasantly adapted to the popular airs of the day,—that from Der Freischutz, sung by Conquest, and another from Masaniello, sung by T. Green, are exceedingly droll. Green enacts the mock-heroic Tell with a gravity of humour quite in keeping with the part, his imitations of Macready are capital. The performance of Conquest in the part of the Son is quite a masterpiece of burlesque acting; it is as clever a performance of its kind as we have witnessed for some time past, and quite convulses the audience with laughter. Miss Pincott's Mrs. Tell was very amusing: she dressed the part admirably. The amusing burlette of West Country Wooing continues to increase in favour. Mrs. Waylett's delightful warbling of several west country ballads is indeed a rich treat,—we know not which to praise most, her exquisite singing or perfect acting in this piece. We are soon to have the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Waylett in a fresh set of melodies at this house, as report speaks favourably of a new musical romance, in two acts, by the author of Is She a Woman, which is in preparation here; the music composed and arranged by Mr. A. Lee. We hope soon to see it, something of the kind is much wanted

Literary Notices.

The Despatches of Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington. Compiled by Lieut.-Colonel Gurwood. Vol. VI. John Murray.

IN resuming our notice of this invaluable publication we shall commence with the opinions of the Duke on Promotion in the British Service, and the powers that should be invested in a General commanding a large army, as expressed in a letter to Col. Torrens, Military Secretary at the Horse Guards:—opinions on this matter, from so high an authority, are too important to be overlooked.

"Celorico, 4th August, 1810.

"My dear Torrens,—Captain the Hon. H. Pakenham, of the 95th regiment, has desired me to recommend him again for promotion, which I do most anxiously, as his Commanding Officer; and I really do not believe that there is a more deserving officer of his rank in the King's army. When in office in Ireland, I had already taken an opportunity of mentioning to your predecessor the wish of the Lord Lieutenant that Captain Pakenham should be promoted; and as he had served under my command, and had been wounded at Obidos, I added a communication of my opinion of his merit as an officer, upon which ground alone I now solicit attention to his claims.

"I also think it proper to solicit your attention to a claim of a similar description which I have before frequently urged, both as a General Officer, and on the part of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, viz., that of Captain Lloyd, of the 43d regiment. This officer, always distinguished, has drawn my particular notice by the use of his talents at the advanced posts of the army; and the wound which he received in the affair of the 24th July has rendered his claim to promotion more urgent, if it has not added to its strength.

"I have never been able to understand the principle on which the claims of gentlemen of family, fortune, and influence in the country, to promotion in the army, founded on their military conduct, and character, and services, should be rejected, while the claims of others, not better founded on military pretensions, were invariably attended to. It would be desirable, certainly, that the only claim to promotion should be military merit; but this is a degree of perfection to which the disposal of military patronage has never been, and cannot be, I believe, brought in any military establishment. The Commander-in-Chief must have friends, officers of the staff attached to him, &c., who will press him to promote their friends and relations, all doubtless very meritorious, and no man can at all times resist these applications; but if there is to be any influence in the disposal of military patronage, in aid of military merit, can there be any in our army so legitimate as that of family connexion, fortune, and influence in the country? I acknowledge, therefore, that I have been astonished at seeing Lloyd, with every claim that an officer can have to promotion, still a captain; and others, connected with the officers of the staff, promoted as soon as their time of service had expired.

"While writing upon this subject, I am also tempted to communicate to you my opinion upon another branch of it, viz., the disposal of the patronage of the troops serving on foreign service. In all services, excepting that of Great Britain, and in former times in the service of Great Britain, the Commander-in-Chief of an army employed against the enemy in the field had the power of promoting officers, at least to vacancies occasioned by the service, in the troops under his own command, and in foreign services, the principle is carried so far, as that no person can venture to recommend an officer for promotion belonging to an army employed against the enemy in the field, excepting the Commander of that army.

"It was pretty nearly the case formerly in our own service; and I believe the greater number of the General officers of the higher ranks of the present day were made Lieut.-Colonels by Sir W. Howe, Sir Henry Clinton, Lord Cornwallis, General Burgoyne, Lord Dorchester, &c. But how is it now? The form remains still in some degree the same; that is to say, my secretary keeps the register of the applications, memorials, and regimental recommendations, a trouble which, by-the-by, might as well be saved; but the substance is entirely altered; and I, who command the largest British army that has been employed against the enemy for many years, and who have upon my hands certainly the most extensive and difficult concern that ever was imposed upon any British officer, have not the power of making even a corporal!!! It is impossible that this system can last. It will do very well for trifling expeditions and short services, &c.; but those who are to superintend the discipline, and to excite and regulate the exertions of the officers of the army, during a long continued service, must have the power of rewarding them by the only mode in which they can be rewarded, that is, by promotion.

"It is not known to the army and to strangers, and I am almost ashamed of acknowledging, the small degree (I ought to say nullity) of power of reward which belongs to my situation; and it is really extraordinary that I have got on so well hitherto without it; but the day must come when this system must be altered.

"I do not entertain these opinions, and communicate them to you because there are many officers attached to me in the service for whom I desire promotion. All my aides-de-camp, respecting whom I do feel an interest, have been promoted in their turn in their regiments, or are to be promoted, for carrying home the accounts of victories. The only person, respecting whose promotion I ever interested myself personally, was that of Colin Campbell, which the Duke of York had promised him, in consequence of his having brought home the accounts of two victories at the same time; and the difficulty which I experienced in obtaining his promotion, notwithstanding that promise, is a strong practical proof of the effects of the system to which I have adverted.

"The consequence of the change of the system in respect to me would be only to give me the power of rewarding the services of those who have exerted, or should exert, themselves zealously in the service; and thus to stimulate others to similar exertions.

"Even admitting that the system of promotion by seniority, exploded in other armies, is the best for that of Great Britain, it would still be an advantage that those who become entitled to it should receive it immediately, and from the hand of the person who is obliged to expose them to danger, to enforce discipline, and to call for their exertions. I would also observe that this practice would be entirely consistent with the unvaried usage of the British Navy.

"I admit that it may be urged with truth that a larger view may be taken of the interests of the public, in the mode of promoting officers of the army, than I am capable of taking; and this view may have suggested the expediency of adopting and adhering to the mode now in use; at the same time I must say that the public can have no greater interest than in the conduct and discipline of an army employed against the enemy in the field; and I am thoroughly convinced, that whatever may be the result in my hands, a British army cannot be kept in the field for any length of time, unless the officers composing it have some hope that their exertions will certainly be rewarded by promotion; and that to be abroad on service, and to do their duty with zeal and intelligence, afford prospects of promotion not afforded by the mere presence of an officer with his regiment, and his bearing the King's commission for a certain number of years.

"I have been induced to communicate these opinions to you, from the consideration of the claims of those officers to which I have drawn your attention at the commencement of this letter, from a strong conviction of their truth, and not, I assure you, from any interest I feel in the result. I would not give one pin to have the disposal of every commission in the army. Believe me, &c.

"Lieut.-Col. Torrens. "WELLINGTON."

These opinions did not meet the concurrence of t authorities at the Horse Guards, for, on the 15th Sep 1810, a letter was addressed to Col. Torrens, from whi we extract:—

"In respect to other parts of your letter, I observe fr some expressions which it contains, and the general ten of your observations, that I trod upon tender ground wh I addressed you on the subject to which it relates. T sooner I quit it therefore the better, and I shall confi myself merely to referring you to my letter, in respect the claims of gentlemen of family, fortune, and influen to promotion; from which you will observe that I urg the expediency of attending to their claims to promoti only when their professional merits were at least equal, not superior, to those of others.

"When I wrote to you I had no intention of maki any invidious statement of the advantages which any of individuals had derived from the system of promoti which had been adopted. I adverted to what is genera understood and reported in the army; and as I purpose drop the subject entirely, about the result of which I do n care a pin, I shall not enter into any proof of the truth the statement which I made."

And again, on the 4th October:—

"Let us drop the subject of army promotions altogeth for I assure you I feel no interest in it, excepting wit view to the public good, in which I may be mistaken; a I should be sorry that you believed that I disappro of any thing you have done in your office. My opini went against the system, not against the mode of carryi it on."

From a letter to Mr. Stuart, dated 10th Sept., 18 we take the following animadversions in reference the "temper" evinced by some of the officers of British Army:—

"I have always been accustomed to have the confide and support of the officers of the armies which I have co manded; but, for the first time, whether owing to the position in England, or whether the magnitude of concern is too much for their minds and their nerves, whether I am mistaken, and they are right, I cannot te but there is a system of croaking in the army which highly injurious to the public service, and which I m devise some means of putting an end to, or it will put end to us. Officers have a right to form their own opini upon events and transactions; but officers of high rank situation ought to keep their opinions to themselves: they do not approve of the system of operations of th Commander, they ought to withdraw from the army. A this is the point to which I must bring some, if I shou not find that their own good sense prevents them from go on as they have done lately. Believe me, that if any bo else, knowing what I do, had commanded the army, th would now have been at Lisbon, if not in their ships."

The Letters of Runnymede. John Macrone.

THESE political letters have appeared in The Times, a are attributed to the pen of Mr. D'Israeli, jun. I styles the publication "a volume illustrative of Whi and Whiggism," and his object has been to delinea "not only the present characters and recent exploits the most active of the partizans, but also the essenti and permanent spirit of the party." Avoiding politic we shall not stop to inquire whether the talented writ is correct or not in his views; but we have no doubt the letters will, in their present collected form, be prized Conservatives.

The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club. No. Edited by "Boz." Chapman and Hall.

THIS is fully equal to any of the former Nos. of this ve spirited publication. The scenes of an Election a the "Bagman's Story" are most excellent: we wish w had room for the latter.

PATRONAGE OF GOVERNORS-GENERAL AN COMMANDERS-IN-CHIEF IN INDIA.

I CAN remember the administration of nearly twent and out of that twenty there are only two (say a tithe whom I could conscientiously select as being just merit in the disposal of their patronage, with as little reference to interest merely as can possibly be looked f from any man in power, whose own friends, after a may be as capable of office as any other persons.* The two are Sir Edward Paget and Sir Henry Fane. Th Marquis of Hastings was the very victim of interes

* Indeed, considering the average fitness of officers for t common run of staff appointments, a Commander-in-Chief a a Governor-General can always provide for even their mediocr protegés (by degrees) without detriment to the service, or givi reasonable ground of complaint to the mass. Such places Commissariatships, Assistant Adjutant Generalships (at least times of peace), Fort Adjutantcies, Town Majorships, Paymast ships, Mysore Princeships, and others, require only a steadin of application, frequently the accompaniment of middling cap city, and the every-day portion of plain sense (some of the don't even require that) to insure a satisfactory performance their various duties.

The Royal Family bulf filled his bureau with letters of recommendation; his political connexions were as pressing as Lord Minto's; his very creditors took a sort of commission in that way out of him; and all "broad Scotland" thronged the train of the Marchioness, su that the witty Courtenay Smith, with reference to a certain patronymic, pronounced it to be a Mac-nificent government. Yet I have known Lord Hastings to sometimes burst all these bonds, and reward actual services which were unbacked by interest. Sir Edward Paget assiduously sought out deserving and qualified officers, and paid the least possible attention to what are called recommendations; but he never could bring himself to have a personal interest in the Indian Army, and he trusted too much to heads of departments to recommend (as he meant them to do) the fittest candidates for vacancies in their respective lines, and they, perhaps, too often converted that liberty into a source of patronage for themselves. Lord Combermere had always an eye to home influence for himself, and that feeling gave weight to some introductions; while Lord Dalhousie had enough to do, in his brief career, to comfort the collateral scions of his house! Lord William Bentinck, in his double-dealing capacity of Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief, was partly the slave of home political connexions, and partly given to reward the adepts in local tittle-tattle and intrigue; while Lady William (Heaven pardon her, for the sake of her intentions!) reared a greater crop of hypocrisy in this land—to be sure, if Southey's gadding devil had but extended his visit in that day to Bengal, what a deal of self gratulation he would have found room for making! How he would have licked his anticipating lips! Our local Governors General—the temporary stop-fillers—have all been more or less famous for acting on their public capacities on the basis and prejudices of their previous career, and this is one reason why I have always deprecated the appointment of Governors and Commanders from among ourselves. A good deal may be plausibly said in favour of it, I know, but that one evil counterbalances it all; for it does more to abate zeal and to destroy hope than any other system which a man in power can pursue. If Lord Auckland will only act upon Sir Henry Fane's plan, he will do his employers more real service than if he sanctioned every slap-bang law which is destined to emanate from the teeming (aggregate) head of the legislative council,—a head which, unlike Jupiter's parturient skull, does not appear yet to have generated Wisdom. Comparatively few stuff appointments have so far fallen into the gift of the present Commander-in-Chief, but ex pede Herculem; if we may judge of how they will be disposed of by seeing how regimental appointments are bestowed, we may rest assured that for the situations which demand peculiar qualifications, those only will be selected whom His Excellency believes to be adequate to the duties required. There has probably been no instance in which a regimental staff vacancy has been filled up in mere opposition to the Commanding Officer's recommendation; and I venture to say that if any Commanding Officer recommended any one notoriously less fit than some other whom he had passed over, he would find himself superseded without any demur. One cannot get bold of all these instances; but I have learned one which gave me both confidence and delight. It was the appointment of an officer of a King's corps, in a sister presidency, agreeably to the recommendation of the Commanding Officer, but contrary to the wishes of the local Commander-in-Chief; and it was but the other day that an officer was removed from his Adjutantcy, for alleged unfitness, though he is the nephew of the Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards.* It was spread abroad, too, by laughing rumour, at the time, that the sharp order prohibitory of bows of ribbon by way of uniform, was not elicited by the transgression of any one so humble as a regimental officer;—all of which events may be held as comfortable reflection to the erst desponding souls of the "gentlemen of the line," hitherto too much looked down upon as the mere drudges of the service, though to their unthanked exertions we owe not only the efficiency, but the fidelity of our army.—Englishman.

† The stroke, however, might have been inflicted more gently the youth in question is by no means destitute of ability; but an order like that, to be spread over England as well as India, may damp his energies and blight his hopes for ever.

Lawyer's Notion of Honour.—Sergeant Davy being once called to account on the Western Circuit for disgracing the profession by accepting silver from a client, he replied, "I took silver because I could not get gold; but I took every sixpence the fellow had in the world, and I hope you don't call that disgracing the profession."

Family Members of the Royal Artillery.—There is a family at Woolwich of the name of Hodge, formerly belonging to the Artillery; the father lost his leg in the West Indies, his son lost his two arms and an eye in Halifax, Nat, his grandson, lost his leg in Woolwich, so among these three persons there are but four legs, four arms, and five eyes,

East India Intelligence.

Intelligence from Goomsur.—Ensign Gibbon, 14th N. I., having received information that a sentry who had lately left his post had been cut to pieces, immediately started with 1 Native officer, 1 Huvildar, 2 Nargues, and 29 privates towards Oodiagherry. On reaching it he found the place threatened by large bodies of Khonds, and the officer in charge, fearing to weaken his own post, detained Ensign Gibbon's party till the following day to escort some sick and some of the late Rajah's women to Nowgamm. The advanced Guard was attacked by a large body of Khonds, upon whom they fired, and the rear guard, under a Native officer, becoming panic struck ran up to the front, upon which many threw down their arms and ran for Durgurpursaw. Ensign Gibbon and Lieut. Bromley tried all in their power, but without effect, to prevail on the men to remain. It appears that when they were last seen they were surrounded by Khonds, and were endeavouring to defend the women and themselves, but no sepoy was with them. Ensign Gibbon was the first who fell, and Lieut. Bromley, who had a seized a musket, kept the rebels away for some time, at length his foot slipped and he was sacrificed. The bodies of the two unfortunate officers were brought into camp and buried with military honours side by side. It is a singular coincidence, that they always had a great affection for each other, and were known whilst at Addiscombe under the name of the twin brothers.

Government have now before them all the evidence that has been obtained by Major Alves against the Jeypore conspirators, and unless the change of Governor-General delays judgment sentence must be expected to be speedily pronounced in favour or against Jotaram Houkumchund, Futtey Lall, and we presume the accessory, Futtey Singh.—Englishman, March 30. [Private letters speak of the execution as certain.—Ed.]

By an extraordinary Gazette, dated 28th March, Sir C. J. Metcalfe, Bart, G.C.B., has been appointed Lieut.-Governor of the North Western Provinces, to be ordinarily stationed at Agra, and the Hon. Mr. Ross to return to the Presidency for the purpose of resuming his seat in council, on being relieved by Sir C. Metcalfe.

Letters from Arracan state, that the province is still in a very disturbed state. Three comps. of the 40th N.I. were at Akyab on 8th March, but owing to the nature of the country they anticipated some trouble in restoring the district to order, although the rebels or freebooters were comparatively few in number.

We some time ago alluded to reported rumours of a reduction in the Indian Army having been determined on by the Court of Directors, and of orders to that effect having reached India, and Lord Auckland has been represented as the distinguished instrument to effect the reduction. The Army is, it is rumoured, to be reduced to the extent of thirty regiments; but it is supposed that the reduction will not affect the numerical strength of the army but the number of regiments, that the strength of each surviving regiment will be increased by drafts from the contemplated reduced corps, the officers of which will be supernumeraries and be brought on the effective strength of regiments as vacancies may occur, according to their rank and standing in the service.—Courier, March 18.

The 37th N.I. arrived at Agra on the 15th March. In the evening a sumptuous entertainment was given by the officers of the mess of the 36th reg. The 19th Bengal N.I. has been ordered from Cuttack, to co-operate with the Field Force at Goomsur.

The Canton Register contains a letter from Capt. William Carr, of the Maugles, stating that when under Murray's Island, in the Straits of Torres, some canoes came off to his ship, in one of which was an Englishman who had been wrecked there ten months ago in the Charles Eaton. He was desirous to be taken on board; but when the ship's boat approached his canoe to take him, he dived under the water, and swam to the shore. Capt. Carr afterwards saw an English boy on shore, where he did not land, being apprehensive of violence from the natives. Capt. C. waited the whole of the night following, and till 9 o'clock in the morning, in the hope of some of these white people making their escape, but without success. It is supposed there were nine white people on the Island.—Englishman, April 1.

It is now generally mentioned in the military circles, that head quarters will leave Calcutta at the conclusion of the rains, in order to reach Allahabad by the end of October. It is supposed that Sir Henry Fane has decided upon proceeding up the country thus early in the season, that he may extend his inspection to the large stations to the westward, without encroaching upon the hot weather of 1837. Another report says, that heads of offices, with their establishments, will leave before his Excellency, who will follow in one of the steamers, at a more rapid pace than a fleet of country boats would be able to maintain.—Military Chronicle, March 28.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your politeness in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—Inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals, also those Pains in the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each.

The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose,) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily directed by observing his signature, Anne Thorn, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—Capital, £500,000,

With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5l. each. Deposit, 1l. per Share. The remaining 4l. to be paid in two instalments, namely, 2l. per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro. tem., No. 39, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. Montague.

The object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford in every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be compatible with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5l. per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than ; ½ per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

W. Montague, Secretary.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, pre-rving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, ndering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in rl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

erfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London. Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and o. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to e Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individ-al who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably ave paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively nployed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn ths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three nturies.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed e greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and ost uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of ir. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and rt is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-med beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during e period of three centuries, and has been found unbelievingly ccessful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, ft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some in-tances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair pon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if ot from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will pro-note the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENTS ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, ntain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a rilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, nsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to re Oils sold, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the air, and although an oily substance, the nd is therefore free from the general complaint against every her article in present use for the same purpose, including those ilthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil sub-mitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid ani-al smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform rinciple. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews f the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human air will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface co-vered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious ten-dency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which en-tirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely re-moves the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND

BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first appli-cation, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconveni-ence, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having one on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most pain-ful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in par-ticular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this Solvent to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. EMERN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an ar-ticle not merely ineffacacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.
IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instan-taneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been exten-sively employed in the public and private practice of several French physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable exist-ence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheu-matism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual re-medies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost mi-raculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, dif-ficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by the appointment of Jean Lefay, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries (if by letter, post paid) respecting it, and also show letters received from numerous patients who have benefitted by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London carriage free. Sold in Pots at 4s. 6d. each.

NOTICE.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Govern-ment Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it can-not be genuine.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 30, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 7s., being less than half the price of any other pre-paration of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL

PURIFYING PILLS are established by [illegible] ex-perience, are prescribed by most of the emin[illegible] and Surgeons in London, and are always [illegible] the public Hospitals as the only certain rem[illegible]edy, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of [illegible] in either sex, curing in a few days, by one [illegible], with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their opera[illegible]ude; they do not require the slightest confinement, or [illegible]tion of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not di[illegible] with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordi-nary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scor-butic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of ves-sels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their un-rivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S.
Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c,
Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recom-mend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed; but what I consider their most inva-luable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that haras the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine in repute (with an allowance on taking a dozen at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more re-spectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

COPAIBA ENTIRELY SUPERSEDED

—UNPARALLELED SUCCESS!—The superiority of WRAY'S BALSAMIC PILLS over Copaiba, Cubebs, and every other medicine, in the cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Stricture, Seminal Weakness, Whites, Pains in the Loins, Affections of the Kidneys, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder or Urethra, and all Diseases of the Urinary Passages, become every day more ap-parent, from their extraordinary demand and universal success in all the above complaints; as, since their first introduction to the public, thousands of cases have annually been cured. Within three years, prior to which they had been employed in private practice, in upwards of 1,800 cases (many of them most inveter-rate), and in no one instance found to fail, or to produce those unpleasant symptoms so often experienced while taking mercury, copaiba, cubebs, turpentine, and that mass of medicines resorted to in these complaints. Possessing tonic properties, they agree with the most delicate stomach, strengthen the digestive Organs, increase the appetite, and improve the general health. They require neither confinement nor alteration of diet (except absti-nence from stimulants, where considerable inflammation exists), and, as experience has amply proved, they will effect a cure sooner than copaiba or any other medicine in present use, and may be justly considered the only safe and efficacious remedy in all stages of those disorders. Prepared only by M. O. Wray, No. 118, Holborn hill; and sold Wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, No. 95, Farringdon-street; Butler, No. 4, Cheapside; Sutton and Co., No. 10, Bow Church-yard; and Retail, by Strat-ling, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Sanger, No. 150, Oxford-street, Lowe and Hornblower, No. 47, Blackfriars road, London, and all respectable Patent Medicine Venders in town and country, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each box.—N.B. Be particular to ask for Wray's Balsamic Pills.

25, New Bond-street.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any perma-neetly beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acid of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, with-out inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Sur-gery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most im-proved principles, combined with the utmost moderation of terms.

* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE

SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragoos, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disap-pointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 6, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Surgeons and Co., Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

This Company, from its various plans of accommodation, affords greater facility to parties wishing to insure than any establishment of the kind in London.

1. Premiums may be paid quarterly, half-yearly, or annually.

2. Insurers for Life, and on the regular scale, may leave half the Annual Premium for five years unpaid, at interest, to be deducted eventually from the Policy, or paid off at convenience.

3. The ascending and descending scales apply equally to the opulent and those of limited income and the moderate and judicious rates of this Company well deserve the attention of the public.

Insurances from Parties residing in the Country may be effected by corresponding with the resident Director, EDWARD BOYD, Esq., at the Office, No. 8, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, London; or by application to any of the Agents in the country.

The principles upon which this Company is founded have been adopted after mature consideration, and to the assured it offers the combined advantages of two of the most successful establishments of its kind that have been formed of late years—moderate rates of premium and a large proportion of profits.

To the Proprietors this Company offers a secure and profitable investment, it being the intention, at the expiration of every five years, in addition to interest on the paid-up capital, to apportion to them one-fifth of such profits as may then have been realised.

A general statement of the affairs of the Company will be submitted every five years, and of the profits ascertained to have accrued, after payment of interest, and the necessary expenses, four-fifths will be apportioned among the assured for the whole term of life, of one or more years' standing. This large proportion of profits among the assured will render its advantages nearly equal to those of a Mutual Assurance Society, without any of the liabilities attached to such associations.

Applications for Shares to be made by letter, addressed to the Directors, at their temporary Office, in King William-street, Mansion House, opposite Nicholas-lane; at Sir Claude Scott, Scott, Bart., and Co.'s, Bankers, 1, Cavendish-square; or the Solicitors, 66, Aldermanbury, where Prospectuses can be obtained.

PORTSMOUTH, Aug. 27.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A Board of Admiralty, consisting of the Earl of Minto, Rear Admirals Sir Charles Adam, and Sir William Parker, Captain the Hon. G. Elliot, Charles Wood, Esq., First Secretary, the Surveyor of the Navy, Lord Minto's private Secretary, H. Tuffnel, Esq., and James Meek, Esq., Comptroller of Victualling, are here, having arrived on Sunday evening. They have been actively engaged all the time in inspecting the books, accounts, stores and storehouses of the dock-yard; the Pique, Inconstant, Ajax, Venerable, Imaum, and Victory; gun practice on board the Excellent; mustering the people of the dock-yard, the Police Force, and the crews of the ships in Ordinary; the Clarence Victualling Department, Haslar Hospital, and Marine Barracks; paid an official visit to the Britannia, and hoisted the Admiralty flag on the occasion; received deputations of the inhabitants of Portsea and Portsmouth relative to the two Piers contemplated to be erected, but against which the Board have set their faces; held a public Levee of Naval Officers at the George Hotel, and an infinity of other matters which it is impossible to detail. They have been entertained by the Port-Admiral, Admiral-Superintendent, and Lieut.-Gov. of the Garrison. On Thursday they gave a grand dinner to the Heads of Departments at the George Hotel, and, to-morrow, it is expected they will conclude their labours and depart for Plymouth in the Firebrand steamer, which has been in attendance since Monday. The Arab transport, Lieut. Lyster, arrived on Sunday night; she is last from Newfoundland, having quitted on the 4th August. The Racer, Commander Hope, was standing into St. John's as the Arab came out. The Rainbow was cruising off the Island for the protection of the British fishery, and the Melville's tender daily expected. Arab has on board a number of invalid soldiers, under the command of Lieutenant Smith, some condemned Ordnance stores and emancipated convicts, and has sailed for Sheerness. The Maitland is to bring home the 79th regiment; and two transports were expected at Halifax to embark the head-quarters of the Rifles for a passage to Portsmouth. The Pique was hauled out of the Basin on Wednesday. Firefly steamer, Lieut. Pearse, on her passage from Woolwich to Falmouth, to take the next Malta mail, put in here for a couple of hours on Thursday. Fairlie, with emigrants and settlers for Van Diemen's Land, is at the Motherbank. The new Governor of Hobart Town, Capt. Sir J. Franklin, R.N., and his family, are in the town, and ready to embark when the wind becomes fair. The Eden convict-ship is also at the Motherbank. Ships in Port—Britannia, Victory, Inconstant, Pique, Beacon, Pantaloon, Firebrand, Vulcan revenue steamer.

MILFORD HAVEN, August 24th.—(From our own Correspondent.—Our regatta last week came off uncommonly well, and afforded a degree of amusement, as well as emolument to the labouring classes, fully commensurate with the intention of its promoters. The prizes were all distributed among the working classes, and not given to gentlemen's yachts as is too often the case. The Carysfort will be undocked at Pembroke this evening, the workmen having completed her coppering and ballasting. She will be rigged at one of the moorings, for which purpose [illegible] Walker, and a party of men from Plymouth, are now on board. The Mulgrave arrived while I was writing to you last week. She has since been caulked all above water, and will be taken into dock next week to have her bottom examined, and the stores and timber discharged from the hold of her, which she has brought for the establishment. She will require some fitting internally also for the purpose of a lazarette, which service she is to perform down here. When these are completed, Mr. Walker will transport her from Pembroke-yard, and remove the Gibraltar up to the establishment to be taken to pieces. The Gorgon steam-frigate is rapidly progressing at Pembroke. She is building almost exclusively of teak as regards the frame-work. The Collingwood, too, is in a state of forwardness. The Comet lighter arrived here on Thursday last from Plymouth, to fetch the men, lent from the guardship at that port, to navigate the Mulgrave round. She sailed with the Officers and men on Friday. The Lords of the Admiralty are expected at this port the latter end of next week, on their annual tour of inspection. The Skylark revenue cutter being on shore here, we have no cruiser on the coast available for the prevention of smuggling. No orders have yet reached us respecting the removal of the packets from Hobbs' Point, although everything there is ready for their reception. Our Agent has taken possession of his house up there. There is a large Prussian ship, the Maria, from Dantzic, now beating up to the dock-yard, with wood oak, plank-deals, &c., for that arsenal. Half-past 1 P.M.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, August 26th.—(From our own Correspondent.—The Lightning st.-vt. has towed up the Unite, 42, depot-ship, from Chatham; she was hauled into the basin, and is to be fitted for a hospital-ship in place of the Narcissus, 32, convict hospital-ship, lying in the arsenal. The Sovereign transport, Lieut. Brady, is discharging Naval stores on board the Salurie [illegible]. The Blazer st.-v. has been taken out of dock, and Echo s. put in. Alban st.-v. is having new wheels. Rhadamanthus will be shortly ready for service; she has 12 guns on board which are on slides, one 84-pounder and two 32-pounders midships, and an 18-pounder on her forecastle. The Captain-Superintendent has had two lights cut in her stern, by which ventilation can be increased to a very beneficial extent. The Columbia troop st.-v., Master Commander J. Henderson, has arrived here and gone into the basin; it is expected she will be re-fitted. The Civil Engineers have resumed their work. The Mate, Macdonald, 2d Master, Mr. Clerk Pettigrew, of the Alban st.-v. have been discharged from His Majesty's Service. Firefly st.-v. has hauled out of the basin into the river. The Right Honourable Lord Granville, attended by a Guard of Honour from the Royal Marines, embarked on board the Lightning Admiralty st.-yt., Lieut. Shambler, on Thursday last for Paris, vio Calais. Ships in Port:—William and Mary, Capt. Sir Samuel Warren, C.B., K.C.H.; Firefly st.-v., Lieut. J. Pearse; Blazer st.-v. In Dock:—Excellent st.-v. In Basin:—Columbia troop st.-v., Master Commander J. Henderson, Confiance, Rhadamanthus, Flamer, Alban, Lieut. Tinling, Messenger st. tr., Mr. King, and Unite, 42.

PLYMOUTH, Aug. 26.—The Minden, 74, Capt. A. Sharpe, is not coming into harbour as was reported, but those of the crew who were sick have been removed on board the Comus, which after being paid off on Monday was towed into the Sound on Tuesday by the Pluto steamer for that purpose. Diligence tr. and Falmouth lighter are loading with dock-yard, victualling, and ordnance stores, for the squadron on the N. Coast of Spain, to which place they will be accompanied by the Pluto steamer. Madagascar, 46, Capt. Sir J. Peyton, arrived here on Monday from Portsmouth, and will proceed to Jamaica with the Gala (coal depot ship) as soon as she is ready. Madagascar takes out as passengers to join the Melville (flag-ship) Dr. Sloane, Assist.-Surg., and Lieuts. Thos. Stephens and Baskerville. Madagascar is destined to relieve the Forte frigate, bearing Commodore Poll's broad pendant, whose period of service has expired. The Impregnable, 106, is ordered to be dismantled, and placed as other ships in Ordinary; Mr. Dennisoo, Master, to return to half-pay. Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Russel, Fly, Scorpion, Hope, Magnet, Sheldrake, Falmouth, &c. In Basin pool—Phœnix steam-vessel. In the Sound—Minden, Madagascar.

CAVALRY.

2d Life Guards—On Monday His Majesty gave a diener of roast beef and plum-pudding to the non-commissioned Officers, privates, and their families. The dinner took place in the riding-school, which was tastefully decorated with devices in laurel, stars (composed of swords, pistols, and carbines), banners, and various clusters of armour. In the centre of the building, on a crimson pedestal, surmounted with swords and banners, were displayed the splendid silver kettle-drums presented by the King to the regt.; and, extending along the whole range of the apartment, was written, in laurel and oak leaves, the motto, "Long live our King and Queen." Triumphal arches, composed of evergreens, and ornamented with cuirasses and helmets, were erected on the line leading from the entrance of the barracks to the riding-school. After diener the King's health was drunk with the utmost enthusiasm, and the greatest order and conviviality universally prevailed amongst the men throughout the day.

13th Lt. Drags.—Capt. Knox, who recently exchanged from the 60th, has arrived at Falmouth from the Mediterranean.

15th Hussars—Capt. Hickman's tr. has arrived at Kilkenny from Newbridge.

INFANTRY.

3d—The foreign service of regs. is usually dated, we believe, from the embarkation of the colours, and on that account the gallant batts. are generally set down as having embarked in 1823, though nearly the whole of the reg. embarked in 1822 from Chatham.

7th—will relieve the 48th reg. Hd.-qrs., two cos., Bolton; two, Blackburn; two, Wigan; one, Haydock; one, Rochdale; two, Weedon.

11th depot—1 Serj. and 12 r. and f., from Waterford to Duncannon Fort on 24th inst., there to be stationed, relieving one non-comm. Off. and 10 men of the Rl. Art., ordered to Rocky Island.

20th.—It is feared that this regiment will not arrive from Bombay this year, as the 17th, which left N. S. Wales last March, may not reach India in time to permit of the volunteering of the 20th and their marching from Belgaum to the coast before the setting in of the monsoon. Unless the 20th was embarked in May last, it must be still in India, for the coast is not safe for shipping before October. In this case we cannot expect the regiment home before Spring. Col. Thomas C. B., M. P. for Mallow; Majors Taylor and Fraser, Captains Bolton, Croad and Cavendish, Lieuts. Day, Creagh and Fraser, and Ensign Sharpe are in England, awaiting the arrival of Head Quarters. The Depot is stationed at Tilbury Fort, under Capt. Croad.

23d—are under orders for Ireland, and will be succeeded at Manchester by the 48th.

34th depot—Maj. Greeves having left the Pigeon-house Fort, Dublin, for England, on leave of absence, the command has devolved upon Capt. Cooolly.

49th—Col. Daniell, commanding the Garrison of Fort William, proceeds to England in the Catherine.

67th.—Sir L. Greenwell on Tuesday inspected this Depot at Sheerness. Never complimentary, though oftee commendatory, we did not hear him express any opinion on the state of this Depot. Perhaps he expected something beyond mediocrity from the Adjutant General's regiment.

77th—It will be seen, by the Gazette of last night, that we anticipated in our last No. the appointment of B. Maj. Stewart to this corps, vice Capt. Raines. We hope, for the credit of this gallant regiment, that harmony is now re-established; if not, we shall further anticipate certain removals. The discipline of the army requires that there should be no trifling.

80th—The hd.-qrs. will embark for New South Wales next month.

82d—Lieut. Watson has joined Capt. Greene's comp. at Carlow.

87th depot—sailed from Chatham in small craft for Sheerness, where it embarked on board the Athol for Cork yesterday week. It was accompanied by a crowd of respectable persons to the Dock-yard gate, who expressed their regret at its departure. Both officers and men were general favourites in the town and garrison.

89th depot—1 comp. and 40 men from Omagh to Lifford on 19th.

93d depot—1 comp. from Lifford to Londonderry on 19th inst.

95th—1 Off., 2 Serjts., and 30 r. and f., from Birr to Roscrea, 22d and 23d inst.

Royal Newfoundland Vet. Cos.—A small detachment, consisting of 1 Serj. and 19 r. and f., under charge of Ens. Thomas, 10th Foot, arrived at Chatham on Thursday for embarkation.

Rifle Brigade, 1st batt.—The Service cos. will proceed to Chatham on their landing from America. The depot is ordered there to await head-quarters.

Royal Artillery, Woolwich.—A regimental parade of the Horse Artillery field battery comps. and batts. took place on Monday last, to witness the expulsion from the corps of Gunner Appleyard, of the 8th batt. The prisoner, who had to pass through this disgraceful ordeal, had been found guilty, by a general Court-Martial, of repeated acts of theft, and had been sentenced to 90 days hard labour, and then to be drummed out of the regt.; the first part of his sentence he had undergone, and the parade was now formed for the purpose of his exit, with every mark of degradation. The Commandant Major-Gen., Sir J. Maclean, attended by his Staff, having arrived, and the brigade being drawn up in two lines facing inwards, the prisoner was brought out under charge of an escort, the A. D. A. General, Lieut.-Col. Jones, read his crimes and sentence at three several parts of the parade, the fifes and drums preceding the culprit beating the "Rogue's March." Having arrived at the end of the parade, Sir J. Maclean ordered him again to be conducted through the ranks, and he was then marched over the barrack-field to the park-guard gate, where his discharge was handed to him. The delinquent then took off his cap and collected some money from the crowd assembled, and turning to the Officers said, "Look here, Brigade-Major, this is more than you would give me." He then went round to another gate, but the sentry refused to let him pass, and he then "went his way," a disgraced wanderer. The mortar and howitzer practice on Monday and Tuesday, at both high and low angle, was very good; on the latter day the staff was "cut in twain" by a howitzer round shot. The Bazaar, for the benefit of the wives and children of Artillery-men gone abroad, held on Thursday at Woolwich, was attended by upwards of 500 persons. Nearly seventy pounds was the result of the exertion of the fair contributors. The tables were kept by the daughters of Maj.-Gen. Sir Joseph Maclean and his Lady, who were present, the daughters of Sir Samuel Warren, and Miss Glubb, Mrs. Sprowle, and many other Ladies connected with the garrison. A party of Artillery pitched a marquee, in which refreshments were provided by Mrs. Dixon, daughter of the late General Dixon, whose exertions have been unremitting in furtherance of this most humane object. Captain Robe and Lieut. Grant superintended the arrangements; and it was gratifying to observe the zeal of the Royal Artillery band on this occasion by a full muster, and performing many splendid pieces of music, which called forth the loudest approbation. The entrance-money was taken by the Serjeant Librarian of the corps; and the marked attention of the privates who attended, evinced a true sense of their feeling in behalf of those who might receive the benefit intended. The whole affair went off with great spirit, as there was a strong muster of Naval and Military Officers.

The Ordnance Survey of Ireland is now advanced within five miles of Galway.

There were four regiments added to the King's Army in India in consequence of the war with Burmah. On the close of that war a reduction of one company took place, for previously the regiments in India had 11 Captains, one of whom was at the depot. The reduction then made reduced the total to the original number of men, but the number of regiments was increased by four. We would gladly see these 4 regiments ordered home, and the remaining corps recruited to their former establishment of 1000 men.

The number of troops in India, according to the estimates for this year, are, 1116 Officers, 1316 N. C. Officers, Trumpeters, and Drummers, and 17,268 rank and file. Total, in India, 19,720 British soldiers. The charge for this force is paid by the East India Company, and amounts to 691,133*l.* 2*s.* 5*d.* Of this force 2,604 are Cavalry, and form four regiments; the remaining 16,916 are Infantry, and are formed into 20 regiments. In addition to the charge for this force the Hon. John Company pays to Mr. John Bull 60,000*l.* per annum on account of pensions for soldiers from India. We have reason to think that John Bull has got a bad bargain, and that he is complaining of it sadly.

Major Blanchard's Pontoons have been approved of, and an order has been sent to call the ones constructed by Col. Pasley. In this decision every military man coincides who may not be warped in opinion by private friendship for a zealous and devoted, though sometimes mistaken, officer. Col. Pasley will not be offended by our saying that he is the best of all military schoolmasters, whether abroad or at home. We always approved of him, except as a Pontooner.

The Aides-de-Camp to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland are henceforth to be nominated in a different manner. No Officer under the rank of Captain can be appointed, and must have served abroad with his corps for a certain space of time. At the expiration of the Lord Lieutenant's period of service, he will be allowed to recommend so many of these Captains for a step in rank.

Household Infantry.—The following orders were given Thursday issued from the Commander-in-Chief's office, for the battalions of the Household Infantry, it being the half-yearly change of quarters, to commence on Monday morning next:—The 1st batt. of Grenadier Guards will march from Westminster quarters to the Wellington new barracks, St. James's Park. 2nd batt. from Wellington barracks to St. John's Wood barracks, Regent's Park. 3rd batt. from Portman-street barracks to Windsor barracks. The 2nd batt. of Coldstream Guards from the Tower to Westminster quarters. The 1st batt. R. Scotch Fusilier Guards from the New Infantry barracks, St. John's Wood, to Portman-street barracks. 2nd batt. from St. George's barracks, Chatingcross to the Tower. The 7th Fusiliers from Windsor to Weedon barracks, Northamptonshire.

Lord Hill is expected to visit the principal stations in the course of next month, for the early part of October.

The estimated expense of the convict service this year is 106,600*l.*, which is above that of last year.

We find that the Limerick Chronicle is smarting under our exposure of its continual pilferings from our columns without acknowledgment. Last week it copied from the Lord Hill's order respecting the 41st, praised it, and by way of "intelligence" extracted from the Army List the names of all the Officers.—Our comments upon the Order have now made it change its tone, and 'we have the following morceau. "Some of the Officers of the 41st regiment will be obliged to follow their Lieut.-Colonels, and sell out or retire on half-pay, while more are to be drafted into other corps." The remainder of the paragraph it will be at once seen is compiled from our article on this subject. "The very unpleasant dilemma of the 41st is something similar to the 85th, about five-and-twenty years gone, but among officers or privates the disorganization of the 41st appears not so bad as the 85th, which was then newly officered and appointed by the Duke of York. The salutary effect was instantaneous, and the 85th has since borne the character of one of the first regiments in the service, his Majesty's first and principal Aide-de-camp the Colonel of it. In many cases long service in India will be found to deteriorate the discipline of our army." Unless the Limerick acts more honestly, we shall devote a career each week to the enumeration of its pilferings. We could now specify a dozen articles in this day's paper that will be extracted by the Limerick.

New Pay and Pension Warrant.—William R. Whereas it has been represented to Us that it would materially tend to the encouragement of good conduct in the Army, if a reward, to be attained only by the well-conducted soldier, were substituted for the additional pay now granted to soldiers who have completed certain periods of service: Our Will and Pleasure is, that all soldiers who shall enlist into Our Service on or after the 1st day of September 1836, shall have no claim to additional pay after any period of service, but that a reward of additional pay for good conduct shall be granted to such soldiers under the following rules:—

1. Soldiers who shall have completed seven years service shall be entitled to claim 1*d.* a-day, and to wear a ring of lace round the right arm, provided their name shall not have been entered in the Regimental Defaulter Book for at least two years immediately preceding any claim.

2. Soldiers who shall have completed 14 years' service shall be entitled to claim a further reward of 1*d.* a-day and to wear two rings of lace round the right arm, provided they shall have been uninterruptedly in the enjoyment of the 1*d.* a-day for at least two years immediately preceding such further claim.

3. Soldiers who shall have completed 21 years' service shall be entitled to claim a further reward of 1*d.* a-day, and to wear three rings of lace round the right arm, provided they shall have been uninterruptedly in the enjoyment of the 2*d.* a-day for two years immediately preceding their claim to the third penny.

4. Soldiers who by their good conduct shall have obtained the distinction of one or more rings shall be entitled to have the full rate of that good conduct pay, of which they shall have been in uninterrupted possession for five years immediately preceding their discharge, added to the rate of pension, whether temporary or permanent, to which they may have a right under the provisions of Our Warrant of the 7th February 1833.

5. Soldiers who have been in the possession of some rate or other of the rates of good conduct pay for five years uninterruptedly, but who have only been in possession of either of the higher rates for some period not less than two years immediately preceding their discharge, shall be entitled if discharged with two rings, to an addition of 1½*d.*, and if discharged with three rings, to an addition of 2½*d.*, as an augmentation of the pension to which their services may entitle them.

6. Soldiers who shall have been in the uninterrupted possession of good conduct pay for at least three years immediately preceding their discharge for disability, or reduction, and who shall not have acquired claims to pension, or who shall be entitled only to temporary or conditionel pensions, shall have their names registered at Chelsea Hospitel; and upon their attaining 60 years of age, shall receive, as a reward for their former good conduct, a pension of 4*d.* a-day if discharged with one ring, and of 6*d.* a-day if discharged after having been twelve months in possession of two rings; and this reward for former good conduct shall also be extended to soldiers who may be permitted to obtain free discharge at their own request, as an indulgence, after certain periods of service, as described in the 10th article of this Warrant.

7. All soldiers now in Our Service who enlisted since the 1st March 1833, shall have the option of relinquishing all right to the additional pay of 2*d.* a day to which they are now entitled after the completion of 14 years' infantry, or of 17 years' cavalry service, and shall then be entitled, by their good conduct, to claim the 1*d.* a-day after seven years' service, and shall be, in all respects, entitled to all the advantages both of good conduct pay while serving, of pension on discharge, and of deferred pension, which are hereby granted to soldiers hencelorward enlisting.

8. All soldiers now serving who enlisted on or before the 1st March 1833, shall, by relinquishing their right to additional pay for length of service, be entitled to claim all the advantages of good conduct pay while serving, which are hereby granted; but as the Warrants which were in force at the time of their original enlistment give them a right to higher rates of pension on discharge than those which are to be granted to men enlisted after the 1st March 1833, they will not be entitled to have their good conduct pay added to their pensions on discharge.

9. In special cases, however, of men enlisted on or before the 1st March 1833, who, by their good conduct, have obtained the distinction of one or more rings, and who, after short service, may be discharged for disabilities or by reduction either without pension, or with temporary, or conditional, or permanent pensions, (not exceeding those granted for similar disabilities and services under Our Warrant of the 7th February 1833,) the good conduct pay may, by the consent of Our Secretary at War, be added to their pensions; and such men, if not placed upon permanent pensions, may be registered at Chelsea for the deferred pension under the same rules as the men enlisted after the 1st March 1833.

10. Soldiers who shall have obtained the distinction of one or more rings, and who may be permitted to purchase or to obtain free discharge at their own request, shall be allowed free discharges upon the following terms, instead of those prescribed by the Warrant of Our late Royal Brother of the 14th November 1829, and by Our Warrant of the 7th February 1833; but the conditions, limitations, and regulations for granting discharges by indulgence, laid down in the said Warrants, shall, in the cases of all other soldiers, remain in full force:—

| | Cavalry. | Infantry. |
|---|---|---|
| Under 6 years' service | £30 | £20 |
| After 6 years' service, and with 2 years' absence from the Defaulters' Book | 25 | 15 |
| After 7 years, with one ring | 20 | 15 |
| After 10 „ do. | 15 | 10 |
| After 12 „ do. | 10 | 5 |
| After 14 „ do. | 5 | Free |
| After 16 years, with one ring | Free, with the right of registry for deferred pension of 4*d.* a-day. | |
| After 16 years, with two rings, having possessed the second at least 12 months | Free, with the right of registry for deferred pension of 6*d.* a-day. | |

11. Soldiers enlisted since the 1st March, 1833, who are in the enjoyment of two or of three rings, and of the good conduct pay, may obtain permanent pension as an indulgence, at the rate fixed in the Warrant of 7th February, 1833, two years earlier than other men who have not earned this distinction, and may further receive the same amount of good conduct pay, which would have been added to their ordinary pension, under the rules laid down in this Warrant, if they had been discharged as unfit for further service or by reduction.]

12. As it is Our Will and Pleasure that this reward shall be strictly an honourable distinction, to be conferred only upon the well-conducted soldier, the Commanding Officers of Regiments are strictly enjoined to enter in the Regimental Defaulters' Book the name of every soldier who, in consequence of any misconduct whatever, shall have been confined in the guard-house, or subjected to any punishment; and the commission of every offence, which shall impose upon the Commanding Officer the necessity of recording the soldier's name in the Regimental Defaulters' Book, shall render the man ineligible for this reward for two years from that date, and if he be already in possession of this distinction shall deprive him of his ring and good conduct pay for one year; and a second recorded offence within twelve months shall render two years of uninterrupted good conduct necessary to obtain a restoration of such reward.

13. The soldier having two or three rings shall (in like manner for the first and second recorded offences forfeit one ring, and the good conduct pay allowed with it for one year for each offence; and if a third offence be recorded against him in the Regimental Defaulters' Book within twelve months, he shall forfeit all claim in consequence of his previous good conduct, and shall only be entitled to obtain a restoration of his honourable distinctions by subsequently serving with uninterrupted good conduct for two years to obtain one ring, and four years to obtain two rings, and for six years to obtain three rings.

14. Any soldier who by having been recorded in the Regimental Defaulters' Book shall have been adjudged to have been guilty of an offence by which he is to forfeit the whole or a part of his reward for previous good conduct, shall, if he denies the commission of such offence, have the right of appeal to a Court-Martial.

15. A soldier may, for a first offence of a serious nature, be adjudged, by the sentence of a Court-Martial, to forfeit all or any part of the advantages he had derived from his previous good conduct, either absolutely or for a longer or shorter period, according to the circumstances which shall have appeared in evidence.

16. The distinction and the rewards granted by this Warrant will be extended to Corporals and Drummers, both as regards pay and pension, but Serjeants and other Non-commissioned Officers will not be allowed, while serving, any addition to their established pay, but on their discharge they may, for peculiarly good conduct, on the special recommendation of Our General Commanding-in-Chief, and by the consent of Our Secretary-at-War, communicated to the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, be allowed additions of 1*d.*, 2*d.*, or 3*d.* a-day to their pensions; provided that the aggregate pension shall in no case exceed for a Serjeant 1*s.* 10*d.*, for a Quartermaster Serjeant 2*s.* 1*d.*, and for a Serjeant-Maj. 2*s.* 4*d.* a day.

Given at our Court, at Windsor, this 18th day of August, 1836, in the Seventh Year of Our Reign.

Howick.

MILITARY PUNISHMENTS.—COL. CHARLES NAPIER IN REPLY TO GENERAL VON GROLLMANN.

The General then says, "a reconnoitring party despatched towards the Ourcq canal, by whom the enemy was driven with loss from the village of Aubervilliers, confirmed the intelligence that the enemy had strongly fortified the line of Ourcq's canal, and occupied it with so great a force that an attack upon them must have been both a difficult and a doubtful undertaking." Now here General Von Grollmann and I differ as to facts; the line of the canal of Ourcq was, no doubt, strongly fortified; the attack might have been "difficult," owing to British soldiers, and was "doubtful" to Prussian soldiers; and the fact may have been as General Von Grollmann asserts, namely, that the Prussian Army, in consequence of the danger, moved to a more easy point of assault on the south side of Paris, leaving the tougher attack on the north to the British. This was all in character. The Duke of Wellington, I believe, gives a different reason, and says it was want of supplies that made the Prussians move, and the Duke will be believed, in preference to General Grollmann, in all ages and by all nations, except the Prussian; but admitting that the Prussian General is correct in his assertion, that timidity, not hunger, made the Prussians shift their quarters, I take leave to say that the enemy were not driven with loss from Aubervilliers by the Prussian reconnoitring party." I was present at the attack of this village by the British, and the following account of it will illustrate my contradiction of the assertion that we are ignorant of war, and "incapable and unfit for forposts and detachments, for all that precedes and follows a battle;" and which exhibits the slender acquaintance that General Von Grollmann has of the British troops; for it will show that the superiority of the Prussians is far from being proved, and could only be asserted by a Prussian officer. A heavy fire of musketry was maintained by 1500 Prussians for a whole day against the village of Aubervilliers (mentioned by General Von Grollmann); if I overstate the number of the Prussians, or the time they were in the village, I may be corrected. I trust to memory; but whether above or below 1500, the Prussian detachment was very strong, and the French officer who commanded against the Prussians told us he had but 300 men in the village. The late Sir N. Campbell was ordered to relieve the Prussian detachment with three Light Infantry Companies of Sir Charles Colville's Brigade, amounting to under 300 men. I went with him. We found a constant firing maintained by the Prussians, which fire was apparently disregarded by the French, who scarcely returned a shot. The Prussians had not dislodged the latter from any part that they had occupied at the beginning of the attack, and were themselves covered by some houses and walls, from which they kept up this useless fire. On our arrival the Prussian Commander gave Sir Neil Campbell directions as to what he ought and ought not to do. The Prussians had done nothing but waste powder and ball, and we saw neither killed nor wounded men; therefore, though the Prussian officer and his men were, no doubt, brave and experienced soldiers, Sir Neil Campbell resolved not to imitate their mode of attack, of which the failure, up to the period when we relieved them, was evident. We occupied the ground quitted by the Prussians. Campbell made his reconnoissance and laid his plan,—then attacked and carried two or three of the highest houses; from the top of these he broke into those which were lower, but without much firing, only a few shots in breaking through the division walls of some houses, for the French did not seem resolved upon an obstinate defence. In about two hours we possessed ourselves of one side of a whole street, with a communication from house to house through the partition walls, and thus we quickly became masters of the greatest portion of the village. The French officer asked Sir Neil Campbell if we were Prussians. Answer. "No! British." "I thought so," said he, "from your different manner of attack. Those Prussian fellows have been firing for hours and could not dislodge me from a single house. Will you consent to a flag of truce, each to hold his own ground?" Campbell accepted the offer, as he had already possessed himself of the greatest part of the village, and we had reason to believe that a battery from the canal would open upon us, if the French were wholly to evacuate the post. The part they held was between us and the battery. Sir Neil reported the proposition to his Commander, which was consented to; and thus we remained two days and the intervening night. The Prussians would never have taken the village in the way they went to work when we relieved them; they must have expended as much ammunition as if they had been in a general action, and this at a time when Von Grollmann says they had not a cartridge to spare. They were perfectly safe, and so were the French; indeed, unless an epidemic disease fell upon them, they might have been there to this day, and (as far as any loss from fire went) they would still be "in marching and fighting condition ready to take advantage of every lucky accident," so that if a "lucky accident" took place, such as the French quitting the post of their own free will, or that they were dislodged by the British, the unhurt Prussians would have been as fresh and ready to plunder the houses or march on to Paris for the same purpose. General Sir Charles Colville was there, and can correct me if my memory has been at fault in any part of this account; but the assertion made by General Grollmann that the Prussians "drove the French with loss from the village of Aubervilliers" is a mistake, and now, reader, let me ask a question as well as General Von Grollmann (he is fond of questions),—which discipline and knowledge of fore-post duty is best, that of the 1500 Prussians who made no impression on the village who unsuccessfully fired many thousand rounds of ball cartridge without effect when there was a want of magazine for the army, or the 200 British who at once possessed themselves of as much of the village as their Commander thought right, purposely leaving to the enemy that part which made him a screen against his own batteries, who did this with scarcely any firing, and without any fuss courageously and cautiously breaking into one house from another, with two sledge hammers, a heavy beam, and a dozen resolute warriors standing "in the slips" ready to force through the aperture and come to "the scratch;" and who did so the instant a hole was made? the intrepid, the unflinching, the indefatigable Neil Campbell directing all himself, as prominent by his courage as by his rank. And is a Prussian officer to persuade us that the English are unfit for "fore-post and detachment" duties? General Grollmann has mentioned Aubervilliers, and I have given what I recollect of the affair. If I am wrong in any details it signifies little; the fact remains the same, namely, the village was attacked and not taken by the Prussians, and they were relieved by an inferior force of British who did take it; and if that brave and honourable French officer who commanded be alive, let him say against which he would prefer (as a matter of safety) to defend a village, against 200 English, ignorant of out-post duty, or against 1500 Prussian experts? When I read Gen. Von Grollmann's expression "tedious and difficult village fighting," used in the third paragraph of his paper, I did not quite understand it; but when I recollected Aubervilliers the matter cleared up. Yes, it would have been tedious enough had not Neil Campbell and his 200 Light Infantry arrived to end its tediousness. As to its difficulty General Grollmann knows his own troops best. It may have been difficult to the Prussians, to the English it did not appear so. General Grollmann says, they "drove the French from Aubervilliers with loss," which I dispute, though I admit that they tried to do so. As General Grollmann probably states what he heard, and that I state what I recollect to have seen, it is, in that case, to be supposed that Prussian reports of "fore-post and detachment" successes are not so accurate in fact as they may be scientific in terms. In mentioning the French officer who commanded at Aubervilliers, I called him "brave and honourable," the reader shall judge with what truth. When this officer demanded a "parley," he was in a house nearly opposite that in which Sir N. Campbell and myself were. The truce being agreed upon we were careless in going to the windows, and a private of the 54th regiment, standing in the room with us, was shot dead from a distant window on the opposite side. He did not make the least exclamation or motion. I never saw death so sudden; the ball passed through his brains. He was probably the last British soldier killed in that long war. All were very angry; and the first proposal was to make a general attack, and give no quarter; but there were present a few cooler heads, among which, fortunately, was Neil Campbell himself, who ordered all to be quiet while he represented the case to, and demanded satisfaction from, the French Commander. This officer at once answered that he was shocked, that he knew nothing, but would go instantly to the house whence the shot was fired and inquire. "If you like to do so take vengeance on me," said he to Campbell, as he ran down stairs and stood in the street. "If you doubt," said he, "fire, there is my breast," and he threw open his coat. Had the reader seen our state of excitement at the moment, he would be aware of the danger which this resolute man incurred by what he did. But British discipline is superior to human passions. When the French officer appeared the loud voice of Campbell rang through the street,—"let no man fire without my orders;" and vengeance for a comrade slain during a truce was dormant. I doubt much, from what I saw, whether Prussian discipline would be equally obedient. The French officer made his inquiry; he came back and told Campbell that the man who fired was a young conscript; that he had not understood what was going on; that he (the officer) left the decision to Campbell; that it was a mistake, but that he and many others then stood purposely exposed if the English chose to avenge the accident. Sir Neil Campbell said no. That we wanted not retaliation for an error. That his handsome conduct had proved it to be one, but that he must be aware the truce was at an end, lest some other accident should occur. The Frenchman's conduct was throughout brave and loyal. Both sides afterwards kept under cover till the French retired. For these reasons I called that officer brave and honourable. As to the feeling of honour which pervades the Prussian Army I dare say it is pretty much on a par with its neighbours; but, I will say, that in the horrible disorders that I witnessed, committed by them on the march to Paris, I saw no proofs of that high feeling. It was said to be vengeance inflicted for oppressions, committed, as the Prussians averred, by the Emperor Napoleon. On this two remarks are to be made which upset this flimsy excuse. The first is, that the King of Prussia loudly declared that the war was against the Emperor Napoleon personally, and not against the French people. As we are bound to believe that his Prussian Majesty did not proclaim a gross falsehood, as we have a right to suppose that he was honest and honourable in this declaration, we must admit that there is no alternative but to believe that the discipline of the Prussian Army is so bad that its sovereign cannot control its excesses. The second observation is, that as the Waterloo invasion in 1815 was the second invasion made by the Prussian Army, it had no pretext for, and cannot shelter itself under, the plea of retaliation. It had already, in 1811, made France pay the penalty of the aggression and harsh usage which Prussia pretended to have received from Napoleon.

The cruel conduct of the Prussian Army to the people of France in 1815, was, therefore, nothing more or less than the licentious excesses committed by an undisciplined Army, without pretext or excuse, and in the teeth of their Sovereign's orders and declaration. If ever the British Army were to be in such a state, neither our homes nor our freedom would be safe. Such an Army would be as harmless in war as our enemies could wish, though always in a "marching and fighting condition, ready to take advantage" when any other nation would fight the battle for them; and they would take care, in that case, always to be two marches before the fighting nation; because, when men are bent on plunder, there is nothing like being first.

I must here observe that the character given by General Grollmann of our soldiers is evidently taken from what he has heard from the English frequenters of Potsdam reviews. It is totally false; plenty of our countrymen have made an imaginary character for British soldiers, man with whom they have no acquaintance, and they choose to spread their own silly theories on the continent. Twenty times did I hear these sort of people talk of the Prussians (when we were all at Paris in 1815), expressing great admiration of their looks, their padded-up smart jackets (they might well look neat and clean after all the trimming they got from Napoleon) and fat chests, appearing like what is called the cuirass of Queen Elizabeth, shown in the Tower of London; and I saw that our own superior men were unnoticed by these worthy critics. General Grollmann may, if he will ask old officers, learn that the English soldier is NOT "degraded," is NOT "separated from his fellow citizens," is NOT "avoided," is NOT "undervalued by his own nation," is NOT "brutalized," as he avers, whatever any travelling English jackanapes may tell him to the contrary; the General can know little of our soldiers,—all he knows of them is what depended upon their General, namely, their movements, and those, he says, were "slow." Now I leave this to be answered by others; but one or two remarks I will venture to make. I was disgusted with what I saw of the "allies" as troops, our own brave, well-disciplined, and glorious Hanoverian always excepted; all those officers with whom I spoke on the subject concurred in saying that they never saw such slow and clumsy work as the reviews of the Army of occupation, exclusive of the British; that Wellington and the British absolutely manœuvred round the Prussians, whose disorderly columns of rout I have seen, therefore the Prussian rapidity and our slowness, of which General Von Grollmann speaks, must have depended upon the Generals,—Wellington the winner and Blucher the beaten in battles, leaving the reader to his choice between the slowness that gains, and the rapidity that loses, victory. I have now done with General Von Grollmann, who defends a bad position, from which I hope some of our Generals will drive him. I have confined myself to the "fore-post" of Aubervilliers, and whether or not I have dislodged his Prussians from thence (as they did not the French) must be left to the public. I will in two things agree with the General; our soldiers are "rough, stout, and valiant men," they are well-fed, and in their ration of beef I see much valour and much stoutness, also much good generalship in that glorious Commander who always got it for them; and I heartily join General Von Grollmann in the opinion that flogging ought to be abolished. I agree with him also in saying that the discipline of troops ought not to be left to Adjutants and Serjeants; and now, wishing the Prussians more good fortune in the next war than they had in the last, I remain,

CHARLES NAPIER, Colonel.

I had finished this letter when I recollected a passage in a work that I have written on Military Law, and which is now in the press. The passage seems appropriate, I, therefore, insert it here. Ours are not an "inferior class," they are disciplined, brave, and generous. "We saw these sons of Albion formed in square battalions between Hougomont and Mount Saint John," writes the celebrated French General Foy, with characteristic generosity; "to effect this compact formation they had doubled and redoubled their ranks. The Cavalry which supported them was cut to pieces, and the fire of their Artillery was completely silenced. Death was before them and in their ranks. Disgrace in their rear. In this terrible situation neither the bullets of the Imperial Guard discharged almost point-blank, nor the victorious Cavalry of France, could make the least impression on the immoveable British Infantry. One might almost be tempted to fancy that it had rooted itself in the ground, but for the majestic movement which its battalions commenced after sunset, at the moment when the approach of the Prussian Army apprised Wellington that he had just achieved the most decisive victory of the age." So much for our discipline; so much for our soldiers' courage. Now for their generosity. "A Subaltern of the French Battery," writes Major Gawler in his Crisis of Waterloo by an Eye Witness, "threw his sword on the ground in token of surrender, but the Commander standing in the centre of his guns, waved his above his head in defiance; a soldier sprang from the British ranks, parried his thrust, closed with him, threw him on the ground and keeping him down with his foot, reversed his musket in both hands to bayonet him, when that repugnance to the shedding of blood which so often rises in the hearts of British soldiers, even under circumstances of personal danger and prudential necessity, burst forth in a groan of disgust from his surrounding comrades. It came, however, too late in this case. The fatal thrust was sped, and the Legion of Honour lost another member." So write "enemies" and "eye witnesses" of British soldiers. But "friends" and those who were not "eye witnesses;" men who, to use the soldiers' expression, "never burned priming," call the men "inferior class;" and I have read travellers' books which hold up the Prussians ("of all the beasts in the field and all the birds in the air") as models for us. Reader (whether Military or non-Military), if you have got this cursed crotchet in your head, do hearken unto me for one minute. The Prussian Army was completely surprised and thrashed at Ligny, and when the British Army had repaired the disgrace, by defeating in the great field of Waterloo the conquerors of the Prussian Army, up came these vanquished Prussians. The "models" and unsparing of life gave no quarter to the retreating, discomfited, and unresisting French, exhausted with the exertion of a battle that would have sent Blucher and his Prussians back to Berlin; and this slaughter was carried on by the beaten "models," when, at the very moment, hundreds of the victorious "inferior class," under all the excitement of combat, sent forth a simultaneous cry to save a brave enemy. I was, to my own regret, too late to see the battle of Waterloo, but I arrived directly after it, even before the wounded were all off the ground; and I accompanied the Army to Paris, and so undisciplined, so insolent, so destructive a set as the Prussians I never before beheld, and never wish to see again. The insolence even of their looks made one almost fancy that they forgot that the British and Hanoverians won the battle of Waterloo; made one almost fancy that they forgot that they had closed a long war of aggression against France, and a long succession of well-merited disasters, by the signal surprise and defeat at Ligny,—so immortal are the genius of Napoleon and the superiority of the French troops to the "models." There, reader, if that crotchet is not now out of your head, in God's name there let it abide. Take it to Potsdam and Kalisch, or to the * * *, anywhere you like. All I hope is that you may never encounter British soldiers, and so I finish the long trot that I have taken out of my subject, and for which I beg the reader's pardon, unless he has been at Potsdam or Kalisch.

Caen, in Normandy, 12th July, 1836.

TRISTRAM'S BURLESQUE, OR A NAVAL FANTASY AND A MARINE EXTRAVAGANZA

"To indulge my thoughts I write away,
Thus please myself!
To please a' men there is nae way,
Thou know'st thyself!"

SIR,—The above-rhymed, à la Burns, as a musical motto to one of my letters, I beg to convert into a beginning of this, to let your readers, or correspondents, or yourself, Editor, once more understand, that I am not attempting the vain and ungrateful task to please all, or any one in particular; for whoever may have the pleasure of perusing the entertaining pages of correspondence, will not only find both farce and amusement to tickle his risibility, but also inconsistency and absurdity, in argument and proposition, as will set the most ardent desire to please everybody at defiance.

Second Masters and Clerks, who are already bedecked with gold lace and scarlet cuffs and collars, think it strange —"upon their honour"—that they are deprived of the epaulettes and straps, when in charge under a Lieutenant Commander, although the Mates, their superiors, second in command, have been royal naval uniform not only worn but adorned, but disgraced by a livery servant's button-hole or a carpenter's chalk-line edging!—(what qualms!) As to Surgeons claiming seats in the House of Lords, previous to their elevation to the Peerage!—(what presumption!) Surgeons declining to serve in brigs, schooners, or cutters unless they mess with their Lieutenant Commanders! (what capers!) Mids voting the abolition of both berths of parliament (in a man-of-war, the cockpit and ward-room) to establish a general mess for all officers in the K. Palace, the Captain's cabin! What next, Mr. Midshipman Esquire!!! Condemning the lee side of the quarter-deck as a derogatory parade for the members of the House of Commons, ces Messieurs-là, who inhabit "the dark recesses of a Midshipman's berth," and demanding seats at Naval Courts-Martial!!—for if Ensigns in the Army mess with their Colonels, strut the parade cheek by jowl with their Field Officers, and preside at Military Courts-Martial, why should not we Mids, we Sea-Ensigns, mess with our Captains Colonels, walk arm in arm with them, on the weather-side too, and preside at Naval Courts-Martial, to try and hang all the Lieutenants, Commanders, and Captains in the Fleet, who don't know how to behave themselves like gentlemen? I say, messmates, why should we not—damn it, why? Masters sounding the Admiralty to be styled Navigating Lieutenants, and to be superannuated on the rank and pay of Commanders—Master Attendants on those of Post-Captains!!! Pass your LEAD and LINE and be Masters—heave—watch there—watch! You will not strike soundings on the list of Post-Captains, for some of you have already struck them on the Commander's list, as far as the uniform goes. Apropos—what Military Officer does a two-epauletted Master hold at Court, in the Navy, Army, or in any part of the world? Pursers submit that they ought to be styled Ship Accountants, or Commissaries!! Three thousand Lieutenants petition to be placed on the same rate of half-pay as Captains in the Army, so as each of the 3000 may have 6½*d.* per diem more on half-pay than on full pay! They will get it when the House of Commons is permitted by the split-farthing economists to vote only 60,000*l.* per annum! Lieutenants, in proposing to hold of themselves (in the absence of senior officers) a Naval Court-Martial, over which a Commander is to preside, for the purpose of trying all crimes and offences committed by Flag Officers and Captains, except those losing their fleets or ships, in battle or by shipwreck!!! I wonder how many Commanders and Captains those Lords would dismiss in a year, by the way of wiping off all scores against them? Then we have the youngest Subs of Marines declaring in public print that the "old Subs are a shabby set." Tout au contraire, my young "MARINES ROYALS;" they are the élite of your corps—the life and soul of the Naval mess, they know their situation in a ship and are universally respected; but these youngsters have yet to find out that, on board of a man-of-war, before the heads of the "Royals" are permitted to be hoisted "top up," they are first to be "shouted home." Captains of Marines, also, claiming shares of prize-money, saving rewards, and head-money for slaves, above their equals in Sea-Lieutenants!! What high and ambitious notions these Marine Captains entertain in barracks, where the pens flies not, but many a "castle built in the air!" Ma

Field Officers showing signs of defection from the Navy, and a decided preference to the Army, because they cannot share prize-money, &c. with the Captains and Commanders of the Fleet, the bonâ fide Commandants of all sea forces embarked in their respective ships, as part complements, or supernumeraries, for victuals and wages, whether composed of Marines, soldiers, or seamen. And lastly, the whole lists of commissioned officers of the Navy claiming equal half-pay, pensions for wounds, pensions for their widows, compassionate allowance for their children, with those of corresponding ranks in the Army, without first advocating a "RESERVED HALF-PAY LIST*," for the undeserving and variously unqualified to retire on their present half-pay only for salaries, with the pensions of their widows reserved.

All of which whimsical proposals, supernumerary capers, preposterous ideas, and vain pretensions, logically supported by Latin scraps and English rhetoric, I have exhibited to the rational part of your correspondents, to prove the impossibility for either Tristram, or Mr. Wood, or the Admiralty, to please those of your correspondents who have thus written under the evident impulse of "vanity and vexation of spirit."

Second Masters and Clerks in charge—"pon honour"—will never wear straps and epaulettes whilst their superiors, the Mates, have their coats edged with a carpenter's chalk line, nor Assist.-Surgeons mess in the ward-room before they are entitled to become a member thereof by promotion to the rank of Surgeon: Naval custom and discipline from time immemorial forbid it. They have to thank their pride and presumption only for being again classed with the Mids for prize-money. Surgeons will never mess with their Lieutenant-Commanders, when appointed to serve in brigs, schooners, or cutters; nor Pursers be styled Ship Accountants or Sea Commissaries—no, no, Mussa Purser; nor Reefers mess in the Captain's cabin, nor strut the weather side arm-in-arm with their superiors, nor preside at Naval Courts-Martial for the trial of any one in the fleet, except at the mimic Courts-Martial holden in the Mids' berth to cob a refractory messmate. Masters will never be styled Navigating Lieutenants, nor be superannuated on the rank and half-pay of Commanders, nor Master Attendants on the rank and half-pay of Post Captains, but on 8s. per diem, with the rank of MASTERS. Three thousand Lieutenants will never have 5½*d.* per diem more on half-pay than on full-pay, nor will they constitute a Naval Court-Martial, with a Commander as President, to try Flag Officers or Captains for any offence whatever. Young Marine Subs will never convince the Navy that "the old Subs are a shabby set," nor Captains of Marines share prize-money, otherwise than with the Sea-Lieutenants, their equals; nor Royal Marine Field Officers share with the Captains or Commanders of our ships and vessels of war, unless the constitution of a British man-of-war is capsized, when all will be topsy-turvy, and the "ROYALS" above the "sky-sails.". Nor can there be a hope, a chance, or possibility, of the active and deserving commissioned officers of the Navy increasing their half-pay, unless the Admiralty grant a "Reserved Half-Pay List" for the objectionable and unqualified, as already established for the Royal Marines and Sea Commissaries.

My brother Sailors, and brother "Royals," with these your own freaks of farce, whim, and caprice,

"I've fore and aft tried to amuse you,
Just for my fancy and gig,
Let me find the man to ill-use you,
Damn me, but I'd tickle his wig.
I've not the tongue of a railer,
'Twas fun ev'ry word that I spoke,
And the sign of a true-hearted Sailor (or Marine)
Is to love and to take a good joke" from thy friend TRISTRAM.

TRANSFER OF MADRAS CAVALRY TO BENGAL.

SIR,—In your last Number you have strengthened a rumour now prevalent, of certain arrangements said to be contemplated in a future distribution of the Madras Cavalry in the Bengal territory, by stating, "Orders we know have gone out authorising a transfer, but leaving the details and arrangements to the Supreme Government;" but as the result of my inquiries has led me to understand that the Court of Directors have only authorised the Government of India to draw up a plan for their approval, for permanently withdrawing Cavalry from the Madras Presidency, and increasing it in Bengal, I shall be glad to learn upon what authority you have come to the conclusion that a transfer has been authorised without further reference to the Home authorities. Perhaps you will be able to throw some light upon this subject, as I know it is not generally believed that a transfer has been sanctioned. Should such an arrangement, however, be made, the simplest mode (supposing, as you have reported, that half the Madras Cavalry is to be given over to Bengal) would be by selecting every other Colonel, Lieut.-Colonel, and those regiments to which every other Major belongs, as they all stand according to seniority, and allowing the promotion of those officers to go on independently until all are absorbed. Those who attain their rank after being transferred being brought in the regular list of Bengal Field Officers of Cavalry.

The above mode would, I think, give as much general satisfaction as this somewhat novel procedure will admit of, and which, I am sure, it will be the desire of the Directors and Indian Government to secure.

Aug. 25. AN OFFICER OF THE MADRAS CAVALRY.

SIR CHARLES METCALFE.

SIR,—As your journal is now highly esteemed above all others in this country as the best medium of Communicating Military intelligence connected with the Indian Army, I have been induced to do myself the pleasure of sending you the enclosed for publication, containing, as it does, the honest sentiments of our new Governor-General towards the one who has just quitted the helm of this great Government, and who, for justice, wisdom, and benevolence, may, in truth, as Lord Auckland so feelingly and justly observes, be held up as an example for the future Governors of the Empire in India.

THE COURT OF INQUIRY AT FORT PITT, CHATHAM.

SIR,—With reference to a paragraph in your impartial Journal of last week, relative to the Court of Inquiry now assembled at Fort Pitt, you have given the credit of bringing this system of fraud before the public to Sir Leonard Greenwell and Lord Howick. May I be permitted to observe, that the latter is fully entitled to your just remarks; but, instead of the former, the General Commanding-in-Chief should have been inserted. As this investigation is of a very serious nature, care should be taken not to give credit to any individuals but those who merit it. You will find it worth your notice, on public grounds, not to lose sight of the present inquiry. The insertion of this in your valuable Gazette of next week will favour

Chatham, 24th Aug. JUSTICE.

[The Committee of Inquiry which assembled on the 17th inst. is still sitting. The case of Pt. Cohen has led to an extended Investigation into the system pursued there, respecting the effects of soldiers, and their disposal. A searching inquiry has been demanded, for the relatives of a soldier have a right to the full amount of his effects.—ED.]

THE INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSE OF THE INCREASED NUMBER OF SHIPWRECKS.

SIR,—Observing in your Naval and Military Gazette of 13th inst., that a "Lieut., R.N.," who asserts he was in the Triumph "from 1797 until she was paid off in Portsmouth Harbour in 1804," has thought proper, in no measured terms, to impugn my veracity, I again repeat, at the breaking out of the war in May, 1803, several Midshipmen were sent out from England to join foreign stations. The Fleet in the Mediterranean, under Sir R. Bickerton, being nearly destitute, had but few allotted to their share, some of the ships none, others one, and some two. The Triumph, for instance, only two. Will the "Lieut." have the goodness to inform you, who, from about June, 1803, until she was paid off in 1804, did the duty as Mids on the poop of that ship, by the Captain's (Sir R. Barlow's) orders? Was it not steady and deserving Quartermasters, selected for that specific purpose, there not being sufficient Mids on board to do the duty in the various stations in the ship? But as he seems to forget this fact, it cannot be expected that he should remember that a boat one morning, soon after day-light, appeared with four men in her, who had made their escape out of Toulon, in the latter end of 1803. Where is his log-book? Three of these men were sent on board the Admiral's ship, and one retained in the Triumph (who was Captain and part owner of a brig, a trader to Smyrna, captured by a Privateer), whose name was Harris, and who could neither read or write when he first came on board. Myself and the Schoolmaster, who was a seaman before the mast, brought him on surprisingly. I used to work his dead-reckoning, and write it out for him. He was made a Lieutenant (it is impossible he could have served his time of six years in the Navy), and was in the Hibernia in 1808, and the Courageux the latter end of 1808 or beginning of 1809, when he was broke by a Court-Martial for incapability: the minutes of the Court-Martial at the Admiralty will prove that fact. At this moment a Capt. D. is [on a visit to me, who has commanded various West Indiamen, and he assures me he has frequently been the only one on board that could navigate them, and he also informs me that there is scarcely a vessel trading which is not "husbanded;" that is, they take on board one hand to navigate her, for cheapness, and leave all the rest to chance: should this one die at sea, the vessel is too often left to the mercy of the winds and waves, and that, at this present moment, he knows there are numbers of Captains and Mates in various trading vessels who can neither read or write. What are the Underwriters about not to see into this? There ought never to be less than two on board a merchant vessel who understand the navigating part as well as seamanship; for be it remembered, it is not necessary in seamanship that the individual should do either (as many good seamen full prove), but as to the navigating part, some knowledge of both, it will be admitted, is absolutely essential.

24th Aug. ONCE A MID OF THE TRIUMPH.

[An Old R.N. on this subject next week.—ED.]

THE NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

SIR,—As silence is generally attributed to acquiescence, I, in common with many brother members residing in the neighbourhood, beg, through your valuable paper, totally to disclaim any participation in opinion with the member who, at the last meeting of the Royal Charitable Naval Society, moved that that Committee should unanimously dissent from the opinions so clearly expressed by your late correspondent Nauticus, relative to the onerous state of our "office expenses." Our brethren at Plymouth, I observe in your paper of this week, have taken the lead in our views, we have much pleasure in sailing in their wake, and with such leaders cannot but achieve a victory; and we do hope that the members resident in other parts will unite with us in giving public expression to their feelings of gratitude to the London members who supported the cause so disinterestedly introduced by Nauticus, and seconded by Philanthropist, in whom we more particularly beg to return our most sincere thanks for their able advocacy of genuine "Christian Charity." Several ladies, who have received assistance from the society, request to unite with us, and hope our friends will persevere in the good cause. It is only within the last two or three years, since my residence here, that I have ceased being an attendant at the Quarterly Meetings. The cases which come before the notice of the Committee are truly heart-rending, and deserving the deepest consideration, and very forcibly call forth from the number of increased claimants for a diminution of our "office expenses." I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion that, if the state of our affairs meet the benevolent eye of our gracious Patron (God bless him!) he will immediately command that directions be given to find us an office. I beg to suggest that an annual Committee of Management (say ten—three to form a quorum) should be appointed, holding weekly or monthly meetings at the office, the general quarterly meetings as usual; it would tend much to improve our anomalous system. With the exception of the casual attendence at the quarterly meetings, parties will probably never hear a word relative to the society but on those occasions, cannot enter so deeply into its interests as the members who devote a portion of their time to that purpose. Two auditors ought likewise to be annually chosen from their body. I beg further to suggest that the Managing Committee should have power to write to members that are in arrear, informing them of the fact, and requesting to know if it is their intention to continue members. To make up for the probable increase of postage arising from this correspondence, I propose that officers continuing in arrear (as members) one year, should be subjected to an annual fine as follows:—Flag Officers 10s., Captains, Commanders and Physicians, 6*s.*, all other classes 2*s.* We have a precedent in the Royal Naval Annuitant Society. The whole arrangements of the Charitable Society are at present vested in the Secretary, who is not a member. I again beg to allude to the Annuitant Society's rules, wherein it appears that the Actuary and Clerk must be members, and not any other employ. In looking over the advertisement of expenses of that society for the year ending 20th May, 1835, including in that charge eight branches, I find the total to be only 8*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* Contrast this with the 1835 similar expenses of the Royal Naval Charitable Society; which, as shown by Nauticus, amounted to 13*l.* 10*s.*; the gross receipts of the Annuitant for the above period were 15,52[illegible] 16*s.* 2½*d.*, and the total office expenses only 471*l.* 6*s.* 2[illegible] A more glaring contrast appears in the Charitable for 18[illegible] —the receipts were 1329*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*; office expenses 24[illegible] May the supporters of both societies increase, remove [illegible] defects, and thus build up for the widow, the fatherless, the orphan, a house of refuge to which they may have access in the hour of need. With this feeling I beg to conclude, [illegible] with the warmest sentiments of gratitude for your attention to our interests.

* A "Reserved Half-Pay List" is already established for the Pursers, if this extract from the Naval and Military Gazette be correct. "The additional half-pay to Pursers will be granted to such only as declare themselves fit and willing for active employ. To such officers as fail to satisfy the Admiralty of their inability to continue active service, either by infirmity or former service, the increase will not be granted, and each of such cases must undergo a fresh medical examination." If the Marines and the Pursers have "Reserved Half-Pay Lists" for the variously unqualified to benefit their active lists by promotion and increase of half-pay, why should not the Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants of the Fleet, have the same right, justice, and benefit extended to their active lists?

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1836.

We did not intend to have again alluded to the Order addressed by the General Commanding-in-Chief to His Majesty's 41st Regiment, but some of our contemporaries having published remarks which we consider uncalled for; and the Limerick Chronicle having further attached a list of the Officers now belonging to the corps, without distinction, we think it our duty to give the following table, distinguishing those officers who were present with the regiment previous to the 7th of March, 1836, the day on which the Order was issued at Calcutta, and those who had not joined until subsequent to its promulgation.

The authority of a superior to censure or condemn must ever be indisputable, but we cannot admit the right of any third party to add their venom to the wound, especially when we know that they have no other information on the subject than that conveyed in the Order extracted from our columns, and which they affirm to be so "well merited."

We cannot take leave for the present of the subject of the Royal Naval School, and its position, without once more impressing upon our readers—our Naval readers particularly—the great advantages which, for all the purposes of education, are brought within their reach by the existence of this truly excellent establishment, and how much it behoves them to support it vigorously and unanimously.

It may be considered one of the signs of the times, that when an useful project displays a decided superiority, and is preferred over others, it is sure to produce envy and uncharitableness; and there are never wanting disaffected or interested persons ready to throw out doubts and insinuations regarding the best intentions. We have remarked this evil spirit to be particularly active when any thing is proposed for the improvement of Naval matters; and it was not to be expected that the Royal Naval School, having attained so commanding a station with reference to other establishments for the education of youth, should pass unscathed. Accordingly we find a good deal of this spirit manifested, and attempts made to injure this institution in its infancy, by persons whose proceedings we adverted to a fortnight since, and whose motives we may hereafter expose.

Notwithstanding the high patronage which the School has attained, the disinterested exertions of some of our first officers in the management of its concerns, and the great accession which its funds have received from the subscriptions and bequests of philanthropic individuals, who, although not immediately connected with the Navy, have undoubtedly the success of that noble service at heart,—we would rather see its income swelled by the contributions, however small, of officers themselves; and surely all those who regard the honour and interest of their profession, and are in circumstances to afford it, should aid the funds of this establishment in preference to any other, although they may not be able to avail themselves in their own families of the excellent education which it offers to the children of their brother officers. When we contemplate the number of names on the Navy List, and consider that the subscription of one day's half-pay from that portion who could conveniently contribute, would enable this institution to bestow a first-rate education upon some scores of youths, whose parents have not the means of placing them in those seminaries where alone it can be obtained, whose young aspirations, eager to qualify them for a liberal profession, must be therefore checked, and their rising talent turned to some common-place, or mechanical, pursuit, we do hope that due support will be forthcoming on the part of the Navy themselves. Under a system so admirably arranged as this appears to be, when emulation is so laudably excited, the capacity of a boy must be small indeed if he does not qualify himself to take a station in one of the classes for distinction; and how gratifying must it be to the parents of Masters Jennings, Christian, and others, who have so greatly excelled, to feel that the talents of their children have been developed in an institution which affords them the best means of cultivation, and the reasonable hope of advancement to the highest honours and emoluments of any profession they may select.

That the Royal Naval School will flourish under its present able management we confidently predict; and we hope and trust that the great exertions made for its advancement will be warmly seconded on the part of Naval Officers generally, so as to insure for their children as good an education as can be obtained in any establishment in the kingdom, at a cost within the limited means upon which the generality of the profession can devote to this essential purpose.

With our Military intelligence will be found the King's Warrant, just promulgated, altering the terms on which the soldier is to obtain the additional penny per diem. This regulation will, no doubt, work well. Lord Howick deserves praise for this, and we hope he will go on with his arrangements. We have heard, however, that the old soldiers are sadly disappointed. The old Peninsulars are now but few, and they were in hopes that a badge of some sort would have been given to them. We have heard some say that they wanted no ring to wed them to the service. The only ring they wanted was one to fight in, but that they had "neither got a ring nor no favour whatsomever this here turn."

We find that the remarks we offered last week on the subject of the transfer of part of the Madras Cavalry to Bengal, has had its effect, and we apprehend that something like a counter-statement may appear, implying that an entire transfer is now contemplated. This, we believe, is now the tone assumed at the India House, but we have still reason to believe that we were correct in the information we gave, and that the Supreme Government have been empowered to make the transfer if they think fit; whether they will act upon it is another question, or merely take the services of three or four Madras regiments of cavalry to relieve those of Bengal, at Neemuch, Nusseerabad, Mhow, or Saugor, so as to enable the latter to concentrate upon the north-west frontier; this, of course, we cannot guess.

We are glad to hear that the arrangement, made by the East India Company's Government some time ago for granting Pensions to their officers according to length of actual service in India, has given much satisfaction to their Army. Though there is no doubt that, upon the footing it is placed of twenty, twenty-five, thirty, and thirty-five years actual service in India, for each grade of pension, independent of promotion, the addition to expense to the state will be very small, yet will the boon greatly benefit the Army, and relieve the prospects of men who are unlucky in their promotion, and who, in consequence of age and infirmities, it is the interest of the state to be relieved from their remaining in active employ. It is hoped, that a reduction of a year or two may still be made in the more lengthened periods of thirty and thirty-five years' service, more especially as there is no doubt that the expense incurred will after all be small.

We must confess, however, that we were greatly surprised to learn that the Medical Establishments attached to the Army are excluded from the benefit of this arrangement of Pension for length of service; upon what possible principle of justice this is done we cannot understand, unless it be that the Army is a body that it is wise and necessary for the Company to conciliate, where the Medical service may be treated with less consideration. Be that as it may, we understand that Surgeons in the Company's Service, who must be twenty-two years of age before they can enter as Assistant-Surgeons, and who are entitled to retire on their pay after seventeen years' actual service in India; yet, after twenty or twenty-five additional years of service, unless advanced to the higher grades (of which, from the stagnation of promotion, more particularly in Bengal, there is no prospect), their pensions would only be the same as those who have served seventeen years; is this just or fair, or in conformity with the regulations for other Military Pensions? we do say, that this is grossly unjust. If Military men in the Indian Service, who enter it at sixteen or seventeen years of age, are entitled to rates of pension after twenty, twenty-five, thirty, or thirty-five years' active service, Medical officers, who cannot enter the service until they are twenty-two years of age, are fairly entitled to similar pensions, or a reduction of three years or more from each grade of service, considering their more advanced age and previous acquirements on entering the service.

Sir John Cam Hobhouse will be doing great injustice to a deserving body of men, if he does not immediately extend the principle of pensions for length of service, which he has introduced into this Army, both to the Medical and Marine Service of the East India Company. We believe that the Court of Directors are quite open to the justice of the principle; the delay we apprehend does not with regard them. As to any paltry objection of the want of funds, we repeat that the expense after all, upon the most liberal scale, would be but little, if any; and if it were otherwise, is the increase of revenues in Bengal, which the last accounts from thence brought the intelligence of, a clear surplus of above half a million sterling, with a prospect of a further increase, insufficient?

Whenever a question of justice to a great body of deserving public servants is mooted by the Indian Authorities, and when it can be met in no other way, the invariable excuse is, the pressure upon the revenues, and the want of funds; but the ways and means are never wanting when a job is to be provided for, either for a Bishop's salary, or an additional Member of Supreme Council, or all the et ceteras of a New Government, with Secretaries and Boards without end, to add only to the confusion already existing in the multiplicity of powers that be. But we feel confident, that this principle which has been introduced into the Army Pensions, must in time be extended both to the Medical and Marine Service of this Company; the injustice, however, to the present servants is the withholding it for a single day. Even as to the Army the principle and extent of the Pension does not reach that point which the wise and provident mind of Lord Cornwallis foresaw was necessary, who, on discussing the Military arrangements, adopted in the Company's Army, in the year 1796, laid it down as one of the foundations of that arrangement, that every officer should obtain his Lieutenant-Colonelcy in about twenty-five years' Indian service.

Among the promotions of last week we were gratified to observe the name of Mr. Frederick Holland to the rank of Lieutenant. The claims of this young man we have more than once called attention to in our columns, he being one of those, we believe the last that remained unpromoted, who had gained the highest honours at the Naval College at Portsmouth, and which proud distinction had always, heretofore, been considered the certain guarantee of immediate promotion, after having passed the final examination for Lieutenant. Mr. Holland, we believe, had passed nearly two years; we therefore have noticed his having at length received this promised reward, with great satisfaction, and the more so whilst we reflect that the patronage of the First Lord of the Admiralty being thus justly bestowed, will tend to create emulation in all other young men destined for the Naval Service.

With our Naval intelligence will be found a Return of the names of all Mates and Midshipmen, now actually serving, who have passed their examination for Lieutenants previously to the 1st of last January, and distinguishing the year in which they were examined. Next week we shall give a further Return of equal importance to the Navy, and upon both we shall take an early opportunity of offering some comments.

The case of Mr. Dillon has been again submitted to us, with a request that we would afford him our support to obtain that justice which has been hitherto withheld by the Lords of the Treasury, acting upon the recommendation of the Commissioners of Customs. The petition is endorsed with the following words, to which the signatures of three highly distinguished Admirals are attached, and having already in our paper of the 2nd ultimo stated our opinion at length upon the case, we cannot give it a stronger recommendation to the favourable consideration of the Treasury than by transcribing the endorsement above-mentioned:—

"Mr. Dillon,—Relying on the correctness of the statement contained in your petition to the House of Commons, it appears that your conduct in the case referred to therein has been twice submitted to the decision of competent persons authorized to investigate it, and in both instances you have been exculpated from the charges alleged against you. We are, therefore, at a loss to comprehend upon what grounds you are still denied a final and favourable adjustment of your claims for the capture of the American brig Peru.

(Signed) "George Martin, Admiral.
"Robert Stopford, Admiral.
"March 20th, 1836. "P. C. H. Durham, Admiral."

We are well aware of the difficulty of obtaining a reconsideration of any case, however oppressive, after it has once been reported on; but to charge an officer with cowardice for not boarding a well appointed smuggling vessel from a small boat in a gale of wind, and then award him 50l. in satisfaction of a claim for several thousands, appears to us preposterous in the extreme.

At the risk of being considered the tellers of a twice-told tale, we must venture once more to urge the Commander-in-Chief to remove the grievance under which His Majesty's regiments have long suffered in India. Their character as an Army, for they are few among many, is watched closely by the soldiery of the East India Company, and it must be painful to Lord Hill to have been compelled to hold up any regiment to general gaze as the 41st regiment has so lately been. We remember the 41st regiment, and we had some opportunities of witnessing its conduct in quarters and in the field some years before it went to India. No regiment was better conducted in quarters, none more forward in the field. Those who were at Detroit, Queenstown, and Minmi, will acknowledge what we say to be truth. Only two of its companies were at Niagara, but those two companies behaved nobly and won a badge for the whole corps, of which they may well feel proud. In Ava the 41st never spared itself, and few regiments suffered more. We again repeat it, that every regiment in India is in a state of deterioration from the first day it lands in that country; and when after ten years of this gradual falling off insubordination occurs, the downward ruin is rapid and final, nor can it rise again till resuscitated by home service. The case of the 41st has been made conspicuous by a General Order, but there are other regiments in which as numerous Courts-Martial have been held, and for offences still greater, though not so notorious nor following so closely. The order in question would hardly have been known out of India, had we not considered it our duty to print it, so little is there known of 20,000 men serving there. Can His Majesty be aware of the protracted service performed by his faithful soldiers in India? We doubt that he is. We feel how delicate a task it is for any military man to draw the attention of the King to any particular portion of his Army. The Army is peculiarly the King's, and to interfere with it is, in some degree, to interfere with His Majesty's privileges. In wishing that some one of the distinguished officers around His Majesty's person would state the length of service and the unequal system now in force for the relief of his Army in India, we are only expressing the wishes of 20,000 of his most loyal and devoted subjects who, in that distant land for full twenty years, pine away or fall early victims to despair and disease, arising out of the long banishment to which they are doomed. The 45th, 54th, and 16th regiments are not unknown, and are not forgotten by their King; but His Majesty may not remember that they have been in India since 1819. There is in this year the means of relieving, before 1837, those three regiments, and to His Majesty they must appeal,—as old and faithful servants may appeal to a just and an indulgent master. The Army and Navy are in his hands, and we well know that a just cause of complaint was never left unredressed by William the Fourth. The Army of India needs some old officer of high rank who shall make their case known to the King. We call on the Commanders-in-Chief who have been in India to plead for the Armies they commanded, at the foot of the Throne. Soldiers dare not memorialize, or 20,000 signatures would be attached in one day praying their King to relieve his regiments from India in fifteen years.

The following regiments have already landed in the United Kingdom this year from Foreign Service:—1st Battalion Royals from the West Indies; 7th Fusiliers, from Malta; 25th Reg., from the West Indies; 38th, from Bengal.

The following are expected to arrive, the relief having gone out:—42d Highlanders, from the Mediterranean; 79th Highlanders, from America; 88th Reg., from the Mediterranean; 97th, from Ceylon; 98th, from the Cape of Good Hope; 1st Batt. Rifle Brigade, from America. To these may be added, the 19th, 22d, and 86th regiments, which are to return from the West Indies, the Force there being about to be reduced by three regiments.

In 1836 there will, therefore, be relieved thirteen regiments, but of these only one from India! It would have given us pleasure to have noticed that instead of the regiments from the healthy and agreeable Stations in America, the Mediterranean and the Cape, having been relieved, the 45th, 54th and 16th regiments had been recalled from India where they have been since 1819, while the 7th, 42d, 79th, 88th, 98th, and 1st Batt. of Rifles were abroad only since 1825, and enjoying the advantage of having two-fifths of their corps at home. Our gracious King will yet insist on justice being done to all his Army. His regiments in India are now condemned Corps. Shall they be so longer? We confidently any, His Majesty will do them justice.

As the Board of Admiralty are now upon their annual visit to the Dock-yards, and doubtless strictly inspecting the various departments, with a view to the removal of abuses, as well as future improvements, we would earnestly call their Lordships' attention to the state under which the Shipwrights are reduced by the regulation which limits their earnings to twenty shillings, and only permits them to work five days per week.

When it is considered that the Shipwrights and their families comprise a great portion of the population of those towns wherein the Dock-yards are situate—that they are good and loyal subjects, paying rates and taxes, and certainly as respectable as other mechanics or small tradesmen—it does appear to us (even admitting the altered value of provisions, house-rent, &c.) that, comparing thrir wages with the earnings of those classes in the same rank of life, they fall short of what thry could and should obtain, did not the above regulation prevent them.

It is worthy of remark that the Shipwrights who work in the private yards have adopted, and are now acting upon a resolution something similar in principle to the Government restriction. Whilst the members of most other trades endeavour to earn as much as they can, and the best or most diligent workmen obtain the most wages, the Shipwrights in the river have combined not to work beyond certain hours; in other words, to limit each man's earnings to his daily pay of 5s., however well inclined he may be to apply his extra time. The reason they assign for this is, that every man may have a turn, and the admission of this necessity is a plain proof that there are more hands existing in the craft than work to give them full employment. Now the simple remedy for this would be to turn the superabundant mechanics to other trades; but the loss of our Shipwrights, and their probable emigration to rival states, cannot be looked on with indifference by a country so intimately dependent as this upon her maritime prosperity, and whose first object it should be to guard and cherish every interest connected therewith. It may be observed, however, that the Shipwright in the Merchant's-yard can still earn his 30s. per week; and, leaving him to settle his differences with his employer, we will revert to the situation of those employed in the King's yards, whose wages amount to but two-thirds of this, and who, having one day in the week to spare, naturally devote it to the exercise of their craft, and, by performing odd jobs, trespass upon the employment of their neighbours, and thus a bad feeling is produced. There is another thing to be considered: Shipwrights are required to find their own tools, and in boring trenail holes it is not an uncommon thing to break an augur or two, a misfortune equivalent to the loss of a day's wages, thus further reducing their net earnings; and if the amount of work performed is to be taken as a standard, we will venture to assert that the Shipwright reared in a King's yard will perform considerably more than the other, because he sets about it more systematically from constant habit; whereas the other is constantly handied about from yard to yard, and from job to job, at the caprice of a foreman, and many times required to perform the work with imperfect materials.

No greater evil could befal us than the loss or depreciation of our Shipwrights in the King's Dock-yards; and as the Navy Estimates will always be cheerfully voted to any extent which can be shown necessary—and we think the inspection the Board of Admiralty are now making will convince their Lordships of the necessity of materially increasing the force at present employed in keeping ships in repair—moreover, as the late regulation with the Post Office has very properly consigned the Packet Establishment to the Admiralty, and many steam-vessels are required to be built for that service, we trust the time will speedily arrive when the Shipwrights shall be allowed to work six days in the week. The difference of expense in the whole year would not amount to 50,000*l.*; and when the immense benefit to be derived is contemplated, and the enormous sums which have been expended for want of timely repairs are considered, exceeding this amount upon single ships, we hope their Lordships will see fit to hold out a promise that it shall be accomplished when the estimates are produced next year; for however speedily ships may be put together by unpractised hands on sudden emergencies, there is no power that can replace Shipwrights or Seamen under the space of several years. We could also suggest that the wholesome practice of admitting apprentices into the dock-yards be returned to, as a means of binding the men to the King's Service, and making it their interest to rear up their children in the same employment.

Sir Edward Codrington returned to the charge on Tuesday se'nnight, and brought under the notice of the House another case of a half-pay officer who had been struck off the List without the preliminary form of trial; and the conversation which it gave rise to dropped, upon the understanding that the gallant Admiral would bring the question forward in a substantial form next session. Our own opinion as regards the King's prerogative to dismiss officers is already on record, and it is borne out by those of the ablest commentators, and the most celebrated writers, on jurisprudence; for although the prerogative in many cases has fallen into abeyance, still, in this respect, it has been maintained and exerted occasionally down to the present time. Instead, therefore, of endeavouring to combat a point of law, or to establish a principle upon which he will certainly be defeated, we submit that Sir Edward Codrington—than whom no officer is more zealous in standing forth to redress the wrongs, or advocating the cause of the humblest member of the profession—should rather prevail upon the Admiralty to establish some rule, beyond which they would not recommend to the Crown the exercise of a power which we know from good authority is extremely unpalatable to our gracious monarch.

It appears to us, that in all cases for which the law provides a remedy for a proved wrong, the party aggrieved should be required, in the first place, to make out his case to the conviction of a jury: for as half-pay officers are amenable to the laws like other persons, it does seem hard that extrajudicial measures should be instituted against them, supported, probably, by ex parte statements; and unless the Board of Admiralty are prepared to establish a kind of Court of Chancery for the filing of cross affidavits; to relinquish all other business in order to investigate the cases they may expect when they undertake to redress such complaints,—and even then they will find that they cannot devote sufficient time to inquire strictly into each,—unless, we repeat, they are prepared to cut out work for themselves which they may not anticipate, we would strongly recommend that they should not interfere in any case for which the law already provides a remedy. Should an officer be convicted by a jury, after an impartial trial, of any crime which they considered derogatory to the profession, they would then be justified in recommending his removal from the List.

But there are instances, like the one brought forward by the gallant Admiral, where the party is charged with fraudulent or dishonourable conduct, and cannot justify himself from the accusation to the satisfaction of the Board of Admiralty. These charges and recriminations generally originate in questions of debt, and frequently of complicated or disputed accounts, in the unravelment of which their Lordships cannot be expected to take very great pains. Now the two classes of creditors and debtors have, time out of mind, held very different opinions upon certain points. No matter under what circumstances the obligation might be contracted, the creditor, when he finds his debtor either unwilling or unable to pay, sets him down as little better than a swindler; on the other hand, the debtor, harassed and overwhelmed with law costs, often inflicted from feelings of revenge, and, probably ruined by the severity or implacability of his creditor, considers him in the light of an oppressor, whom he is now justified in thwarting, and in this mood their relative statements are made out. We do believe that nearly all cases of such conduct on the part of officers, which their Lordships consider unjustifiable, originate, or are actually caused by the feeling we have described above, and it therefore behoves those to whom the task of investigation is delegated, to make some allowance on this account in drawing their conclusions.

The Hampshire Telegraph, obliged to admit that the Vanguard "makes the best progress" of the ships composing Sir Charles Paget's squadron, resorts to a sinister attempt to detract from this superiority by stating, that "she is urged through the water with a greater number of square yards (of canvas) than the Britannia of 120 guns;" by which it is insinuated that the Vanguard has a greater spread of canvas than the Bellerophon, her competitor, of the same class, and other 80 gun ships.

Now it so happens that all our 80 gun ships have masts, yards, and sails of the same size; but the Vanguard's topmasts being of the new, and the Bellerophon's of the old, classification, the former ship has actually two feet less hoist in her topsails than the latter at the present time. Our contemporary cannot be supposed ignorant of this, and he must have no small belief in the gullibility of his readers when he advances such unworthy statements. However, let prejudice, ignorance, or partiality do its worst, it matters not—facts must finally prevail,—and the prognostications which Sir William Symonds's detractors so industriously circulated (that although capable of moulding a yacht or small craft, he would fail in that of a larger class), are falsified by the result of his having produced a Line-of-Battle Ship which is the admiration of every one capable of judging what a man-of-war should be.

But, notwithstanding the Vanguard is admitted to be superior to the ships of the squadron, her merits remain to be tried against others of her class, and, although we are certain that she will maintain her character in competition with these as regards velocity (her stability is already ascertained), it by no means follows that, under her present equipment, the ship's full qualities have been brought out; and as the object we wish to attain is, to possess a ship which shall excel all others, we suggest that when the present cruise is over she shall be tried with a larger spread of canvas, for, until the means are in her possession to exert all the propulsive force she can safely apply, we do not think the ship's capabilities will have been fairly tested. We would recommend that she should have first class, instead of second class masts and yards, and this need not involve greater expense in working the ship; for we find the St. Vincent under the former, and the Caledonia under the latter had the same complement of men.

If the object desired is to improve our ships of the line, then should every reasonable means be persevered in. Sir W. Symonds has evinced not only great skill in the construction of this ship, but sent her to sea stowed and trimmed under his direction, and the result is most favourable. Her superiority being established thus far, the object should be now to experiment, in order to ascertain whether any difference in the masts, or alteration in the trim, could effect improvement; and, although we are well satisfied with her present position, and firmly believe she will retain it in competition with tried ships, there is no reason that she may not greatly excel with superior means of developing her power.

Mr. James Stuart has been appointed Inspector of Factories. His district will be the north of England, Scotland, and the north of Ireland. Mr. Stuart some time directed the Editorial management of the Courier.

It is rumoured that Mr. G. Lyall, an eminent ship merchant of London, will offer himself as a candidate for the borough of Yarmouth, in the event of Mr. Praed declining to come forward at the next election.—Norfolk Chronicle.

The Earl of Charleville is a candidate for the present vacancy in the representation of the Irish Peerage, occasioned by the death of Lord Dufferin.

The inhabitants of Corsica have obtained permission of the Government to erect, by subscription, a monument to the memory of Napoleon in his native town. It is to be a column of granite, surmounted by a statue similar to that in the Place Vendome. The King's name stands at the head of the list of subscribers, followed by that of the Duke of Orleans. The Council General of Corsica has voted 30,000f., and that of the Seine 5,000l.

Reynolds, the informer, is dead. The nation is therefore saved the further expense of supporting in fashionable style, at Paris, one of the most perfidious scoundrels that ever polluted the earth and degraded human nature. —Morning Chronicle.

On Wednesday, an officer in the Navy was held to sureties to keep the peace towards a publican in the Hampstead-road, to whom he sent a written challenge to fight a duel. The sailor had been smitten by a relative of the landlord, to whom he made ardent love for a few days, and on Monday night, having his grog on board, he brought a coach to the door, and swore he would have his prize. This step was resisted by all parties, and after having broken the windows the officer retired, and sent the challenge the next morning.

An old officer on the retired list, living at Saintes, in the Charente Inferieure, a few days ago fell into a lethargy, and was buried with military honours, under the conviction that life was extinct; but, awakened by the firing of the platoon over his grave, which took place before the coffin was covered with earth, he made himself heard by his cries, was taken out, and walked home arm-in-arm with those who had believed they had taken their last farewell of him.—Galignani.

A celebrated man of fashion, well-known in the circles of high life, has eloped with the fair daughter of a Rev. Divine, residing in the neighbourhood of Portman-square. It is supposed the parties have gone to Scotland, whither a messenger was despatched after them on Sunday afternoon, information having been given of the parties setting off in a post-chaise and four early on Sunday morning, which was waiting for them in Oxford-street. The lady has made her exit with 300*l.* in bank notes, besides other property and wearing apparel to a considerable amount.

On Wednesday morning a Commission of Lunacy relative to Viscount Forbes, was proceeded with at the Camden Arms Tavern, Kensington. The jury, after hearing the evidence, and witnessing the demeanour of Lord Forbes, immediately decided "That Lord Forbes is of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself and his affairs, and that he has been so from 20th Sept. 1835."

The Nassuck Diamond.—The trustees of the Deccan booty have at length resolved on the disposal of the superb jewel, the Nassuck diamond, which was captured by the combined armies under the command of the Marquis of Hastings. Its weight is 35[illegible] grains. The determination of the trustees has been signified to Messrs.

Rundell and Bridge, in whose keeping this jewel has remained for these last ten years, by the Duke of Wellington, who has spared no pains to secure the interests of the various claimants. Descriptions of this celebrated diamond have been forwarded to India, Turkey, and all parts of the globe. The sale is announced to take place in London, in the latter end of July, in the ensuing year.

On Tuesday the Comet, Gravesend steam-packet, on her voyage to London, ran down a boat containing four gentlemen, in Bogby's Hole, between Greenwich and Woolwich. The steamer was coming up the river at full speed, and the boat, containing the four amateurs, who had been down the river to see Messrs. Robinson and Lewis practising previous to the decision of their wager, was going the same way. The Captain made signs for them to proceed in a particular direction, but from some misunderstanding, and alarmed by the velocity of the Comet, they did not do so, and the steamer struck their boat and run it down. Two of the party jumped out on one side of the boat, and two on the other, with great dexterity, in order to avoid the paddles, not more than two seconds before the collision took place, and thus saved their lives. The steamer was stopped, and a boat instantly lowered from the davits, which picked up one gentleman. The others were saved by the skiff of the Henry, Capt. Lambert, and other ships' boats, the men in which displayed praiseworthy alacrity. They were all taken to London in the Comet, and were provided with dry clothing. The boat was cut in two, and the escape of the gentlemen was really miraculous.

Capt. Sir Christopher Cole, K. C. B., Col. of Marines and late Member for Glamorganshire, died of apoplexy on Wednesday last at Killay, near Cardiff, where he had but very lately removed temporarily, while Penrice Castle was undergoing repairs.

Mr. Parker has been returned as Member for the borough of Sheffield, and the Hon. Charles John Canning, for Warwick.

The Earl of Kerry, and eldest son of the Marquis of Lansdowne, expired on Sunday noon, at Lansdowne House, after an illness of considerable duration. His Lordship was in his 26th year.

Lord Fitzroy Somerset and his Lady left town on Wednesday for Walmer Castle, on a visit to the Duke of Wellington.

The Master General of the Ordnance and his Lady have left town on a tour.

An interesting discovery has lately been made by the keeper of the regalia in the Tower. In clearing out some secret places in the Jewel-office, a Royal Sceptre was found, equalling in splendour and in value the others which are there exhibited. It is imagined, from the decayed state of its case, and the dust wherewith it was enveloped, that this Sceptre must have been thrown into that neglected corner in the confusion of Blood's well-known attempt on the Crown jewels, nearly a century and a half ago.

The Duke of Brunswick ascended with Mrs. Graham, the wife of the aeronaut, from Bayswater, on Tuesday afternoon. The balloon, on its rising, took a north easterly direction; and descended in a field near Doddinghurst. Here an accident occurred, which at this moment threatens to prove fatal to Mrs. Graham. When within a few feet of the earth, the Duke sprang out and fell upon his hands without injuring himself; the balloon thus lightened rapidly rose with Mrs. Graham in the car, and the lady, at a distance of nearly thirty feet, flung herself out, leaving the balloon to its course. She received some severe contusions, and was carried to Converse Farm, Doddinghurst, where she has since remained in a very precarious and almost hopeless state. Some surprise has naturally enough been created by the announcement that Mrs. Graham at the time of her ascension was enceinte, and the effect of the injuries she has sustained is the premature delivery of a still-born child.

Statue of George III.—This beautiful statue, so recently erected, has already undergone that mark of ill taste and want of due appreciation of the beautiful in art, which seems to be the fate of every work of any excellence which is exposed to public view in England, until the Vandal feeling has become a reproach of peculiar application to this country. On Wednesday night some miserable creature availed himself of the darkness to discharge, in cowardly concealment, an inky fluid over the stone pedestal on which the statue is placed; which, though it has done no permanent injury, will, for a time, present an unsightly appearance, and certainly is an insult to the better feelings of the public and to the character of the country.

At Union Hall on Wednesday John Frederick Muller, a man of military appearance, wearing mustachios, was charged with stealing a phaeton, the property of a coachmaker. The defendant hired the phaeton of the complainant, and borrowed 12*l.* of a pawnbroker on it. The Magistrate said a case of illegal pawning was clearly made out; and inflicted a fine of 20*s.*, and 2*l.*, the value of the phaeton, and in default of paying these sums, the defendant was to be committed for three months to hard labour in the House of Correction.

Thames Yacht Club.—The last match for the season took place in honour of the King's birthday on Monday last, in the presence of a highly respectable and numerous company, invited by the patrons of the Club to witness the interesting proceedings, and who where most handsomely entertained on board the Venus steam-vessel provided for the occasion. The following boats were entered:—Gazelle, 25 tons, Mr. Gunston owner, colour, white with red arrow; Telemachus, 21 tons, Mr. J. Williams, red and white diagonal; Lady Louisa, 13 tons, Mr. J. Smith, blue; Alert, Mr. W. Lyon, white with green cross; Princess Victoria, Mr. G. Barrow, crown on white flag. The boats started from Greenwich precisely at 11 A.M., the Lady Louisa took the lead, but getting foul of the Telemachus the Alert passed ahead and maintained her position until abreast of Woolwich, when the Gazelle, the favourite at odds, being a new boat, built by Mackay of Gravesend, passed her in grand style, and led the match to the close. As the breeze freshened it was evident that, barring accidents, the favourite must win, and at 1·43 P.M. she rounded the boat moored off Gravesend, followed by the Alert at 1·48, Victoria, 1·49½ Telemachus, 1·50, and Lady Louisa, 1·53. The boats were then obliged to reduce their sails, and the match at this time excited great interest between the Alert and Victoria, the latter now becoming second. At 5·12 the Gazelle rounded the boat off Greenwich, followed by the Victoria at 5·15, Alert, 5·20, and Lady Louisa 5·24. The cup, a very handsome one, was then presented to Mr. Gunston by Mr. Harrison, the Commodore, with the usual ceremonies. The liberal hospitality and polite attention for which this highly respectable Club is remarkable was, as usual, evinced upon this occasion. The excursion afforded the highest pleasure to the guests, and the match being uncommonly well-contested, appeared to give great satisfaction to the numerous spectators who lined the shores to witness it.

Lord Yarborough has sold his beautiful yacht, the Falcon, to a gentleman named Wade, a merchant in the City. His Lordship, we understand, intends to build a new one. In the absence of the noble Commodore at Cowes, the Earl of Belfast, Lord Clanbrock, and the Hon. Thomas Vesey, have been taking the lead this season in the Club.

Lady Craven has presented the fine yacht belonging to her deceased husband, with all its elegant fittings, bedding, and all other stores, boats, &c., to the Captain and Mate, to compensate them, in some slight degree, for the loss of their generous master.—Southampton Advertiser.

Captain Lyons' yacht, the "Breeze," won the cup at Cowes regatta on Monday. There was a smart trial between her and the Vampire, belonging to J. Lindegreen, Esq., but, through the stupidity of the Pilot, the latter was run aground off Leep, and lost so much time that she could not regain her station.

British Auxiliary Legion.—St. Sebastian, Aug. 18.—For the last three days we have been witnessing the saturnalia of one of the Irish regiments—the Tenth as they call themselves. This regiment, following the bad example set them by too many others, struck for pay, and refused to obey orders until their arrears were given them. No other alternative remained but to accede to their demand. The men had no sooner got the money, than they resolved upon a three days' spree, and a great portion have been setting all the rules of sobriety and equilibrium at defiance, and shouting, quarrelling, and staggering about the streets. One company has taken an oath not to serve any longer. Their officers have little or no influence over them. Symptoms of insubordination have also been displayed in the 7th reg., which had hitherto been orderly. The Artillerymen have continued to conduct themselves well. On receiving their arrears many of them handed over a greater part to their officers, to be remitted to their connections in England. Col. Colquhoun has permission to remain with the Legion until Nov. The Lancers too have behaved extremely well. The hospital at Santander is to be broken up on the 1st September, and the following officers attached to that establishment reduced:—Dr. Williams, Assist.-Insp. of Hospitals, Assist.-Staff.-Surg. Stone, Assist.-Staff.-Surg. Goldstone, D. P. Sheppard, Purveyor to Forces, Lieut. Gregson, Hospital Transport Department.

In addition to 200 recruits despatched to San Sebastian in the cutter General Evans, the cutter Osprey takes 50 Artillerymen. Col. Churchill, com. 3d reg., Capt. Tuwnly, Aide-de-camp to Brig.-Gen. Chichester, and Capt. Duncan, commanding the detachment, also go in the Osprey.

Bayonne, Aug. 16.—There arrived here this afternoon 144 deserters belonging to the British Legion. Don Carlos refused to receive them, and had them conveyed to the frontier, where our people conducted them to prison, to their great delight, as they were certain of being fed there. They appeared in a state of great want and misery.

O'Gorman, Esq., Consul at Bahia; J. Hesketh, Esq., Consul at Para; and James Stuart, Esq., Inspector of Factories, in the room of R. Rickerds, Esq., deceased.

Lord J. Russell has appointed W. Blamire, Esq., and T. W. Buller, Esq., Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales. The Archbishop of Canterbury has appointed the Rev. Richard Jones, M. A., a Tithe Commissioner for England and Wales.

The name of Lieut. Pearse, R.N., Warden and Director of Police, His Majesty's Dock-yard, Woolwich, was accidentally omitted in the presentations at the last Levee. The gallant officer was presented to the King by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Herbert Taylor.

Parliamentary Analysis.

On Saturday Parliament was prorogued by his Majesty in person, upon which occasion the Speaker addressed his Majesty at the bar of the House of Lords and recapitulated the business transacted in the course of the session.

The Royal Assent was given to several Bills.

The House of Commons met a little after 12 o'clock, and while waiting for the arrival of his Majesty, Mr. HUME rose to make some remarks on the conduct of the House of Lords, but while speaking the Honourable Member was interrupted by the Usher of the Black Rod, who came to summon the Speaker, by his Majesty's command, to hear the Royal Speech in the House of Lords.

THE KING'S SPEECH.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

"The state of the public business enables me at length to relieve you from further attendance in Parliament, and in terminating your labours, I have again to acknowledge the zeal with which you have applied yourselves to the public business, and the attention which you have bestowed upon the important subjects which I brought under your consideration at the opening of the session. The assurances of friendly disposition which I receive from all Foreign Powers, enable me to congratulate you upon the prospect that peace will continue undisturbed. I lament deeply that the internal state of Spain still renders that country an exception to the general tranquillity which prevails in the rest of Europe; and I regret that the hopes which have been entertained of the termination of the civil war have not hitherto been realised. In fulfilment of the engagements which I contracted by the Treaty of the Quadruple Alliance, I have afforded to the Queen of Spain the co-operation of a part of my Naval force; and I continue to look with unabated solicitude to the restoration of that internal peace in Spain which was one of the main objects of the Quadruple Treaty, and which is so essential to the interests of all Europe. I am happy to be able to inform you that my endeavours to remove the misunderstanding which had arisen between France and the United States, have been crowned with complete success. The good offices which for that purpose I tendered to the two Governments, were accepted by both in the most frank and conciliatory spirit, and the relations of friendship have been re-established between them in a manner satisfactory and honourable to both parties. I trust that this circumstance will tend to draw still closer the ties which connect this country with two great and friendly nations, with which they have so many important relations in common. I have regarded with interest your deliberations upon the Reports of the Commission appointed to consider the state of the dioceses in England and Wales, and I have cheerfully given my assent to the measures which have been presented to me for carrying into effect some of the most important recommendations. It is with no ordinary satisfaction that I have learnt that you have with great labour brought to maturity enactments upon the difficult subject of tithes in England and Wales, which ll, I trust, prove in their operation equitable to all the erests concerned, and generally beneficial in their re-ts. The passing of the Acts for Civil Registration, l for Marriages in England, has afforded me much sa-fartion. Their provisions have been framed upon se large principles of religious freedom which, with n regard to the welfare of the Established Church in s country, I have always been desirous of maintaining l promoting, and they will also conduce to the greater rmony of titles, and to the stability of property. It s been to me a source of the most lively gratification observe the tranquillity which has prevailed, and the ainution of crimes which has lately taken place in Ire-d. I trust that perseverance in a just and impartial tem of Government will encourage this good disposi-n, and enable that country to develope her great na-al resources.

" GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,—

" I thank you for the liberality with which you have ted not only the ordinary supplies of the year, but the ditional sums required to provide for an increase in my aval force. I am also gratified to perceive that you ve made provision for the full amount of compensation rmitted to the owners of slaves in my colonial posses-ns, and that the obligations entered into by the Legis-ure have thus been strictly fulfilled. The increased ductiveness of the public revenue has enabled you to et these charges, and at the same time to repeal or lnce taxes, of which some were injurious in their ects upon my people, and others unequal in their essure upon various parts of my dominions abroad. he present condition of manufactures and commerce ords a subject of congratulation, provided the activity hich prevails be guarded by that caution and prudence hich experience has proved to be necessary to stable sperity.

" MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

" The advanced period of the year, and the length time during which you have been engaged in blic affairs, must render you desirous of return-g to your respective counties. You will there re me those duties which are in importance inferior only your Legislative functions, and your influence and ex-ple will greatly conduce to the maintenance of tran-illity, the encouragement of industry, and the con-rvation of those moral and religious habits and prin-ples which are essential to the well-being of every mmunity."

The Lord Chancellor then, by command of his Ma-sty, declared Parliament to be prorogued till Thursday, 0th Oct., and the King left the House.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—We were premature last week in our an-uncement of the dissolution of the French Cabinet. Thiers had tendered his resignation, which had been nditionally accepted, a delay of four-and-twenty hours ing either allowed him or secured by him for coming a final determination. In the interim arrived the news m Spain of the Queen Regent's acceptance of the nstitution. This had the effect of banishing discord the time, and uniting all parties. The dissolution, wever, is an event that is still speculated upon as not likely to occur immediately.

Since the above was in type, the second edition of the rnal de Paris, published on Thursday night last, has ived. It contains the following bulletin, announcing dissolution of the Ministry:—"This day, at 3 o'clock, M. Thiers, Maison, Duperré, Passy, Sauzet, and let, placed their resignations in the hands of the ng."

Messrs Mole, Guizot, Duchatel, and Montalivet, are eady spoken of as likely to be members of the new binet, and M. Mole is designated by public rumour as future President of the Council.

SPAIN.—By a decree the Queen Regent not merely rmits, but orders and commands, the proclamation of e Constitution of 1812, "until the nation, represented the Cortes, shall expressly manifest its will, or shall dopt another constitution in conformity with its wants." nlatrava, Ferrer, and Gil de la Cuadra as Ministers, re appointed Ministers in the place of Isturiz, D'Ola-egui, Cabanero, and the Duke de Rivas: Calatrava is so charged to nominate, with as little delay as possible, uch individuals as he may think fit to succeed Galiano, Sarrio Agnso, and Mendez Vigo.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor has appointed Field Marshal Paskewitsch Generalissimo of the Army of the South, alled the army of Turkey. This army will be composed f four corps of infantry, two corps of cavalry in reserve, nd also a reserve corps of artillery. To these will be ttached the 18th Reg. of Cossacks, from Lesser Russia, which were formed in 1832. Each corps will consist of two divisions of infantry, each comprising six regiments of two battalions, and of one division of Hussars or Lan-cers. The two corps of cavalry will contain four regi-ments of Dragoons, four of Chasseurs, and eight of Lan-cers; the reserve artillery will be four batteries. The total will be 96 battalions, 120 squadrons, 216 pieces of cannon, and 9,000 Cossacks. The infantry corps will be commanded by Generals Golonin, Mouravieff, Rolt, and Kaisarow; the cavalry by Generals Geismar and Stran-simm; and the artillery by General Gerstentovein.

TURKEY.—The Prussian Officer (Baron Moltke) who some time ago laid before the Government of Turkey a plan for the more effectually fortifying of the Dardanelles, left Constantinople on the 9th inst., with instruc-tions from the Turkish Government to carry the plan into execution.

Theatres.

LYCEUM.—The only novelty this week has been the revival of the musical drama of Clari; or, the Maid of Milan, a piece which proved very successful some years since at Covent Garden Theatre. The heroine found a very pleasing representative in Miss Shirreff; she is the best Clari we have seen since Miss M. Tree. With all our recollections of Miss Love in the part of Vespina, we were perfectly well satisfied by Mrs. Fitzwilliam's admirable personation of that amusing character. The Jocoso of Mr. Wilson, Rolamo of Mr. Williams, and Nimpedo, were all excellent in their way. We hope soon to see something new at this theatre.

STRAND.—A new burletta called Blind Man's Buff was produced here on Monday evening, and was tole-rably well received. The author is mainly indebted to the excellent farce of Raising the Wind for no small portion of the plot, and character of his hero. The piece may run for a few nights, but it is not good enough for this theatre. The performers (particularly Attwood and Melville) exerted themselves in a praiseworthy man-ner for the success of the piece. We must have some-thing better.

QUEEN'S.—A new burletta, entitled Who's Afraid, was produced on Monday. The piece is a light unpre-tending trifle, and does not demand any lengthened cri-ticism. The performers one and all did their best for the author. On Thursday a new nautical drama in two acts, called Will Reckless, from the pen of Captain Ad-dison, was played for the first time to one of the fullest and most fashionable houses of the season, and was fa-vourably received. It is well got up, and to those who are fond of scenes full of bustle and confusion, escapes and combats, Will Reckless will be found amusing. John of Paris followed, in which Mrs. Waylett enacted the Princess, and delighted her hearers by the chaste and beautiful style in which she executed several of her fa-vourite ballads.

THE BRISTOL MEETING.

" For Bristol hie!" is the general cry
Of the scientific crew;
Where they mean to meet, and their turtle eat,
And talk of something new.

Ogdes will pry, with her lens-like eye,
In the depths of each tureen;
And mad Anathesis will sport a thesis
For a piece of fat so green.

And Geology, sans apology,
For a specimen will chatter;
But she'd rather see, so hungry is she,
A whole Saurian on her platter.

Chemistry precise, with skill quite nice,
Will test both stew and fry;
While Arithmetic to swallow won't stick,
"Any given quantity."

Geometry, too, without much ado,
Will solve the propositions;
What cubic feet she is able to eat,
And leave not a morsel the dish on.

And Algebra will from "roots" turn away,
With her learned friends to dine;
And Miss Hydraulics, bent on her frolics,
Will leave her water for wine.

Geography, with a drop in her eye,
Will "compass" what she's able;
And we know Statistics, though grave are his tricks,
Is ever good at a " table."

The Cyclopædia, like a walking India,
Prefers a treat to a treatise;
And its plain to know that, with high and low,
The end of this meeting meat is.

Court Journal.

A fire broke out on the night of the 18th inst., about 9 o'clock, in the lines of the 5th regt., at Secrole, Benares, which fortunately was extinguished, after burning for about half an hour, but not until several huts fell a prey to the devouring element.—Ibid.

Schloss Hainfeld; or, a Winter in Lower Styria. By Capt. Basil Hall, R.N. Whittaker and Co.

Our gallant author while in Italy with his wife and family, in the spring of 1834, unexpectedly received an invitation from the Countess Purgstall, a Scotch lady of seventy-eight, widow of an Austrian nobleman, in early life an intimate friend of Capt. Hall's father, to pay her a visit at her country place, the Schloss, or Castle, of Hainfeld, near Gratz. This Countess, the Captain surmises, was the original of one of Walter Scott's best drawn characters, "Diana Vernon," in "Rob Roy;" and from the circumstances brought before us, we are inclined to his opinion. The Countess, as Miss Jane Anne Cranstoun, was among the earliest of Sir Walter's friends, and long before he was known to the public she had discovered the secret of that mine of intellectual gold which has become in our day the established currency of fashionable literature in every part of the world; and unquestionably she was the means of introducing his first poem to the public. But though the volume contains some very interesting notices of the "Wizard of the North," the principal portion concerns the personal history of the Countess, and her recollections of men and things, all amusing, and so pleasantly told by our traveller, that we hope he will be induced to treat us with some further portions of what he terms "skimmings" from his journals. We extract a singular distressing story told by the Countess:—

"About eight or ten years ago, there lived in Gratz the widow of an officer in the Austrian army and her daughter. The girl's beauty is described by all who knew her, as of that dazzling and surpassing lustre which engaged the attention of every class of admirers. It united correctness of features with sweetness of expression; and to these were added, a native elegance of manners, and a kindliness of disposition, together with abilities and taste, which, had they been duly cultivated, would have fitted poor Leonora for the highest stations in any society. Unfortunately, this Leonora's mother was very unlike the pious matron in Bürger's well-known tale, for she taught her child to look any where but to heaven for protection; and, instead of seeking for a suitable alliance for her daughter, the sordid and infamous wretch dreamed only of the gain—the base pecuniary gain, which the girl's beauty might bring to herself. . . . In this horrid view she neglected her daughter's mind, or rather, she deliberately perverted it: while she spared no pains to bring forward and enhance the charms of her person. Her wicked purpose was but too soon known to the profligate and wealthy of the other sex, amongst whom this poor young woman may be said to have been put up to auction. . . . The highest bidder was a nobleman of the adjacent province of Hungary, who agreed to buy the girl, as if she had been a slave, for several thousand florins. The wily mother took his bond for the sum without any specification of the services for which it was given. On a stated day the Baron, who was a married man with a family, came in his own carriage, received his purchase, signed the bond, and drove off towards one of his numerous castles. Before he had gone half a league, however, he was met by a courier bringing letters which required his immediate presence at home; and as he could not well take his companion with him he drove back to Gratz with his victim, and requested the mother to give her lodging for a few days, till he could settle his affairs; after which he promised to return and take her away permanently. . . . The story soon got wind, and a wealthy commissary having caught a glimpse of the girl, at once made proposals to the mother, and she, without the least ceremony, and as might have been expected, re-sold the poor child, who, being still under sixteen, was allowed no voice in the matter. . . . By and by the first purchaser came back and demanded the completion of his bargain. 'What bargain?' cried the mother, laughing in his face. 'It is I who demand the completion of the bargain. Here is your bond for three thousand florins, for value received, and pay me you shall, if there be either law or justice in Austria.' . . . The Baron raved and stormed, refusing to pay a kreuzer; while the lady, dead alike to public shame and to private virtue, straightway went to law; and, although, of course, a bond expressly for such a horrid purpose would not have been held good in the courts, there could be no valid objection made to the instrument as it was drawn up. The Hungarian was accordingly obliged to pay the money, with costs. . . . Meanwhile, the commissary, getting tired of his bargain, cast off the poor ruined girl, who dropped, step by step, and with rapidity proportionate to her still radiant beauty, into the lowest depths of infamy, want, and sorrow! . . . In this wretched state she was accidentally seen by a young man, son of a wealthy proprietor in a village near Hainfeld. He brought her to the country with him, and she was no sooner relieved from the coarse depravity of her recent town life, than she recovered a sufficient portion of her former animation to engage the attention of one of the officers of a hussar regiment, quartered in the village. This young man, who was the son of an old and highly esteemed officer in the service of the Emperor, at first merely trifled with the girl; but ere long became passionately attached to her, and she to him, with a degree of violence highly characteristic of the national temperament when strongly excited. The result was not less so. . . . The Colonel of the regiment, well knowing the extent to which these things were sometimes carried, wrote to the young man's father, who, in conjunction with the Colonel, took every measure that could be thought of to break off so dangerous a connexion, but it proved in vain. It was now resolved, in order to prevent an unsuitable marriage, to detach the young officer on a distant service in Transylvania, and to send the girl, by force, back to her mother's house at Gratz. . . . As soon as these arrangements became known to the parties, they resolved to elope—he to desert from the army, she to accompany him. They escaped accordingly, at midnight—two ruined wretches, galloping to destruction and disgrace, whichever way their passions, altogether uncontrolled, might lead them! At daybreak their flight was discovered, and twenty mounted parties being sent off in as many different directions, the fugitives were soon arrested. They had got as far as Radkesburg, a town on the banks of the great river Mur, about four hours' drive south of Hainfeld. But as they stated that they were too much exhausted to go back immediately, the officer in command of the party who had arrested them, made no objections to their remaining at the inn, under a guard. This interval, which the good nature of the officer allowed them to pass together, they employed chiefly in writing letters. Their cheerfulness astonished every one who saw them, especially some officers of a regiment stationed in the town, and whose mess was held at the inn where the lovers were. An invitation to dinner naturally followed, and was accepted, under the sanction of the officer who guarded and accompanied them. After dinner, some one came running in to say that the ice which had dammed up the Mur had suddenly given way, and that what is called a Dilacle, was the consequence. The river, swollen to twice its usual dimensions, was gushing tumultuously through the arches of the bridge, filled to the key-stone with blocks of drift ice. . . . The officers all ran off to see the sight, and Leonora, having exchanged an intelligent glance with her companion, petitioned hard to be allowed to go too. The guard consented, and away they all went together. The awful scene had attracted half the population of the town. On the highest point of the bridge stood the group of officers, wondering and admiring. Leonora leaned over the parapet and observed the commotion with a steadier eye than any of the party; and then turning to her lover, exclaimed,—

"'Now, Wilhelm!'

"And, clasped in one another's arms, they flew headlong into the torrent, in which they were instantly swallowed up and lost!

"Two letters were found in the girl's handwriting. One of these addressed to the person who had brought her to the country: the other to her mother. In the first she said,—

"'You used to reproach me with having no heart, and of my being incapable of any heroic or noble action. I then believed that you were right in your estimate of my character. I did not believe that I could love any one, still less that any one could love me. Both, however, have come to pass. The close of my brief life will prove whether or not I can act nobly!'

"To her mother she had written the following bitter words:—

"'Before this reaches your hands, your most wretched daughter will be no more. Her blood be on your head. She possessed qualities which would have done you honour, and made her virtuous and happy, had you duly cherished them, or even allowed them to grow of themselves. Your avarice blasted them all. You taught me to consider vice a duty. You see the result. Your daughter has at last awakened to life and love—only to die in despair!'"

Captain Marryat's Mr. Midshipman Easy.—Mr. Nicodemus Easy was a gentleman who lived down in Hampshire; he was a married man, and in very easy circumstances. Most couples find it very easy to have a family, but not always quite so easy to maintain them. Mr. Easy was not at all uneasy on the latter score, as he had no children; but he was anxious to have them, as most people covet what they cannot obtain. After ten years, Mr. Easy gave it up as a bad job. Philosophy is said to console a man under disappointment, although Shakspeare asserts it is no remedy for tooth-ache; so Mr. Easy turned philosopher, the very best profession a man can take up when he is fit for nothing else; he must be a very incapable person indeed who cannot talk nonsense. For some time Mr. Easy could not decide upon what description his nonsense should consist of; at last he fixed upon the rights of man, equality, and all that: how every person was born to inherit his share of the earth, a right at present only admitted to a certain length; that is, about six feet, for we all inherit our graves, and are allowed to take possession without dispute. But no one would listen to Mr. Easy's philosophy. The women would not acknowledge the rights of men, whom they declared always to be in the wrong; and, as the gentlemen who visited Mr. Easy were all en of property, they could not perceive the advantages skirting with those who had none. However, they allowed him to discuss the question, while they discussed him to discuss the question, while they discussed a port wine. The wine was good if the arguments re not, and we must take things as we find them in s world. . . While Mr. Easy talked philosophy, Mrs. sy played patience, and they were a very happy couple, ing side by side on their hobbies, and never interfering h each other. Mr. Easy knew his wife could not derstand him, and therefore did not expect her to en very attentively; and Mrs. Easy did not care how h her husband talked, provided she was not put out her game. Mutual forbearance will always ensure doestic felicity. . . There was another cause for their eeing so well. Upon any disputed question Mr. Easy ariably gave it up to Mrs. Easy, telling her that she uld have her own way—and this pleased his wife; , as Mr. Easy always took care, when it came to the nt, to have his way, he was pleased as well. It is true t Mrs. Easy had long found out that she did not have own way long: but she was of an easy disposition, l as, in nine cases out of ten, it was of very little conquence how things were done, she was quite satisfied h his submission during the heat of the argument. Mr. sy had admitted that she was right, and if, like all n, he would do wrong, why what could a poor woman ? With a lady of such a quiet disposition, it is easy imagine that the domestic felicity of Mr. Easy not easily disturbed. But, as people have obved before, there is a mutability in human affairs. It s at the finale of the eleventh year of their marriage t Mrs. Easy at first complained that she could not oy her breakfast. Mrs. Easy had her own suspicions, erybody else considered it past doubt, all except Mr. sy; he little thought, good easy man, that his greatss was ripening;" he had decided that to have an heir s no Easy task, and it never came into his calculations that there could be a change in his wife's ure. You might have added to it, subtracted from divided it, or multiplied it, but as it was a zero, e result would be always the same. Mrs. Easy o was not quite sure—she believed it might be e case, there was no saying; it might be a mistake, e that of Mrs. Trunnion's in the novel, and therefore e said nothing to her husband about the matter. At st Mr. Easy opened his eyes, and when upon interrogating his wife he found out the astounding truth, he ened his eyes still wider, and then he snapped his gers and danced like a bear upon hot plates, with delight, thereby proving that different causes may produce ilar effects in two instances at one and the same time, he bear dances from pain, Mr. Easy from pleasure; and in, when we are indifferent, or do not care for anything, we snap our fingers at it, and when we are overed and obtain what we most care for, we also snap fingers. Two months after Mr. Easy snapped his gers, Mrs. Easy felt no inclination to snap hers, either om indifference or pleasure. The fact was, that Mrs. sy's time was come, to undergo what Shakspeare pronces, "the pleasing punishment that women bear," t Mrs. Easy, like the rest of her sex, declared, "that men were liars," and most particularly ports. . . But ile Mrs. Easy was suffering, Mr. Easy was in ecsta. He laughed at pain, as all philosophers do when s suffered by other people, and not by themselves. . . due course of time, Mrs. Easy presented her husnd with a fine boy, whom we present to the public as hero.

WILLIAM AND WINDSOR FOR EVER.

A NEW loyal song; the words by Mr. T. Tibdin. Sung at the celebration of His Majesty's birth-day, at the Castle Inn, the ayor of Windsor in the chair.

O, Windsor! bright jewel of Albion's Crown,
From our Henrys and Edwards till now,
That William increases thy royal renown,
And Adelaide graces thy brow!
Thou pride of old England, thou gem of our isle, Shall thy fame be forgotten? No, never!
While Britons have breath to exclaim, with a smile,
Here's our William and Windsor for ever!

Thy forest, thy town, and thy fair "merry wives,"
By our poets immortal are made,
And will ne'er be forgot while hilarity lives
In an isle which throws care in the shade.
"Herne's Oak" and a hundred successors may die,
But shall Windsor in story? No, never!
While loyalty's energies wake at the cry
Of William and Windsor for ever!

Thy Castle of chivalry's triumph, the scene
Where St. George his proud banner has spread O'er the ashes of Princes, whose actions have been Illustrious, nor die with the dead?
Shall thy halls, or thy heroes who graced them in turn,
Be slighted by memory? Never!
While the pride of past glory illumines each urn
We'll cry William and Windsor for ever!

Law.—There are no fewer than 461 barristers who attend and profess to practise in the Court of King's Bench; exclusively of 25 King's counsel, who attend that Court, and 18 Serjeants!

Domestic Economy.—The lady of a military officer, a Major Campbell, having the misfortune to lose her husband (who, by the way, she was asserted to have killed, rather by giving him, in a serious illness, the wrong medicine, or an overdose of the right) chose to bury the unfortunate gentleman thus: she would not go to the expense of a proper coffin, but desiring a soldier to knock together a few light planks, had his remains enclosed and interred in these. At a military funeral, as is well known, the black scarfs which cover the heads of the drums, and are purchased for the occasion, become, when it is over, the perquisite of the drummers; but Mrs. C., in a spirit of economy which was deemed anything but laudable by the regiment, had muffings cut from an old black silk gown of her own, and after the last honours had been paid to her deceased lord, she sent to the drummers to reclaim them!

Benefit of Clergy.—A man charged with burglary proved that, at the time alleged, he was in a distant church, listening to the sermon of a celebrated preacher, and was acquitted accordingly. "That," said another, "explains what I never before understood—the benefit of clergy."

The late Mr. Rothschild's manner of evincing kind feelings towards Solomon Herschel, the grand Rabbi of Duke's-place, had something in it which was both singular and whimsical. When any good speculation was afloat, Mr. Rothschild deposited on Dr. Herschel's account a certain sum, proportionate to his own risk, and whatever per centage or profit seemed therefrom was carried by him to the Rabbi, to whom he gave a full and true account, even to the utmost fraction. The millionaire on such occasions, invariably dined with the Levite, and the day was usually passed by the two friends in innocent hilarity and pleasing conversation.

Lord Stowell would sometimes make a sharp retort. When a late celebrated Duchess haunted the Consistory Judge, and inquired, "How his Court would manage if he himself should be guilty of a faux-pas?" he answered with a gallantry becoming the question, "That the idea of such an embarrassing situation had only occurred to him since he had become acquainted with her Grace."

Military Misery.—A party of young officers, quartered in a desolate spot in India, far removed from home, from female society, and from all other sweet social enjoyments of life, having one day dined together and talked over their miseries, became so desperately hypped, that fetching some barrels of gunpowder, placing one under each chair, and connecting them by a train, they then heated an iron red hot, and dared each other to apply it to the train. None, however, had nerve for this awful undertaking; yet one of these rash and infatuated young men only quitted the party to cut his throat!

Major Quill is to be appointed one of the Paymasters of the Irish Constabulary force. If poor Maurice were living he would surely apply to be made governor of a gaol, that he might be next door to his brother. He it was who exchanged into the 74th, stationed in Spain, that he might be near his brother in the 75th then in the West Indies.

The approach of the shooting season has set all the distinguished dog stealers at work. Pointers and setters are advertised in all quarters to be sold: so that gentlemen who have lost their dogs may have an opportunity of seeing them again.

Rattlin the Reefer.—"Whether Captain Marryat be the author, or last the editor, of this novel, it will be acknowledged in every way worthy of his well-acquired reputation. In some respects it displays a purer even greater than we find in his acknowledged productions. It is for the most part genteel, and throughout true to life on the quarter-deck. The characters of the Captain, the Doctor, and Rattlin being quite on a par even with Smollett. In its scenes and characters ashore it is equally, and in one instance perhaps more, successful. The episode of Josephine is a sketch of exceeding grace and beauty, while Mrs. Cansund is drawn with a power, brilliancy, and originality which few writers of fiction could rival. Horrica, who has thrown so much piquancy into Mrs. Trollope's books, has also been of some assistance to the Reefer with his spirited and expressive etchings."—Morning Herald.

Patience of Anglers.—"I remember a Thames fisherman, who, on my evincing some displeasure at not having the good sport he had promised me, very coolly told me that I should never make a good angler if I could not fish a whole day in a bucket of water without shewing impatience."

A retired surgeon, of the name of Wood, is still talked of at Hampton, as having braved the coldest weather in winter in order to follow his favourite diversion. He would get up before it was light, have his breakfast, and fish till it was dark, at a time when the wet was freezing on his line. He had always, however, a hot dinner brought to the boat, which must have kept him from starving in both senses.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the Individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 18, 1835."

From WILLIAM HANTESH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Grovills street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE.

—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Sick Headache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, and Gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, ringing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefitted by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes, and exceed credibility: in fact, there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE

PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from Indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons, T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons, W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 69, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANIC

PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Disease of either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose with ease, secrecy, and safely. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will never experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs by taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppresses the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than necessary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Cutaneous Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first introduced these pills to the public, may be considered interesting

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S., Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR CHOPKO,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed: but what I consider their most valuable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that have been the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any one that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

THE VEGETABLE SYRUP

DE VELNOS.—At this period of the year, when, from the increased heat in the atmosphere, inflammation of the blood, more frequent occurrence, the use of a medicine which could, without debilitating the system, must be evident and advantageous, if not indispensable. Of such a nature and properties experience of more than half a century has proved that the Vegetable Syrup is unquestionably possessed. It is of peculiar efficacy in correcting, purifying, and sweetening the blood in those who are afflicted with Scrofula, Scurvy, Scorbutic Affections, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from an impurity of the blood and juices, should, especially at this season, enter without delay upon a regular course of the Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this medicine in promoting insensible perspiration, is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure; it operates on the animal juices, and requires only the exercise or restraint of moderation in diet. It is dissolved in the chyle of the stomach, is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects the tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe, though a powerful, substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mineral occasions.

The Syrup is prepared by Mrs. Caaham, No. 59, Berners street, Oxford-street, and sold by her, and, with her authority, by all respectable Medicine Venders in town and country. Mrs. Caaham's recently published Treatise on Scrofula, Consumption, and Diseases of the Blood and Liver. Sold by Ridgway and Sons, 169, Piccadilly.

CAUTION.—The celebrity of LOPRESTI'S SAUCES, FLAVOURING CONDIMENTS, &c., having caused several unprincipled tradesmen to foist on the public innumerable counterfeits, which, with many persons unacquainted with the excellence of the genuine, have had much influence in prejudicing their patronage, the Proprietor of these Condiments, to prevent a recurrence of the like scandalous equivocal dealings with an unsuspecting public, requests they will use none but the Originals, and will peremptorily refuse every substitution of those rich combinations, whose delicate and piquante flavours cannot be imitated, but by that long culinary experience and thorough acquaintance with the exquisite palate of those judges, from whom he has for many years been honoured with a most distinguished patronage.—199, Piccadilly.

ANTI DRY-ROT COMPANY,
Constituted by Act of Parliament., 1836.
KYAN'S PATENT.
For Preserving Timber, Canvas, Cordage, Linen, Calico, Paper, &c., from Decay, so that neither Rot, Mildew, nor Insects will infect, destroy, or attack.
The Directors call the attention of the public to the following remarks on the efficacy of the process:—
1. Wood, however green, is directly seasoned, will defy decay, and never shrinks.
2. The waste by decay during the ordinary process of seasoning is prevented; the outlay of capital needless, foreign importation less necessary.
3. Timber of native growth, poplar, Scotch fir, birch, willow, &c., become available for all purposes of flooring, wainscoting, battens, &c.
4. In farm buildings, pailings, out-houses, conservatories, no painting is required for prepared timber, and thus alone an expense infinitely greater than the cost of saturation immediately saved.
5. In ornamented cottages, where decay is so rapid when the wood is green and the bark upon it, the process makes the bark hard as the wood itself.
6. In hop gardens its efficacy has been most triumphantly shown. Poles that have been three years in the ground may be seen at the Company's office, and so hard that a knife will scarcely penetrate them.
Tanks are established for the hop districts of Kent by Messrs. Ash, Hacker, and Davey, of Canterbury; and by Mr. Heathorn, of Maidstone.
The power vested in the Company is granted by them to private individuals and public bodies, either exclusively or not, as the exigencies of the case may be.
All particulars to be had at the Office, 2, Lime-street-square.

VINCENT'S GOWLAND'S LOTION.—
The exercise of discernment can never be of greater importance than when applied to the selection of articles for the service of the toilet; and even fashion, though delighting in change, has in this particular department given place to general and acknowledged utility, in awarding the permanent patronage with which GOWLAND'S LOTION is honoured. This elegant preparation has attained its celebrity by happily uniting the properties of a purifier of the skin from every habitual or incidental imperfection, with those of a preserver of the already glowing tints of beauty, furnishing, at this season, the only antidote to the effects of heat and relaxation, by refreshing the complexion and sustaining that healthy elasticity of the skin, on which depends continuance of the personal graces peculiar to youth. In the dressing case it holds the first place with all who can appreciate the advantages to be derived from a pleasing exterior.—Price 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. Observe, the genuine has "Robert Shaw, 33, Queen-street, Cheapside," engraved on the Government stamp. Sold there, and by all respectable Medicine Venders, Perfumers, and Druggists.

It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 95, Grace-church-street, and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 15s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—
Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently.
St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*
ORFIO THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.
G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.
* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL, £500,000,
With power to increase the same, if necessary.
In 100,000 Shares of 5l. each. Deposit, 1l. per Share. The remaining 4l. to be paid in two instalments, namely, 2l. per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.
Office, pro. tem., No. 39, Essex Street, Strand.
Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.
The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.
It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of the persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.
The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.
The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.
Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may [illegible] deposits of money at any time with the Company ([illegible] hereafter to be determined), for which he [illegible] so, and shall receive as Interest thereon, 5l. per cent. [illegible] And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares [illegible] pecuniary accommodation, shall always be [illegible] and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of [illegible] per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may [illegible] deposit of their goods, &c., as security.
Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.
Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.
A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.
W. MONTAGUE, Secretary.

INFANTRY.

4th—On Sat. the Fusiliers were again reviewed by the King. The Queen and the Princess Augusta were present, as was Prince Ernest of Hesse Philippsthal, and the whole of the Royal visiters, the noblemen and officers of the party appearing in uniform. The regt. executed the various movements with the greatest precision. A party of the 7th Hussars kept the ground, and the guard of honour was composed of a detachment of the 2d Life Guards. His Majesty gave a grand dinner in the evening in St. George's-hall to a numerous party, including the officers of the 2d Life Guards and of the Royal Fusiliers. The bands of both regiments were in attendance during the evening in the gallery of the hall. After several of the toasts salutes were fired from the cannons on the terrace.

19th—The service cos. arrived at Cove, on the 26th Aug., on board the Moira from Barbadoes. A comp. of the depot move from Killaloe to Butlevant 2d to 6th Sept., and remaining cos. and hd.-qrs. from 3d to 8th.

Rifle Brigade, 1st batt.—Depot under the command of Maj. Gossett marched from Portsmouth to Chatham on Friday.

1st West India—Wednesday morning Assist.-Surgeon Campbell, who was a fortnight ago gazetted to this regt., fell into the intrenchment at the Martello Tower, near Fort Pitt, and dreadfully fractured his thigh.

ROYAL ARTILLERY Head Qrs., Woolwich.—Previous to the monthly muster on Wednesday last, Gunner Johnstreet, 6th batt. (having received the punishment of 150 lashes, by sentence of Court-Martial,) was brought out from the hospital and marched through the ranks, the drums and fifes preceding him playing the "Rogue's March." In addition to his being a most incorrigible thief, this delinquent had repeatedly sold his regimental necessaries, even to the boots off his feet; therefore, to make an especial example of him, he was paraded barefooted, and thus, with increased obloquy, turned out of the corps; the fellow is quite a young man, and had served between seven and eight years. The net proceeds of the Bazaar (held last week), paid into the hands of the Rev. Mr. Heeslow, one of the Chaplains of the regt., who benevolently acts as Treasurer, were near 900*l*., a considerable sum to be collected in five hours only, and under the disadvantages of there being a Court-Martial, and a return match at cricket between the Officers and the Chislehurst Club the same day. The Officers kindly gave up their tent to the Bazaar or Fancy Fair. Another is to be held earlier in the ensuing season, which, it is confidently expected, with the aid of the sums voluntarily contributed, will bring up the fund to the required amounts. The Artillery quartered at Spike Island, Camden, Carlesfort, and the Powder Magazine, Cork, under the command of Lieut Smith, have been relieved by a party from Ballincollig.

Colonel Warrington, Consul at Tripoli, has transmitted to our contemporary the following memorandum respecting an incident in the memoir of the late Lord Blayney:—"In the United Service Journal for June, 1834, in speaking of the late Lieut.-Gen. Lord Blayney, it states, alluding to the action of Fuengirola—'Lord Blayney's horse, on that occasion, was killed under him at the battery.' Now Lord Blayney dismounted full half-a-mile from it, before the charge took place." [We have reason to know that Lord Blayney made the statement as published in the Memoir.—ED. N. and M. G.]

GRENADA.—It is reported that Sir Lionel Smith has strongly recommended to His Majesty's Government the propriety of making Grenada the head-quarters of the Army and Navy, and also the residence of the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Windward and Leeward Islands, instead of Barbadoes.

RESIGNATIONS AND RETIREMENTS DURING THE LAST MONTH.—Major—Watts, 75 F. Captains—Sturges, 2 Dr.; Jekyll, Gr. Gds.; F. Bell, 12 F.; Bayly, 17 F.; Denham, 34 F.; Seton, 35 F.; Stewart, 71 F.; Logie, 72 F.; Gossett, 76 F.; Raines, 77 F.; Browne, 80 F.; Mackay, 92 F.; Telford, 96 F. Lieutenants—Jones, 1 F.; Steele, 17 F.; Fenton, do.; Pearse, 35 F.; Manby, 81 F.; Herlihy, 1 W. I. R.; Braybrooke, Coyl. Rif. R.; Clarke, R. Afr. Col. C. Cornet and Ensigns—Wilkinson, 2 Dr. Gds., Shuttleworth, 12 F.; Wright, 30 F.; Gibbons, 55 F.

Major-Gen. Elliee will relieve Maj-Gen. Sir W. Cotton in the command of the Western District in Oct.

The Arab transport arrived on Monday from Quebec, which she left on the 18th ult., with invalids, under the charge of Lieut. Smyth, 79th Highlanders, returned Ordnance Stores, and 29 military convicts, transported for desertion. Col. Sall, the Commandant at St. John's, was coming home on leave of absence in the Neptune merchant ship, when the command of the garrison would devolve on Major Law. Governor Prescott and family were quite well. The Katherine Stewart Forbes and Stakesby transports were at Halifax; the first-named is to bring home the 92d regt., and the latter the 1st batt. of the Rifle Brigade. Col. Bridgeman (from Barbadoes) came home in the Arab.

An Officer of the 2d West India Regt. acts as Superintendent of the Settlement of Honduras, until the arrival of the New Governor, Colonel M'Donald, Royal Artillery. The emoluments of the situation are said to amount to 3000*l*. per annum.

"It has come to our knowledge," says the United Service Journal, "that a pair of colours, once the consecrated banners of a British regt., are exposed for sale in a Jew's shop near Charing Cross. The fact, which cannot be doubted, argues either extreme ignorance or bad taste in the quarter that thus degrades a national emblem which good feeling and sound policy unite to render sacred under all circumstances. The burning of the colours of the 2nd batt. 8th regt., from the same motives of veneration which would prompt a similar ceremony towards the relics of an honoured friend, was made, very properly, the subject of grave censure on the part of the military authorities. These circumstances suggest the expediency of some systematic proceeding with regard to disused or replaced regimental colours, which, if not preserved as heir looms by the colonels of regiments, might, with more propriety, be deposited in Chelsea Hospital." [We agree most fully with our contemporary, that Regimental Colours ought to be sacred. If we are rightly informed, those referred to are of the 67th regiment.—ED.]

REVIEW AT WINDSOR.—This morning, at ten o'clock, a grand review of the 1st and 2d regiments of Life Guards, one of Royal Horse and Foot Guards, two of Lancers, and three others of light cavalry, will take place in the Great Park, in the presence of their Majesties.

PORTSMOUTH, Sept. 2.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A Board of Admiralty (having been joined by Meek, Esq., Comptroller of Victualling, and G. L. Taylor, Esq., Civil Architect), completed their business at this port on Saturday. After visiting the Naval College, they embarked in the Firebrand, and proceeded to Plymouth, which port they arrived on Sunday night. On Monday their Lordships gave a public dinner in Admiral Lord Beauclerk, Rear-Admiral Sir C. Pegel, the Captains, and Heads of Departments. They have inspected the Bellerophon, Vanguard, Hercules, Pembroke, Minden, Cornwallis, Malabar, and Russell, and ordered the Cornwallis and Malabar to Lisbon. This day (Friday) the Board is to embark in the Bellerophon (the flag-ship) for a passage to Pembroke, to inspect that dock-yard. The squadron is to accompany them. The Numa tr., Lieut. Howe, R.N., arrived on Friday night in quarantine from Corfu, with a detachment of Artillery and invalid soldiers, some Ordnance and other stores, and has since gone to Woolwich.

Prince Regent tr., Lieut. Scrymgour, R.N., arrived on Monday from Gibraltar, with the head-quarters of the 79th Highlanders, and has since received orders to convey them to Leith. Pantaloon, Lieut. Corry, sailed on Tuesday from Plymouth, to join the cruising squadron. Ariadne has been taken into dock, and is fitting as a coal depot. Conway, 28, having been repaired, has been hauled into the basin and masted. She is expected to be put in commission next week. The Cracker cutter came in from Heating on Wednesday, and sailed yesterday for Jersey, to protect the fishery. Fairlie emigrant ship, with Governor Sir John Franklin, R.N., his family, &c., sailed for Hobart Town on Monday, and the Eden convict ship, on Tuesday. The Beacon went out of harbour on Thursday, and will sail on Sunday for the Mediterranean, to resume her surveying occupation. Pique will bend sails and go to Spithead next week. Ships in Port—Beacon at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Inconstant, Pique, Royal George yacht, Excellent, in harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, August 31st.—(From our own Correspondent.—A mooring buoy came down here from Pembroke yard on Monday morning, for the purpose of taking on board the Brille, to which the Gibraltar lazaretto is at present attached, in order to its being transferred to the Mulgrave. The Carysfort was taken into dock at Paterchurch on Wednesday last. Having been coppered and ballasted, she was undocked on Monday to make room for the Mulgrave. The Mulgrave was docked on the same day and remains, having her copper examined and repaired. The Crenid lighter was launched from Pembroke yard on Monday last. Capt. Savage, R.E., superintending the buildings at Hobbs' Point packet station, has reported the works wholly complete, we expect a removal of the establishment to that place on the 1st of October. The Warrant Officers at Pembroke have, in compliance with the new regulations to that effect, been placed on the check of the Royal Sovereign yacht, which ship is the only one in commission at this port. Why Milford Haven is thus neglected, we cannot possibly say. Lieut. Wade of the Royal Marine detachment up this haven, has been invalided, and is gone back to his division at Plymouth for the benefit of hospital assistance.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, Sept. 2nd.—(From our own Correspondent.—The Lightning Admiralty st.-yt., Lieut. Shambler, returned on Sunday last, having landed Lord Granville at Antwerp, after a fine passage of twenty-four hours, but it blew a gale of wind all the way back. The Unite has been stripped of her housing. The Columbine, Master Henderson, has been under the sheers in this yard to have her boilers taken out, and has been unrigged for refit. Mr. Pinhoro, Clerk, and Mr. Symons, Second Master, have been appointed to the Alban, Lieut. Tinling, while she is having new wheels (Morgan's patent), and is to be brought forward with all possible despatch. The Bee st.-v. is to be sent up to the City Canal to get new engines of increased power. Mr. Brown, the late Master-Attendant, has left the yard this week, and Mr. Tinmouth will commence the duties of his new appointment next

The Engineers have been actively employed on the Conflance st.-v., which is to be commissioned this month. Mr. Colvin, late Surgeon of the Prince Regent yacht, is appointed to the William and Mary yacht, Capt. Sir S. Warren. The Rhadamanthus st.-v. has crossed her yards, bent her sails, and has been hauled out of the basin into the river alongside the Salsette hulk; she is now not merely ready for commissioning, but almost ready for instant employ. Information has been forwarded to the Commander of the Alban, Lieut. Tinling, that three of his crew, Alexander Browne, Edward Rose, and Joseph Yolland, have been brought before the Mayor of Exeter, charged with having been found at 3 o'clock A.M., in the "Exquisite" coach at the London Inn. They stated to his Worship, that having got leave to go ashore, they had stayed beyond the time by accident, and the vessel had left Plymouth without them; they will be permitted to join the ship when she goes round again, as they bear good characters.

PLYMOUTH, Sept. 1.——The Sheldrake packet went out of harbour on Friday, and sailed the next day for Falmouth. The Russell, 74, was undocked on Tuesday. The Magnet packet went out of harbour on Friday, and sailed on Monday for Falmouth. On the Comus being paid off one last week, the seamen and marines belonging to her contributed 2*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* towards the funds for providing for destitute female orphans, which is under the direction of the Seamen's and Marines' Orphan Committee. The Lisbon mails, which have of late years been conveyed by men-of-war brigs, are now to be taken by the regular packets, the number of which is being increased. A portion of them will carry the Lisbon mails regularly for three months, and then be succeeded by others. The squadron under the command of Rr.-Adm. Sir C. Paget, consisting of the Bellerophon, Vanguard, Pembroke, Malabar, Cornwallis, Hercules, Scylla, and Patridge, arrived here from a cruise on Saturday last. On their arrival the Cornwallis and Malabar were ordered to Lisbon with provisions, &c. The former sailed on Monday morning and the latter on Tuesday. The Scylla is come into harbour to be docked. In harbour—Royal Adelaide, Sans Josef, Russell, Fly, Scylla. Phœnix st.-v., Firebrand ditto, Patridge, Hope packet. In the Sound—Bellerophon, Vanguard, Minden. Pembroke, Hercules, Madagascar, Scorpion, Emerald under.

Vice-Adm. Sir J. Rowley, in the Caledonia, with the fleet under his orders, were at Zante on the 25th July, all well; they expected to sail that day for the eastward. The letters give no news. The Malta papers are up to the 3d Aug. The Ceylon was the only vessel there.

We are sorry to state that Com. Curtis, of the Vanguard, has gone to sick-quarters in the neighbourhood of Plymouth.

Lieut. Wm. M'Ilwaine (1824), Flag-Lieut. to Rear-Adm. Sir J. Maitland, is to have the Volcano new steamer, in the Basin of Portsmouth Dock-yard, but will not commission her until she has been to Woolwich, and fitted with engines, boilers, &c.

The Portsmouth and Cowes Regattas took place last week, and attracted a number of the lovers of aquatic sports to both places. On Monday the King's cup, value 100 guineas, was won by Mr. Lyons' cutter, the Breeze, beating three others, and during the time of the race the Falcon, Lord Yarborough's late yacht, passed out of the harbour, bound to London, with a merchant's ensign flying, having been disposed of by his Lordship, who, it is said, intends building another, but of which intention there are some doubts. The Royal Yacht Club dined together on Tuesday, and in the evening there was a ball. On Wednesday the ladies and bachelors' cup, valued at 50 guineas, was won by Mr. Gibson's yacht, Theresa, after a very interesting contest with the Amazon and three others in a staggering breeze. At Portsmouth there were several matches extremely well-contested, with a splendid ball at the King's rooms on Tuesday evening; and the numerous prizes being adjudged to the watermen and others of the port gave very general satisfaction to rich and poor.

SWEDISH NAVY.—The total of officers and men is 35,691. There are 9 Admirals; 24 Captains of ships; 16 Captains of frigates; 100 First, and 76 Second Lieuts.; 17 officers for the superintendence of building and naval architecture, 12 for hydraulic works; 340 sub-officers of the Navy; 555 pupils as sub-officers, who are divided into seven companies, and 400 Midshipmen, from whom those pupils are taken; 784 Masters and workmen on permanent pay; 8079 permanent seamen, composing 33 companies, and 13,706 conscript sailors: besides these, the Marines consist of 33 officers, 40 sub-officers, and 1500 Corporals and Privates, composing three battalions of 15 companies, of whom there are two battalions of 10 companies enrolled or permanent, and one batt. of five companies of conscripts. The Naval stations are—Stockholm, Goetcborg, and Karlskrona, for ships of the line: those of Stockholm and Goetcborg, where the flotilla is stationed, are in communication through the great Canal of Goeta, which affords them the means of uniting, without being exposed to any disasters by sea, or to any attack from an enemy.

Mr. J. Appleby, Boatswain, and Mr. J. Daniells, Carpenter, have been supernumerated, the former at 65*l.*, the latter at 27*l.* 8*s.* per ann.

A great indulgence has been given to the Warrant Officers, respecting their monthly allowance and allotment, as the following statement will show:—

A report is prevalent that the building now used in Portsmouth Dock-yard as a Naval College, and the building opposite to it, erected for the occupation of the superior class of Shipwrights, are to be converted into a barrack for the Rl. Marines, and that Mr. Taylor, the architect of the Admiralty Board, has surveyed it for the purpose. A much better barrack could be attained, at little cost, by adding the large store in the New Gun-wharf, on which the clock is placed, to the Marine Artillery Barracks, and which store is now scarcely used, with the additional advantage of plenty of parade ground, and a superior facility of communicating with the water.

Capt. Searle has commenced entering men and boys on the new system, on board the Victory, at Portsmouth. The Marines have been disembarked, and replaced by a party consisting of a First Lieut., a Serj., Corporal, Drummer, and 21 Privates. The following Warrant Officers have been appointed to her:—W. Jeffreys, Gunner; J. Ward, Boatswain; W. Cooper, Carpenter; R. Herlfield, Act. Sec. Master, in charge of the Lively; D. Blackeyl Act. Sec. Master, in charge of the Drake; J. King, Act. Master, to be in charge of, and S. Cook, First Master's Assist., and J. Huntenton, Sec. Master's Assist., to be employed in the Messenger st.-vessel.

The Racer, 18, Com. Hope, arrived at St. John's, Newfoundland (the day before the Arab sailed thence), on 4th Aug., in five days, from Halifax, with money for the Commissariat.—The Rainbow, 20, Capt. Bennett, was on the Western shore of Newfoundland, protecting the Fishery.

The Impregnable, fitted as a demonstration ship at Plymouth, is ordered to be dismantled.

The Colonelship of Mariner, vacant by the decease of Sir Christopher Cole, will not be filled up.

The Goldfinch packet, Lieut. Collier, arrived at Falmouth on Wednesday evening, from Rio Janeiro, with mails from thence to the 26th June, from Bahia July 4th, and Pernambuco to the 9th. The Delight packet arrived at Rio on 25th June; the Dublin was at anchor there; the Cleopatra sailed from Bahia on 4th for Rio Janeiro. The Hornet, 6, Lieut. Coghlan, had detained the Vencedora, a slave ship; but, because our English Colonial Office had neglected to furnish the Hornet with the formal authority to seize slave vessels, the Mixed Commission at that place had refused to condemn her, and had declared that she was unwarrantably captured. Doubtless the flag-ship made a prize of her immediately; she at least was properly authorised. The Harrier, 18, was at Buenos Ayres on the 27th May. The Goldfinch, off Scilly, passed Sir Charles Paget's squadron, composed of the Bellerophon, Malabar, Cornwallis, Hercules, Vanguard, Pembroke, Partridge, and Scylla.

The Childers was at Gibraltar, and the Magicienne at Cadiz, on the 12th ult.

The Numa, Ir., Lieut. Howe, Agent, arrived on the 27th ult. at Portsmouth from Corfu and Zante, with returned Ordnance Stores, a company of Rl. Artillery, and detachments of different regiments of the line, invalided soldiers, women and children. She left the former place the 23d, and the latter on 26th June last. On 21st June, the British squadron, under Sir J. Rowley, sailed from Corfu for Patras, comprising the Caledonia, Edinburgh, Thunderer, Revenge, Canopus, and Vernon. The Barham left Malta about 27th May for the Dardanelles; the Sapphire was stationed at Corfu and Ionian Islands; the Medea steamer frigate was with the Fleet. The Numa, on her passage, and off Cape Bond (African shore), saw a French squadron of four sail of the line, and one corvette, supposed for the Ionian Islands. The Numa left Gibraltar on 30th ult. The Prince Regent, transport, was to sail for England in about a week after; she has on board the head-quarters of the 42d reg. from Corfu, and may be expected daily: the Parmelia may be also daily expected from the Mediterranean. The Numa proceeded to Woolwich.

On Sunday the Persian Princes, accompanied by Capt. Cogan and a party, visited the Royal Yacht which His Majesty has commanded to be sent to the Imeum of Muscat, in return for the Liverpool (now the Imaum), 74, presented by that Prince. Their Highnesses expressed the most lively admiration at the splendour of the vessel, and were evidently much gratified by the attention of Capt. Cogan, whose experience in the Indian Navy had suggested many arrangements peculiarly suited to the climate of Muscat, and to the habits of the Imaum, who is married to a sister of these Princes. In the centre of the deck a space is enclosed by a full drapery of curtains, forming a pavilion, richly carpeted, and having an Eastern musnud or ottoman and pillows covered with crimson velvet, and profusely ornamented.

The Cove, Capt. Ross.—Extract of a letter from an officer of this ship, dated North Yarmouth, 24th Aug., 1830: "Our cruise has not terminated in the result which we anticipated on leaving England; we have not been able to ascertain the fate of the remaining ship, and I am afraid there are but few hopes to be entertained of her existence. Davis' Straits and Baffin's Bay were full of ice when we left, and no appearance of a break up; a worse season has scarcely ever been seen. Our passage out was very severe. We examined along the edge of the ice, as far as possible, till we arrived at an impenetrable barrier; touched at two or three Danish settlements on the coast of Greenland, after which we returned along the ice to the Labrador coast, to see if she might be down there. We are last from a Missionary's settlement on the Labrador coast, called Akkeond have had a most beautiful passage across, being only three weeks to-morrow since we left it, which we were as many months about in going out; we have done as that our means would allow, in one vessel. The Admiralty promised to send other ships out, which did not arrive, as our cruise was at an end. We left all the whale fleet of 60 ships, on the 2nd of July, in 71 N. lat., not able to proceed for the ice, and no fish; very bad prospect, but towards the end of the season it may turn out more favourable."

East India Intelligence.

Sir Charles Metcalfe has accepted the office of Lieut.-Governor of the Western Provinces. The Court of Directors, as a mark of their sense of his services, have sanctioned the continuance to him of the allowance of a Governor of Agra. He is to have two Secretaries, and the guidance of our relations with the Frontier States. Sir Charles Metcalfe was to have embarked the 2d April for the Western Provinces.

A petition has been presented to the Governor-General, signed by 143 inhabitants of Bengal, against the proposed act which is to give a single Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut the power of reversing the decisions of the District Judges.

Goomsur.—Intelligence has been received from the seat of war, which promises an immediate termination to the harassing warfare. The chief firebrand, upon whose head 5000 rupees was set, has been taken, with several of the late Rajah's family, it being now almost certainly ascertained that his death has taken place.

Instructions have been received from the Government of India that Jaulnah shall be re-occupied as a military station, the Force to be under the general control of the Officer commanding the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, but the immediate command will be exercised by the Senior Officer present, or by an officer specially selected. The officer in command will be entitled to the allowance of 500 rupees per mensem, and if he be the Senior Officer belonging to a regiment with the Force, he will not retain the command of his own corps.

The Governor of Bombay has published an order, stating that the resolution of Government, declaring that every Writer should pass an examination in the Mahrattee or Guzerattee language in addition to the Hindoostanee, before his promotion to the second step, had been overlooked in the promotion of the Junior Civil servants. It is accordingly notified, that in future no one will be considered entitled to promotion to a first or second Assistantship without having first passed an examination in the vernacular language of the country in which his promotion shall take place. In the event of any emergency occurring which shall imperatively require a relaxation of the rules heretofore published, the Governor reserves to himself the liberty of relaxing such rule as far as may be necessary; but the case shall never be considered or referred to as a precedent.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FORMING A LOCAL AND TEMPORARY POLICE FROM THE OUT-PENSIONERS.

Number of Out-Pensioners as per Army Estimate 1835,—80,740.

The Out-Pensioners are at present paid their pension quarterly in advance at the Excise-Office in the principal towns; and as the Recruiting and Militia Staff are generally stationed there also, it is recommended that at every payment of the pensions the Staff should attend.

A classification of the Out-pensioners should be made agreeable to the strength of the Staff at the station; and to each class or squad of sixty or eighty pensioners should be attached a non-commissioned Officer, to be called a Superintendent. These Superintendents should witness, and sign as such, the certificate of payment which is to be delivered to the Collector of Excise, and also to keep returns of the pensioners of their squad. The Superintendents to report to the Officer of the division, and the Officer to the Magistrate or Deputy Lieutenant of the district, who, in case of riot, may be authorised to order them to be assembled at their place of rendezvous, where they would be met by the Superintendents, and be in readiness to be sworn in as Special Constables by the Magistrates, in which case they should be issued to them staves, and also a distinguishing strap to be worn on their arm, similar to those of the London Police.

It is well known to every Military man at all acquainted with the habits of old soldiers, that, in case of riot, if they are not under control, and employed on one side they will join the other. This has been proved by indisputable testimony at the riots at Nottingham, in Wales, at Bristol, and other places.

In addition to the eighty thousand seven hundred Out-Pensioners of Chelsea, there are also the Out-Pensioners of the Royal Marines, likewise the registered men, and the men discharged on gratuities, making at least one hundred thousand discharged soldiers. Is it not, therefore, desirable that they should be under a certain degree of control, when it can be effected at a very small expense? Indeed, if the pension which is now paid quarterly in advance could be paid monthly, it would be more beneficial to the pensioner, and a saving to the public. The saving occasioned by the men who die in the two first months of the payment, which in such a number as eighty thousand must be considerable, and more than sufficient to pay the Superintendent for extra duty.

Having been twenty years Commandant of the Invalid Depot, during which time at least nine-tenths of these pensioners were invalided by me, and being, from experience, acquainted with their feelings and capability, I respectfully offer the above suggestions; and, should they be taken into consideration, and likely to be adopted, I can draw out more explicitly Forms of Returns, &c. &c., which may be required.

Archid. Christie, Col.

Classification of the 80,740 Out-Pensioners:—

1st Class.—Fit for garrison duty.

2nd Class.—Fit for garrison duty, but in consequence of having —— children under fourteen years of age, to be employed only locally.

N.B.—In such places where there is neither a Recruiting nor a Militia Staff, there are always half-pay Officers and Serjeants on the Pension List, who could be employed.—United Service Journal.

Patriot services all bear a close resemblance to each other in their organization and general conduct. Those individuals who have served in the Columbian, the Brazilian, the Venezuelan, or the Mexican services, all tell very much the same tale. The majority of the volunteers are undoubtedly mercenaries; but as they fulfil the terms of their contract, and are thus far men of integrity, they expect their employers should do the same. Among them there are a few men of honour and character, who give up a certain position in their own country, and a few younger volunteers, who are enthusiastic in the cause. Except on compulsion, as in the instances of Lord Cochrane and Captain Napier—the threatened or actual sale of your own ship being the only means of obtaining prize-money for the ships taken, or fair settlement of pay from the government—the officers and men engaged in patriot services have scarcely ever met with any just remuneration. In the land-service the troops are much worse off, having no property as security in their own hands. The government, having had its ends answered, generally gets rid of all the foreigners in a valiant style, snapping its fingers, through the medium of some irresponsible officer, at all agreements. Sometimes they also manifest a misplaced feeling of the vindictive. Thus: we may be sure in all these cases (and this is just the same in all regular services, only there is not a similar opportunity of manifestation), that among the adventurers there will be some thorough going rogues, who, having received the two or three months' pay in advance, take the first opportunity of decamping without seeing a shot fired, and before they even land in the country. The said governments are apt to visit this swindling trick upon the very men who go through the whole campaign, and stand by them to the last. Rogues find a booty in patriot services, and the patriot governments swindle the honest men to make up for the deficiency. This is just what the Mexicans did in 1825 and 1826. Through the intervention of foreigners, chiefly English, the Mexicans established their independence with the fall of the castle of St. Juan Ullon, the last strong-hold of the Spaniards in that country. No sooner was this accomplished, than captains and colonels and generals, who had never even seen an army of one thousand men, and commodores and admirals who were literary only competent to manage a small boat, and for the most part had never once set foot upon the deck of a square-rigged ship, became numerous as the gold-laced streets of Vera Cruz. But towards the handful of the survivors who had actually effected the reduction of Ullon, they manifested neither gratitude nor common honesty. We are not ashamed to confess that we were personally engaged in this struggle, but we are ashamed of the Mexican government. The history of this expedition would, however, be found to bear a strong resemblance in principle, or the utter want of principle, to those of the others we have named, and to the treatment of the British Auxiliary Legion in Spain.

Bannister and Bensley.—Bensley had been in the army, and when he thought proper to unbend from his dignified stateliness was prone to the relation of his moving accidents by flood and field. Whenever the name of any foreign station occurred in conversation, Bensley would exclaim, "I was there in —— such a year, and served under (such a General) as Lieutenant, &c. &c." C. Bannister (against whose punning propensities Bensley waged war) had noted down all these assertions for many months, and on one particular evening, after a coolness for some days between the tragedian and himself, proposed his health in the following words:—"Gentlemen, I rise to drink the health of one who has fought the bubble reputation even in the cannon's mouth; who, quitting the field of fame, bespoke her trumpet to blay forth his eulogies in the path of the drama. The scenic powers of my friend Mr. Bensley you all know, you all appreciate (loud plaudits, and Bensley, overcome by gratitude, fervently squeezing Bannister's hand); but, Gentlemen," continued the relentless humorist, "it is as a defender of his country that I rise to drink his health; he has fought, he has bled for Old England!—(tremendous applause, and Bensley bowing his acknowledgments). He was a Captain in the —— regiment at Calcutta —— in ——. He was at —— in —— He led the forlorn hope at —— in 17—. (Here B. enumerated all the places Bensley had ever mentioned in his moments of exhilaration, to the tragedian's dismay). "Gentlemen," concluded Charles, "my friend's age is but 46, he has been 20 years on the stage—I find, therefore, by accurate calculation, that he must have carried a pair of colours when only 18 months old—an instance of precocity, power, and courage, unexampled in the history of the world." Poor Bensley took this exposé so much to heart that he never afterwards appeared in the room.—New Monthly Mag.

THE NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES.

Sir,—It is indeed, as you have well stated, painful to reflect that the mistaken policy of the Government at the conclusion of the late war should have caused us to cede to France and to America the right, not only to catch fish on certain parts of the shores of the Island of Newfoundland, and of the Labrador, but also to cure them on shore, in specified places, on both of these territories; and, as though a fatality seemed to attend our statesmen in making these most unwise concessions, the parts given up were of the very best for catching fish in those colonies! Not content, however, with these advantages, the American and French fishermen are constantly committing aggressions on the property of British subjects, with the view of extending their own fishing stations, by making the English fishermen abandon the settlements which they possess near to those of their rivals; and thus, as you have truly observed, the audacity of the aggressors has arrived at a height which can no longer be tolerated.

The system pursued, both by France and America, in carrying on these Fisheries, is far superior, as regards the raising of seamen (which is of paramount consequence), to that now carried on by us, for whilst our present race of fishermen in Newfoundland are anything but sailors, never going above half a dozen miles from the shore in pursuit of codfish, and returning to it the first capful of wind, those of the other two nations return home every fall, and the voyage to and fro tends, in a great measure, to improve them in seamanship; besides, many of the French, as well as American vessels, fish on the banks, whereas, at this moment, I believe, we have scarcely one bank-fishing vessel belonging to Newfoundland. It was under this good old system that this Fishery once produced the most hardy seamen for our Navy, whilst at the same time, with the exception of the crews of the vessels that take the fish to market, it would be impossible to find even a hundred, or half the number, in the whole colony, that would make forecastle men, or even topmen, in any of our ships of war, for those who go to the ice in the Spring to catch seals are equally untaught as seamen.

It is, then, earnestly to be hoped that his Majesty's Ministers will give their best attention to every point connected with this subject; for where so vital a question arises as that of improving a nursery for our future Fleets, I feel confident that it cannot be overlooked by the King's present able advisers.

STATE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

Sir,—I am free to confess that the system which exists in India, in the Native Service, of limiting the power and authority of officers commanding corps, is vicious. The native soldier is more easily restrained from the commission of crime than the European, and does not require to be controuled by the same system of recourse to regimental or garrison Courts-Martial for minor offences. The existing regulations of the Company's Army, in regard to the penal code, leave too little discretionary power to the authority of a Commanding Officer of a corps, which practically produces an effect to lessen the respect, and to diminish the awe a native soldier would otherwise feel towards his Commanding and other Officers. Trials of native soldiers should be avoided as much as the due regard for the support of discipline will admit; for it is a fact, which those who are well acquainted with the Native Army will not controvert, that native soldiers are prone to perjury and falsehood, and that they become litigious from the frequency of trials before Courts-Martial. Instances have been known of native soldiers fabricating false and unfounded charges against native officers, solely for the object of their ruin, originating from enmity and malice; and the frequent recurrence of trials by regimental Courts-Martial, for minor offences, is supposed to be calculated to promote this propensity. A greater power to an officer commanding a regiment, to punish without trial, for minor offences, would, I am persuaded, have the effect to check crime, and to support his authority and the general discipline of the native troops.

In regard to trials by General Courts-Martial, I do believe, and the high character of the officers who are invariably appointed to the command of the Armies in India, is a guarantee for my conclusion that no trial of that nature ever occurs until the Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency has had the fullest means of judging of the merits of the case; and that a General Court-Martial is never resorted to but under a conviction of its absolute and indispensable necessity. It is a fact that the charges are sometimes framed by the Judge Advocate General of the Presidency, and also that, from technical irregularity, they are sometimes altered by him; but this is not done until after the circumstances upon which the charges have been framed are fully reported, through the Adjutant-General of the Army, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, to whom that information must be submitted.

That publications in the newspapers in India have led to discontent and to mislead the inexperienced and disappointed officer, both in the Civil and Military Services, every person who knows the existing state of the press in India will admit: they have, since the regulations giving them a freedom of publication, been made the medium of the most scurrilous and unjust attacks.

With regard to the observations of your correspondent D., in your paper of the 20th inst., in respect to commands, as I happen to have a general knowledge of this matter, I will venture to declare my disinterested opinion that no further reductions under this head should take place. Staff appointments, in all armies, are indispensable for the support of discipline and efficiency. They should be regulated, as a general principle, by local circumstances, the strength of armies, the duties to be performed by every class of Staff officers; and what officer of experience in India, considering the nature of the climate, the extent of division commands, the strength of large cantonments, in some of which from six to seven thousand men are usually stationed, and the various and multiplied duties to be executed by those Staff Officers, in conformity to the regulations of the Indian Army, can say that the Staff in India may be diminished, without the certainty that the discipline and efficiency of the armies would be destroyed by so injurious a measure?

That there may be some discontented desponding officers in the Indian Armies is very probable; for where are no men of that description to be met with, from hope deferred, or actual disappointment, as well as from other causes which can be regarded solely as the lot of human nature? But that the European officers of the Indian Armies collectively are either discontented nor actuated by any feeling unworthy of themselves I am convinced, and I can speak from a considerable period of residence among them, especially those of the Madras army, that a more honourable high-minded class of gentlemen is no where to be met with in any society.

In offering these remarks, my sole object is to correct erroneous impressions, and to do justice to a high-minded, intelligent, and highly deserving class of officers, whose lives are destined to be passed, or the best part of it at least, in a climate very different to what we experience who have the happiness to live in a country under a well-regulated and wise government. VINDEX.

THE INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSE OF THE INCREASED NUMBER OF SHIPWRECKS.

Sir,—In your last No. but one, I observed a reply of "Lieutenant, R.N." to a statement made some time ago by a Mid, late of the Triumph, wherein that officer flatly contradicts the Mid's assertions relative to the want of Midshipmen in the Mediterranean Fleet of that day, and the recourse the different Captains of that day were compelled to resort to to supply the deficiency, as well as the circumstances alluded to by the Master of the Smyrna Trader. Now, Sir, I was on board the Triumph at the time, and was on the morning which, when we picked up the boat alluded to (the log book will vouch for it), and can vouch for the fact as stated by the Mid; and this honourable gentleman of a Lieutenant must, from the lapse of time and his own age (being nearly forty years a Lieut.), really have forgotten the transaction, or possibly he may have been on board some other ship at the period; yet he flatly (I will not say in any qualified terms) contradicts that which is notorious to all the officers of that Fleet, in addition to a circumstance which excited a considerable attention on board the Triumph, and which no officer could be ignorant of had he even joined the ship subsequently. I merely address you to prove there are others still living, as well as the Mid and the log, to prove this Lieut. has charged the Mid with asserting that which could in no way benefit himself, but shewing the cause of the frequency of merchants' shipwrecks through gross ignorance, which would be prevented were proper means adopted.

EXTRAORDINARY FAILURES IN INDIA.

Sir,—As you make it your business to procure a great deal of information relative to affairs in the East Indies for your numerous readers, your attention is requested to two letters in the Asiatic Journal for this month (August), on the subject of the extraordinary failures, to an enormous amount, in Calcutta, by which many of your readers are sufferers, and "the old, the invalid, the widow, and the orphan," stripped cruelly of "their all" by the infamous system, as it has appeared, of nefarious partners retiring and carrying away so much capital from the deposits as to leave but little in some of the houses, and nothing in the rest of Alexander and Co., as dividends for the general creditors. This system was practised under the expectation of the credit of these houses procuring a never-failing flow of capital as deposits; but as soon as such nefarious practices were discovered, the absence of credit and a run became the consequence, to meet which there was nothing adequate left by the retired partners, and "who, not having left the houses solvent, may be compelled by the general creditors to refund to them that capital which they carried away."

The two letters above-mentioned refer to other letters and statements and extracts from the Times, with their dates on the subject of these failures, with hints for the guidance of the creditors; and your attention to the subject of those villanous failures, and endeavours to sift and expose the matter, is requested; also, that you will be pleased to insert this letter in your next Gazette, for the information and guidance of the creditors amongst your readers.

RELIEFS OF REGIMENTS IN INDIA.

Sir,—As you have so ably and humanely advocated the cause of the injured regiments that hitherto have been doomed to destruction in India, I venture to relate a few facts which you may not know respecting the cause that probably originated this serious evil. When first these regiments were transported to that country, the freights there varied from twenty-five to thirty-five pounds sterling per ton, and the consequent expense of conveying troops thither was very great; but, now the tonnage is reduced four or six pounds per ton, the same excuse cannot be urged to detain those regiments in that country. In fact, they have been conveyed lately at the rate of eight pounds seventeen shillings per man, including provisions, the latter of which stands the owners' eight pounds, leaving only the seventeen shillings for freight. Thus, taking the average detention on board between embarkation, landing, waiting for fair winds, &c. &c., the soldier is at much less expense than if in his barracks at home, and the charge of moving six regiments now will be only equal to that of one regt. formerly. The 69th remained so long in India, that it brought home the Adjutant and Drum-Major only!!! Even if the cost of transport were now as it formerly was, it can be no excuse for sacrificing men, who have faithfully served and shed their blood for their King and country, on account of expense, much less for the advantage of the Colonels commanding those unhappy regiments. The real cause of the discontents and consequent Courts-Martial in India, may be mainly attributed to the soldiers being transported for longer periods than the worst felons. If those who have hitherto viewed this crying evil with apathy, do not speedily represent it to His Gracious Majesty for redress, the consequences may prove fatal to the discipline, perhaps the existence of the British Army. It is only surprising that those Members of Parliament who "puff and strain" to bring themselves into notice, do not exert themselves in both Houses to do away with this most unpopular infliction on the Army.

THE REPAIRS OF THE REVENUE CRUISERS SUFFICIENT EMPLOY FOR THE DOCK-YARD SHIPWRIGHTS ON SATURDAYS.

Sir,—As you seldom have long ineffectually to advocate any cause, I wish I could excite you to write on the repairs of the Revenue cruisers. At present they are performed by contract at merchants' yards, to the no small injury of the dock-yard shipwrights as well as to the service generally, for it is not to be supposed that any private builder, however extensive his business, can supply timber seasoned equally to that in His Majesty's dock-yards. If so, the destruction must be more speedy, not only of the new used in the repair, but of the good which may have remained since the first construction, for so great is the contagion of decay in timber, that, like the dark spot in plague, where once observed it spreads with all the malignity of that inveterate disease. However cheap then at first this "contract system" may appear, it must in the long run prove doubly expensive.

Besides this, see how materially such an arrangement affects the dock-yard mechanics. While they are unemployed one whole day in each week, this workmanship is carried on at private establishments. If this service were again conducted by the Admiralty as it was for many years with advantage to the country—friend Tristram, your able correspondent, would not have to complain of our shipwrights being idle every Saturday. I am delighted to find your attention attracted to the latter subject. Only draw the attention of the authorities to these matters and I'll warrant their being adopted.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK'S EVIDENCE BEFORE THE COMMITTEE OF MILITARY INQUIRY.

Of all the evidence brought before the Committee none is so extraordinary as that of Lord William Bentinck. His Lordship, after having given orders of the utmost importance, not only as regarding the army, but as affecting the very existence of British power in India, frequently replies to the most material questions of the Committee, that he forgets, does not recollect, or does not know, the details of the subject of which he disposed so summarily. Lord William Bentinck is asked by the Committee, whether any of the officers of the three Military Commissions, whose opinion he desired previous to abolishing flogging in the Native Army, were favourable to it.—his answer is, that he forgets! Again, he is asked if flogging had been applied for casual insubordination, or only when a mutinous spirit appeared? I forget. Is there any flogging in the armies of the Native Princes? I do not know.

It is extraordinary to find a General Officer, after making the most hazardous alterations in the discipline of an enormous army, unable to remember whether any of those military authorities he consulted entertained similar views; whether the punishment he did away with was applied in one case or another; and, above all, whether it existed in other armies in India recruited from the same class of Natives. And under what circumstances did Lord William abolish the lash in the Native troops in India? He consulted three commissions formed of the most experienced and competent officers at each presidency. They all agreed in answering him that corporal punishment should not be done away; and although Lord William was then upon the eve of coming home to England, the step he took, and a step, too, that is almost admitted to be irrevocable, was to do away by a stroke of his pen with the whole system of corporal punishment in the Native regiments, and then start for England, leaving this tremendous experiment to be tried and worked out by his successor as he best might: an experiment made in the face of the opinion of the Indian army, unsupported by a single argument, and with the details of which it certainly does appear, from his unsatisfactory examination, he had by no means made himself thoroughly acquainted. There is the same unsteady, ill-founded tone of reasoning in Lord William's views of doing away with flogging in our regular army (of which, however, he does not pretend to be a decided advocate). His favourite theory on this point seems to be the plan of penal companies. But here, again, when his information about the system of penal companies comes to be sifted by a few sensible but very obvious questions, it appears that he knows scarcely anything about the success of the system of penal companies; for his own expression is, "there was in India an officer who had been an Adjutant, and gave us some information about the penal companies at Sierra Leone, but I cannot state any particulars!" and upon this undigested information, derived by accident from a single individual, he would venture to propose a new system of discipline in the British Army!

It is not for us to enter at large into comments upon the bold measure adopted by Lord William before leaving India; we merely take it as we find it upon his own showing in his evidence, but, at the same time, it will not be out of place to observe that there has lately been addressed to the Directors of the H. E. I. Company a letter upon the subject of military law and discipline in India, well worth the attention of every officer. It is from the pen of a Mr. Spry, who, from his merit alone, was employed in the Judge Advocate's department in India, and whose good sense and judicious deductions and reasoning upon the great experience he had acquired of all that bears upon military law in our Indian possessions, have enabled him to offer extremely valuable suggestions upon these matters for the Directors' consideration. Mr. Spry modestly but firmly denies the notion that the King's troops do not concern themselves with the discipline and punishments of the Native regiments. He does not deny that it may formerly have been otherwise, but he declares it is not so now, and that what affects the one army, does and must greatly affect and influence the other. In reference to this and other points, he explains the great and growing evil of want of uniformity in the discipline of the three Presidencies, as well between themselves as generally; and he ascribes this to the strange anomaly resulting from the military law of the British Army, though it has undergone so many modifications in Europe, and with the King's troops in India, having been left for above thirty years untouched as regards the Army of the East India Company. Mr. Spry, among the sensible suggestions he gives for assimilating the law of the army of India to that of the King's troops (as near the habits of the Natives and other circumstances will allow), gives a most important and valuable hint for setting right, if, indeed, it ever can be set right again, the confusion to be apprehended from the recent emancipation from corporal punishment of the Native troops. He proposes, in promulgating the present British military law for the universal use of the Native troops, to repeal at once all former acts, and thus again bring the Native troops under the power of flogging, although, with the mitigations and rarity of occurrence now adopted in the British troops, conceiving, and apparently with reason, that coming as part of a general measure, and accompanied by many mitigations of the old code, it would pass with the Native troops, and be received without opposition.

How far Mr. Spry's suggestion may be now practicable is for those who have much experience of military India to consider. Whatever may be the eventual measure adopted for remedying what has been so rashly done, it still does appear strange that power should ever have been entrusted to any Governor or Commander-in-Chief in countries subject to Great Britain, to issue an edict or enactment bearing so strongly, though perhaps indirectly, upon the military discipline of English soldiers; nor is there any way of accounting for such latitude, but by concluding that it never could be conceived possible that such dangerous use would be made of the vast power in the hand of a Governor-General of India. At least, it should seem that the notion of economy which prompted an union of the situations of Commander-in-Chief and Governor-General has been the cause of immense mischief in removing the wholesome check reciprocally established between the civil and military authorities.—United Service Journal.

A chemist at Lyons has discovered means of rendering the bread given to the army white, without increasing the price of the rations. The inventor is come to Paris and has, in the presence of Count Boissy d'Anglas, Director of the Administration of War and Inspector of Army Provisions, caused a quantity of bread to be made according to his process, which, on being tasted, was found perfectly palatable, and, on being analysed, declared to be equally wholesome. It is added that the Government has decided to purchase the secret at a very high price, a grant for which will be applied for during the next session of the Chambers.—Galignani's Messenger.

The late Colonel Mac Kinnon.—On one occasion, when the Peninsular army was passing a defile, and it was considered dangerous from it, part of our troops found themselves exposed to a destructive fire, they found this officer coolly shaving himself, exposed in the hottest part. The men encouraged at such a sight, rushed on and drove the French before them. It has been found by experience that nothing encourages men more than seeing their officers coolly facing danger. In a town garrisoned by the French, it is reported of Davoust, who commanded that when his men required encouragement, he had two officers of the Imperial Guard who volunteered to walk with perfect sang froid on the parapet wall, which so encouraged the garrison, that instead of surrendering they determined to stand out to the last extremity.

Steam Communication between India and Europe.—A plan has been set on foot to effect a steam communication by means of a private company, formed principally of commercial interests, to be incorporated by Act of Parliament. We are indebted to the Asiatic Journal for the following details:—The plan contemplates a monthly despatch of a vessel from England to Bombay respectively; and it is expected that the service will be performed in 52 days, without intermission, throughout the year; that, from England, a boat (there are to be three in order to have one always in free pratique) shall be despatched, on the 1st of each month, from Falmouth to Malta; two boats to be stationed between Malta and Alexandria; the transit from Alexandria to Suez to be undertaken by the Company, and four vessels to ply between Suez and Bombay. The gross outlay for the whole service is calculated at 200,000*l.* The annual expenditure required for disbursements, interest on capital, &c., is estimated at 123,000*l.* As it is concluded that the income must, for some years (till the plan comes into full and effective operation) fall short of the expenditure, it has been proposed that the King's Government should contribute 40,000*l.* and the East India Company 25,000*l.*, making together 65,000*l.*, as an annual allowance for the transmission of the Mediterranean mail (between England and Cadiz, Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria) and the East India Company's and Government despatches to and from India: private letters to become a perquisite to the Company. The remaining 58,000*l.* is expected to be made up by passengers, postage, and contingencies.

A club existed, forty years since, at the Globe, called "You should have been here before;" it consisted of an equal number of theatrical and literary persons, originally but four, ultimately upwards of fifty. A new member was added every week; no ceremony was gone through of making the members, which is customary in other clubs, but the new comer partook of a splendid dinner, &c., and when the party were about breaking up, and the bill called for, it was handed over to him, the president bidding him to pay it. "I?" the stranger would generally exclaim, "why should I pay all?" To this was replied, "You are the last among us—you should have been here before!" This was the inauguration. Mem. was, I believe, the last member; his bill amounted to nearly 100*l.*, and it was then agreed that the whole affair was rather too keen a joke, and "You should have been here before" was changed into "We'll never go there again."

"An Officer of rank" is reported to have invented a new missile, capable of setting fire to a ship or building if discharged 2000 yards off; and also a shell twice as destructive as the old one.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1836.

We gave in our last number the Official Return of the names of all Mates and Midshipmen now actually serving, who have passed their examination for Lieutenants previously to the 1st of January, 1835. This list, we find, amounts altogether to 427, of whom 207 have passed above five years, and of this latter number twenty-four have undergone their final examinations more than eight years, and twenty-seven above ten years. With the view of bringing the names of these poor unprotected young men under the notice of the First Lord of the Admiralty, we will hereunder transcribe them, for we are well convinced that it only requires that cases of real hardship, and of manifest injustice, should be brought before the Earl of Minto, to ensure their receiving his Lordship's favourable consideration.

The names of those who have passed above ten years are as follows:—

1816—G. Matthews; 1817—S. Coppinger; 1819—M. Peppin, T. B. Kooystra, W. Robinson, J. W. M. Wills; 1820—T. B. Stagg; 1821—L. F. A. Newman; 1822—W. M. Shearman; 1823—J. C. Carthew, F. Drew, G. Morret, R. F. Lewis; 1824—T. W. Foote, W. Reid, H. M. Tylden; 1825—J. May E. Allen, H. Booth, G. Wilkey; 1826—B. Duncan, W. Ellis, B. Jeffery, J. F. L. Wood, G. W. Wilkinson, H. Wall, J. C. Robinson, E. B. Penny.

And those who have passed above eight years are

Making a total of fifty-one. When we consider that some of these individuals must have been in the Navy upwards of twenty-six years, and that even those who have passed but eight years must have been fourteen years in the service, we think it is not asking too much of the country, that the whole of those unfortunate fellows should at once receive Lieutenants' commissions, provided their characters be unexceptionable, and, as we have already observed, we are fully assured that whatever can be done for them will be done by the present liberal-minded First Lord of the Admiralty.

This return being only brought down to the 1st January, 1835, it may fairly be calculated that the total number of passed Mates and Midshipmen, now serving in the Navy, exceeds five hundred and fifty, as we find from ten to fifteen on the average undergoing their examinations every month. In all future promotions to Lieutenancies we earnestly hope to see a due proportion of the senior passed Mates included in them:—we feel confident that we shall not look in vain, and it will be our delight to record these acts of fairplay and justice towards those old and deserving servants of the Crown.

We exclusively this day present to our Subscribers a further Official Return, of the greatest interest to the Navy, viz.—the names of all Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants, who have been promoted since the 1st of January, 1825, with the year they respectively passed their examinations for Lieutenants. When we have concluded this interesting paper we shall offer some comments.

THERE is one point of view we have not yet noticed, which will speak volumes for the evils of which Officers of King's Regiments in India so generally and so justly complain. The sums of money given at the present moment for exchanges from a regiment embarking for service in India, are eight hundred pounds for an exchange between Captains, and three hundred pounds between Subalterns, and we do not hesitate to say, that any man, who has served ten years in India, and can spare the money, cannot expend it more wisely. The fact thus is, that a commission in India is within a trifle only half the value it is in Europe, but as Captains, or senior officers, even when inclined to sell out, cannot afford to do so without receiving equal sums with those in other regiments,—purchasers have fully as much to pay for their promotion, and after all, to adopt a mercantile term, receive an inferior article for their money. There would be no difficulty in furnishing cases where officers, having first paid the very highest price, sub rosa, for their promotion, were afterwards obliged, from the climate having totally ruined their constitutions, to purchase exchanges into regiments in salubrious stations at a most enormous sacrifice of their property, by which the price of a company often amounted to 3,400*l.*, when officers in other corps, in England even, procured their companies at the usual rate of 500*l.* and 600*l.* above regulation, that is 2,300*l.* or 2,400*l.*

The fact is, that Field-Officers being paid so largely in India acquire small fortunes by living economically but liberally, and having less exposure to undergo in their duties, they naturally think much more favourably, and report in certain quarters more favourably of the service.

We believe it is generally admitted, even by the sufferers themselves, that there is extreme difficulty attending all measures calculated to make India a more desireble station, and that the only mode is to make the reliefs more frequent and regular. Even in the most enlightened society in England it is sickening to hear the ignorance which is displayed, and we have been asked fifty times by respectable old ladies, "if King's Officers have not great advantages in being able to go to India whenever they please?"

As we intimated in our last, Sir Charles Page's squadron returned to Plymouth Sound on Saturday, at 3·30 P.M., after a pleasant cruise to the westward of Scilly. Several interesting trials have taken place, in all of which the Vanguard has decidad advantage in every point of sailing, hye large, her superiority always becoming more apparent as the breeze freshened. The Bellerophon proves very crank, careening on some occasions twelve degrees; she is, in other respects, a fine ship, but whether it is that she has lost her trim, or that the other ships have improved theirs, she is now beaten by the Pembroke. The Vanguard is so remarkably stiff that Captain Bouverie has received permission to remove more ballast, accordingly twenty-five tons more have been taken out, and she has now only half her original quantity of 140 tons on board. We are of opinion that a still further quantity may be dispensed with, indeed the whole, as we have repeatedly declared that a man-of-war properly constructed requires no extraneous weight over and above that of her water, provisions, armament, &c. The Malabar and Cornwallis are still slow, and would be great incumbrances to a fleet of 80-gun ships, such as Vanguard, Asia, &c.; the former have been despatched to Lisbon. A contemporary observes, that the Vanguard's hold is only half full, if so she must be more capacious than is generally supposed, for she has on board four months provisions, and 350 tons of water, being one seventh more than Bellerophon, and she heels only six degrees. It is supposed that the rest of the squadron sailed again yesterday, having the Lords of the Admiralty on board, and after landing their Lordships at Falmouth the ships will proceed on another cruise. The Board of Admiralty will then proceed to Pembroke, and having completed their inspection return to London about the latter end of next week.

SOME highly interesting matter has been elicited by the evidence, taken before the Select Committee on Shipwrecks, and arranged in the very able Report which the Chairman, Mr. Buckingham, has drawn up. As the document is too voluminous for insertion in our Gazette, our intention is to take a certain portion, and comment upon it at suitable seasons, and thus canvas the practicability of the alterations and remedies contemplated, as we perceive the Honourable Member for Sheffield has given notice that he shall introduce a Bill founded on the Report, next Session.

The first resolution, calculated on a return made to the Committee, from the books of Lloyd's, shows that at two periods of three years each, namely, 1816, 1817, and 1818; and 1833, 1834, and 1835, the number of vessels wrecked, or stranded, were in the first period 1,114, and in the last 1,577, and the number of those missing or lost 89 and 129; making the total number lost in the first period 1,203, and in the last 1,702; and that, presuming each individual ship and cargo to be of the value of 5,000*l.*, the loss in the first period was 6,015,000*l.*, and in the last 8,510,000*l.*; being, in the latter, which approximates to the present day, an annual loss of nearly three millions of money, an astounding sum, but, as the calculations have been made from the data above mentioned, we consider to be very near the truth.

But this enarmous sacrifice of property is not all, the loss of life is a greater evil still, and this is assumed to averaga 894 per annum, so that about the hundredth part of our mariners annually become the victims of shipwreck, besides the casualties, over and above these casses which produce mortality in other classes, to which the sailor's life is subject.

With this statement premised, it must be admitted that an evil of such alarming magnitude, which absorbs so great a portion of the most valuable subjects of the state, is well worth the consideration of every friend of his country with a view to a remedy, even were the dictates of humanity to be overlooked, and the subject considered on the score of policy alone; and assuredly every feasible plan should be adopted, which can be shown satisfactory, to afford a hope that the evil may be lessened or prevented. We therefore think the Legislature cannot be better employed than in davising remedial meaus, whether by requiring tho persons in charge of merchant vessels to pass such an exemination as shall qualify them to navigate them from port to pnrt; or in the construction of the ships themselves, which it lus been alloged ara badly built, of indifferent and slight materiols, and in many cases not sufficiently provided with the requisita furniture.

The great diffieulty which we apprehend in passing many uf tha remedial measnres, proposed by the Report of tho Committee, into law, will be on the pert of the Shipowners themsalves, who, comprising a large aud powerful body, are perhaps the most prejudiced class of men in tho kingdoon. It is true, that those Members, who ara supposed to represent tha shipping interast in Parliament, formed part of tho Committee, and, as the Report has beoo uoaoimously agreed to, it may be therefora said to have raceived the sanction of the whole; but we will not be too sanguina on this account, when we remember tha resistance which tho late leudable attempt to establish a Scemen's Hospital and Savings Bank has met with in the principal outports, notwitbstanding that Mr. Young and others supported it with all their power. That our maritime reguletions require to be amended all will admit. We therefora trust that, although the whole intention may not ha carried out, considerable good will result from the facts which the inquiry has brought to view, and the Raport discloses. Mora anon.

In drewing tho attention of tha Board of Admiralty last week to the oondition of tha Shipwrigbts employad in his Majesty's Dock-yerds, wa ouly followed the coursa we hava iovariably adopted, of taking seasonable occasions for bringing mattars that require reform nnder the notica of tha authoritles, well knowing that the best disposition to redress this, and all otber griavances eonnected with tha Nuvy, exists in tha proper quarter,—a prstty plaio proof of which is to he fonnd in the many excellent meesures lately adopted. We will not deoy that, in some cases, tha work required to he performed may he done cheoper in Merchants' then in the King's yards; but oven this admits of doubt, when wo consider the vast qnantity of eopper and other availahla stores which have aocumulated io tho arsenels. The saving of a few pounds is, however, but a secondary consideratioo, when we aro sure that the work is better performed aod of good and sufficient materials; but more particularly when full employment and wages, with the encouragement which that valuable class of meu, the King's Shipwrights, deserve and should receive, are afforded; and it is therefore, that we revert to the subject once more, in the hope that when their Lordships return frum their official tnur they will take an early opportunity of seriously considering this matter. There are many expenses which should be calculated as regards work done by contract,—there is the salary of the inspector, and the time necessarily occupied in surveying the work, besides many minor matters, which ara not taken into account; and, all these considered, even should it appear that small vessels, such as Packets, could be obtained cheaper by the ona course than the other, it will not he contended that repairs can be so well or even so cheaply performed.

It is useless to propose that any immediate step should be taken to pluce the Shipwrights on six days' work—as we sanguinely expect tbey will be eventually,—because it would be pleaded, that, as the estimate for their wages is taken, it cannnt ha done until next session without discharging some portion of them altogether. There are means of effecting it, however, to a certain extent, evan with the present funds; for the repairs of the Revenue Vessels and Post-office Packets, now transferred to the Admiralty, which absorb large sums annually, can he better performed in the Dock-yards thon under the present system of contract. Every one conversant with ship-building is aware that the profit of repairing is considarably mora than that of building. Indeed, many assert that such work forms the only profit, and goes to cover the loss of building par ton. Let this work then ba transferred to tho Dock-yards and employment on the Saturdey afforded, as far as the funds will permit; we will answer for it that the men will be contented under these circumstances, and that the Govarnment will receive their praise and gratitude for effecting all that is practicable under present circumstances. When the estimates for next year are fremod, let but the talented Secretary, Mr. Wood, state the case fairly on its merits, and point out the situation of our Dock-yard men and the necessity for keeping our ships in a condition fit for service when suddenly called for, and he may be assured that he will have nu immense majority of the same opinion as ourselves; for, whatever merit the Government may claim of the country for the very considerable retrenchment which has taken place —and that the claim is conceded will be readily admitted,—we must protest against any ill-judged economy which shall have the effect of injuring the Navy in its efficiency, either as to ships, officers, or men. The ready manner in which the supplies were voted in April last was a tacit admission that economy had been carried too far, by reducing the Navy below the standard at which it was politic to keep it. Very little reflection will convince that the same course is, and has been, detrimautal, as regards the efficiency af our Dock-yards.

Our contemporary, the Plymouth Journal, in complimenting us upon the course we continue to pursua, when suitable upportunity offers, as regards the Dock-yard Shipwrights, thinks proper to make some allusion to our advocacy of Sir William Symonds and his system of ship-building. We can inform our contamporary that our edvocacy of the new principle is from a thoroogh oooviotioo of its superiority; and, being perfectly unbiass and unprejudiced by local associations, we hu done no more than our duty to the interests whi we represent, in confuting false notions and dete ing and exposing the infamous conspiracy to whi many have been induced to lend themselves, u willingly perhaps, in order to write down an i provement, which must appear to every seam the most palpable that has ever been effected ship building. We have treated the subject fair in our pages, and given full space to argumen for and against the Surveyor's system; but w will not lend ourselves to misrepresentations, virulence, to answer any purpose, even althoug we might conciliate a few extra subsrribers in t Dock-yards. It is not wonderful that the woul be scientifics, who were expected to effect son improvement under on institution expresaly mai tained with that hope (a fallacious one it appear should, feel greatly chagrined at witnessing t success of a principle which they had either ove looked as incompatible, or disregarded. Th would have shown good sense and avoided t exposora tbey now merit, by admitting the i provement when it became apparent, instead obstinately contending against it and adopting sorts of unworthy misrepresentutiuns to deny We look upon thair efforts to be but the de throes of an expiring faction, and from henceforth shall treat their puffs, paragraphs, and pamphle with the contempt they deserve.

We have alluded in late numbers to the Co of Inquiry assembled at Fort Pitt, Chatham, a consisting of Lieutenant-Colouel Weare, of the P visionnl Battolion, Lieutenant-Colouel Pitt, Major Bunbury, of tha 80th Regiment, to inve gata charges prefarrad against certain Staff S jeants of that District for embezzling the effe of deceased soldiers. From information that reached us, it appears that the prartice is not recent date, and, indeed, we understand that it been carried on to so great an extent, that so Staff Serjeants have realised and retired with ve snug incomes. The whole of the effects in certa cases have been appropriated, and fictitious counts rendered.

We trust that this nefarious business has be thoroughly investigated, and that proper steps w be adopted to prevent a recurrence.

Seen of our readers as delight in acts of charity m not know that a very useful institution exists Cannon Street Road, called the "Shipwrecked a Distressed Sailors' Asylum," supported by the voluntu contributions and annual donations of philanthropic in vidnals, with the praiseworthy intention of providing refuge and a home, at a very moderate charge, Mariners, when from various causes they need su asylum. We can vouch for the fact that the establi ment is admirably conducted, having frequently visited at seasons when it had many occupants, and the wh of the arrangement is very similar to what this class men are used to when afloat, and therefore suited to th tastes. Those who are not aware of the thoughtless improvident habits of sailors, who often dissipate in a days or hours the hard earned wages of many months, hardly imagine the misery and want to which they reduced when unable to obtain employment; end therefore strongly recommend this and other Institutio of the like natora to such as delight in distributing so of their superfluous wealth on deserving charities, until the disposition of these men is utterly changed ( we are not certain that a total change may not dep them of that reckless character for which they are reme able), many cases of severe distress would be consta occurring, were it not that this and other institution a great measure reliave them.

Wa are glad to find that, although the nu of men voted for the increase of the Navy has nly obtained, the Perseus is still kept in condi- n to receive volunteers, and we would strongly ommend that the establishment should be made per- nent, which could be done at a very inconsiderable pense. In the fall of the year, and throughout the ter, when the Baltic and North American trades stagnant, many excellent seamen are out of employ- nt in the Port of London; and these would gladly er the King's service when the opportunity is at hand. en were the ships fully manned, it would be desirable keep on recruiting, as a means of substituting good for or indifferent characters; and the King's service ould afford inducements for the good seaman to prefer- e to any other, at all times and seasons, and this it l be found to do when the means of entering it is ays available to men so inclined from various causes.

It may not be generally known, that Admiral Sir P. H. Durham, the present highly respected and distin- shed Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, was an Act- Lieut. on board the Royal George, of 110 guns, when melancholy loss of that ship occurred at Spithead on 22d Aug. 1782. Lieut. Durham was one of the y few saved; he is now we believe the only surviving son who belonged to the Royal George at the time; it is a circumstance worthy of remark, that on Mon- last the gallant and esteemed Admiral, accompanied Lady Henderson Durham, his brother Gen. Durham lady, his niece Mrs. Dundas and her husband, and less than seven grand nephews and nieces, with several r relatives and connexions, were cruising in his yacht Fanny, round the buoy which marks the spot where melancholy occurrence took place 54 years ago, and re that enterprising and zealous diver, Mr. Deane, is ployed in removing the guns, &c. from the wreck. can imagine the feelings of the gallant Admiral at h a moment, when he contrasted the unhappy fate of companions and the proud position which his services e attained for himself, moreover surrounded by his nest and dearest connexions.

Duelling.—The French Courts have pronounced some portant sentences, of which the repetition may prove l in the system of duelling. It applied the same principle in another case; n appeal being made to the Court of Cassation, the tence was confirmed. The trial of young Sivey, for ing M. Captain W. Brownlow Shirtdan expired suddenly at residence in Belgrave-street, on Wednesday. He been an invalid in consequence of an injury in the received while shooting; but his health and spirits seemed latterly so much amended, that his family felt complete security of his ultimate restoration; and this, in all probability, would have taken place but for a sudden and violent attack of diarrhœa, which carried him off without warning or suffering. Capt. S. was in his fifty-second year, and has left a widow and an only daughter.

Representative Peerage.—Lord Hawarden will be the only candidate—at least the only candidate on the Conservative interest, and none other would have the remotest chance who should be put in nomination for the vacancy occasioned by the death of Lord Dufferin.—Dublin Mail.

Sir Adolphus Dalrymple intends, it is said, to start on the Tory interest again for Brighton.

Mrs. Graham.—The state of this lady's health has so much improved that no doubt is now entertained of her ultimate recovery.

Affair of Honour.—Thursday morning a hostile meeting took place on Wormwood Scrubs, between Captain Kirton, residing at Kensington, and —— Morrison, Esq., living at Bayswater. The seconds endeavoured to make an amicable arrangement, but the Captain indignantly refused. The seconds then measured the ground, eighteen paces, and the hostile parties fired, but without effect; another attempt at an arrangement was made, but in vain, and the parties again fired, when Capt. K. received his antagonist's ball in his right shoulder. Mr. M. then advanced and requested to shake hands, which was accepted by the Captain, and both parties quitted the ground.

It is reported that the lengthened sojourn in this country of a foreign Prince, related to an illustrious personage, is accounted for by the fact of its being far from unlikely that a marriage will shortly take place between his Royal Highness and an English lady of rank.

Brussels, Aug. 28.—M. Van de Weyer, Envoy Extraordinary to the Court of St James's, and entrusted with a special mission to Lisbon, has received from the Queen of Portugal the Grand Cross of the Order of the Tower and Sword.

The Duke of Wellington arrived at Dover on Wednesday, from Walmer Castle, to hold the Harbour Sessions. His Grace was received by Col. Arnold, the Commanding Officer of the garrison, Col. Cockburn, of the Artillery, Lord Charles Wellesley, and a Guard of Honour belonging to the 5th Foot. After the Session was over, the Lord Warden inspected the works carrying on under the south pier by torch-light.

A recent letter from Rome mentions that the son of Lucien Bonaparte, who was a prisoner in the Castle of Santo Angelo, has been conducted elsewhere au secret. No one in Rome dares to allude to the circumstance.

The Duke of Richmond was received by his Aberdeenshire tenantry, shortly after his arrival in the North, with every mark of affectionate respect. An address of welcome to the Duke, Duchess, and family, was presented by the President of the Strathbogie Club. At Huntly it was a gala day; the town presented the most lively appearance. Dr. Brenner presented an address to his Grace, to which the Duke graciously replied. The tenants escorted the Duke to the north-western boundaries of his Aberdeenshire estates.

Mr. Buckuck, M. P., is said to be seriously indisposed.

On Tuesday Lord Hillsborough was elected without opposition for the county of Down, in the room of his uncle, Lord Sandys.

British Auxiliary Legion.—Letters from Bayonne of 22d ult. mention the arrival there of Colonel Ross, the commander of the Scotch division at St. Sebastian. He was suffering from the effects of a wound. It is said, that on finding his troops refused to serve, he promised, if they would lay down their arms, to procure them a passage to England. To this proposition one of the men, advancing from the ranks, replied in the following terms: "Colonel, we have been here for a very long time; and have had no pay. The arms which we carry are worth some money, and we are determined to keep them on account of the pay which is due to us."

It will be seen by the Gazette of Tuesday, that Major Reid, lately serving in this force, returns to his former position in the corps of Royal Engineers.

The general expectation at St. Sebastian seems to be that, in the event of the 31st passing over without some satisfactory arrangement taking place, General Evans's determination is to raise a contribution for present support, and then with all convenient despatch to embark his troops for England.

Seamen in the Service of Spain.—We regret to hear that another of those discreditable scenes which have of late been of such frequent occurrence took place in the office of Mr. King, the Paymaster of the Spanish Navy, in Great St. Helen's, yesterday morning. On the wives and relatives of the British seamen and marines in the service of the Queen of Spain applying to that gentleman for the monthly allowances which they are entitled to receive by the terms of the contract with the Spanish authorities, and the amount of which is stopped from the pay of the men, Mr. King informed them that the Chargé d'Affairs, M. Jabat, had declared his inability to continue making these payments from want of funds. The applicants, on receiving this communication, became outrageous, and were with much difficulty appeased even for the moment, and went off to the residence of the Spanish Legation, in Bulstrode-street, declaring their determination not to leave till they were paid their claims. We think these poor women have much reason to complain of the bad faith which has been shown towards them. The contract entered into with them and their husbands by the Spanish agents has certainly been evaded in a manner little creditable to any of the parties concerned. The immediate effect of this breach of faith will be the unmanning of the Spanish Navy, which it is most important to maintain in a state of efficiency. It is much to be lamented that the Spanish interests are not represented here by some person possessing the will and the ability to act in such a way as to save the Government the injury and disgrace of such occurrences as the one we have described.—Courier.

The Court.

The Duchess of Gloucester is expected to arrive in England on the 10th inst. from Hanover.

The King has conferred the honour of Knighthood upon Major E. Brockenbury, K.T.S. and K.S.F. The King has appointed the Lieutenant-Governor of Gibraltar, Maj.-General Sir A. Woodford, K.C.B., to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of that town and garrison; also, G. C. Lewis, Esq., in addition to J. Austin, Esq., to be his Majesty's Commissioner of Inquiry into the affairs of the Island of Malta.

Thursday next, the anniversary of their Majesties' coronation, will, it is expected, be celebrated at Windsor Castle, and a grand dinner given by his Majesty on the occasion.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—M. Guizot and M. Montalivet have not come to an understanding. The former insisted that at least the Home Department should be in the hands of one of his friends, and the King has not thought fit to cede this to M. Guizot. Accordingly the Journal des Debats declares "the union of M. Guizot, Montalivet, and Duchatel, under the presidence of M. Mole, is decidedly abandoned." A Paris correspondent writes late on Thursday as follows:—"The combinations lately attempted have failed. Marshal Soult has been sent for in all haste; and further negotiations have been suspended till his arrival."

SPAIN.—The decree of convocation for a Cortes, to be elected under the law of the Constitution of 1812, was published in a supplement to the Madrid Gazette of the 23d ult. The 1st Article convokes the Cortes for Oct. 24th. The 2d declares there shall be a deputy for every 50,000 souls (the Constitution of 1812 says 50,000). Art. 6 permits those who sat in the Cortes of 1823 to sit in the ensuing one (although the Constitution forbids deputies to sit in two successive Cortes). The 8th Art. declares that the exigency of affairs does not permit the long interval ordered by the Constitution to elapse between the meeting of the different degrees of electoral juntas. In consequence the parish electors are to meet on 18th, electors of districts on 25th, and provincial junta on 2d Oct. Art. 13 establishes the form of the document, announcing the election that gives power to the deputies to decide how much of the Constitutional Law is conducive to the public interest; in other words, to modify and reform it. Art. 14 says the functions of deputy shall be gratuitous, until the Cortes shall decide on this point. The decree, consisting of 21 Articles, is dated August 21st, and signed by the Queen Regent as well as by Gil de la Cuadra. The number of deputies to be 241.

The Christinos under Ybarrera have signally defeated the Carlist General Ituralde, and many prisoners have been taken. Espartero also claims some advantages over the corps of Gomez, who is said to have marched back into the Asturias. The Carlists are also reported to have been defeated with considerable loss in Arragon.

JAMAICA.— Papers to 20th of July have arrived. A Privy Council was held on the 17th, to arrange for the departure of Lord Sligo, whose resignation had been accepted by Ministers, occasioned, as was already known here, by Lord Glenelg having persisted in reinstating Dr. Palmer in his post of stipendiary magistrate, after he had been dismissed by Lord Sligo. Much speculation was afloat in the island as to who was to be his Lordship's successor.

Theatres.

LYCEUM.—On Wednesday evening a Mr. Leffler made his debut at this theatre, at a very short notice (in consequence of the sudden indisposition of Mr. Bland), in the arduous part of Hela, in Barnett's opera of The Mountain Sylph. The highly flattering reception he met with has induced the Committee to engage him as first bass singer for the remainder of the season. Mr. Leffler's voice is a barytone of no very great power or compass, but extremely pleasing, as he sings with expression and good taste, and is always in time. He was loudly applauded for his praiseworthy efforts in the difficult scena, "Man's Misfortunes;" was encored in the ballad, "Farewell to the Mountain," part of which he sang as well as we remember to have heard it. He also acquitted himself well in "This magic-wove Scarf," but was not particularly happy in the concerted piece which followed. We make no doubt but this gentleman will be found a valuable addition to the company, and that he will improve upon acquaintance.

STRAND.—On Monday evening a new piece, in five parts, entitled The Perils of Pippins, was produced here, and met with a very favourable reception from a crowded house. The piece is founded on a paper which appeared in Blackwood's Magazine some months since, written by Mr. Jerrold, who is, we presume, the author of the present drama. There is something novel in the plot, or rather construction, of this piece: it appears rather to be five distinct portions of plot, for each might be played without its neighbour. These unconnected scenes show the perils to which Pippins, a country barber (the "man who couldn't help it") is exposed, in consequence of his amatory propensities. His first peril is while dressing the hair of Lady Mnanikin; his amatory propensities so far get the mastery over him, that he salutes the lady with several hearty kisses in the presence of her husband, and is obliged to fly from his native village in consequence. Pippins has to encounter many perils during the other four parts of the piece, which are full of broad bustling scenes of extravagance and humour. Although we do not admire this production so much as The Hill Sticker, yet we must view it in the light of an agreeable mixture for a night's amusement. The dialogue, which is very smartly written, is ever changing and ever new, and the characters are sufficiently well drawn to admit of some extremely lively acting. To Mr. Hammond, Miss Daly, Mr. Hall, and a Mr. Serle, the author is much indebted; they all sustained their characters admirably. This piece will act much better when judiciously curtailed, and will, we suppose, be the last novelty of the present season, which, we are happy to say, has answered the expectations of the liberal and enterprising proprietors.

ON THE PRINCESS VICTORIA'S VISIT TO CHISWICK ASYLUM.

She has cared for the fatherless one,
For the sinner has learn'd to feel;
And the course which her heart has begun
Gives the pledge of a people's weal.

She has fancied herself the poor child,
Whose pathway is over the deep;
She has imaged those "homes in the wild,"
Where the far-away cease to weep.

She believes that as equals they share
With herself in the kingdom of love,
And remembers the humblest may wear
A crown, brighter than hers, above.

There is no period within any one's recollection when the wages of labourers, of all denominations, were so high as at the present moment.

A Sensible Girl.—A preacher was one day struck with surprise on beholding a beautiful set of curls on the head of a lovely maid, a member of his class, whose hair had been usually very plain. "Ah! Eliza," said he, "you should not waste your precious time curling your hair; if God intended it to be curled, he would have curled for you." "Indeed," said the witty maid, "I must differ from you. When I was an infant he curled it for me, but now I am grown up he thinks I am able to do it myself."

THE LATE COL. DANIEL MAC KINNON.

AT an early age (not more than fourteen) Colonel Mac Kinnon entered the Guards, as Ensign in the Coldstream. Shortly after that period the regiment was ordered to form part of the expedition intended by this country to co-operate with the Prussians against the power of Napoleon, and proceeded to Bremen. Nothing of moment occurred; the troops returned; and, in 1807, the expedition to Copenhagen sailed. Ensign Mac Kinnon, with the Coldstream, was present at the siege of that capital, which was soon subdued. During the siege the Danish Princesses, not being considered in safety in the town, sent for permission from the English to leave it. The firing in consequence ceased, the Guards (the Coldstream and 3d regiment) were drawn up and presented arms as the royal cortège passed the lines, and immediately after offensive operations recommenced. In this business Ensign Mac Kinnon distinguished himself in the trenches, where he was with a Serjeant's guard of his regiment, by taking up a bomb that fell near them before it exploded, and threw it out of the trench on the ground above, where it burst without any effect. By such acts the young officer endeared himself much to the soldiery. After the expedition had returned, the Guards enjoyed some repose in England until Spain declared herself against Napoleon, when our young officer, then Captain Mac Kinnon, proceeded to the Peninsula with his regiment. During the several campaigns of 1809, 1810, and 1811, he had ample opportunities of distinguishing himself by acts of the most undaunted bravery and extraordinary activity, which, united to a frank open manner and singular good temper, made him more generally known and beloved by the whole army than, perhaps, ever before fell to the lot of so young an officer, as yet a subaltern. With confidence the appeal may be made to every officer who served in the Peninsula, high or low, whether these extraordinary qualities had not made the name of Dan Mac Kinnon as familiar to him as his own, and whether they ever saw him surpassed either in good nature, in readiness to attempt any, the most adventurous, reconnoissance, or in zeal and activity scarcely ever surpassed. In great part of the campaigns he did duty on the staff as Aide-de-camp, and returned to England after the battle of Salamanca, where, it is said, that being taken with a fever two days before, he, in order to be present at the battle, where he was Aide-de-camp to General Fecmor, had, by direction of his surgeon, his head shaved, and a large blister put on, which, breaking during the action, ran into his eyes, and he has often said that the hot matter running over his face gave him more trouble and annoyance than the enemy's shot. After the action Capt. Mac Kinnon became delirious; his fever returned with greater violence, and he owed his life to the kindness and friendship of the Duke of Wellington, who sent him off the field in his own carriage. Captain Mac Kinnon returned to England, whose genial air soon restored him to perfect health. At the conclusion of the war, in 1814, he was promoted —not being more than twenty-three years old—to the rank of Lieut-Colonel; and, on the return of Buonaparte in 1815 to France, Capt. Mac Kinnon felt anxious to join his regiment then at Brussels. He went early in June to Ramsgate to embark, and, fearful of being absent, hired an open boat, reached Ostend, and was fortunate enough to join his regiment some days before the great action that sealed the fate of Napoleon. At the battle of Waterloo he was wounded early in the day whilst charging the enemy—a shot hit him on the knee and killed his horse; he did not, however, leave the field, but being ordered to defend the farm of Hugumont to the last extremity, he entered it with his men, forgetting his wound, till the French retired late in the day, and then he felt himself unable to stand, and was taken on a litter to Brussels.

Colonel Mac Kinnon was the second son of the late William Mac Kinnon, the head—chief, or laird, as called in Scotland—of a most ancient clan in the Western Highlands. He married, in 1825, the daughter of S. Dent, Esq., M.P. He has one brother and one sister; and his mother is alive, in perfect health, residing near Lymington.

THE LATE CAPTAIN SIR CHRISTOPHER COLE, K.C.B.

THIS distinguished officer, whose decease we last week recorded, entered the Naval Service in 1780, on board the Royal Oak, 74, and, removing shortly afterwards to the Princessa, he was present in that ship in the actions off Martinique and the Chesapeake in 1781, and in Rodney's battles of the 9th and 12th April, 1782, being then under twelve years of age, and one of four brothers serving in the West Indies. At the Peace of 1783, after serving a short time in the Trepassey, a small vessel commanded by his brother, Capt. Francis Cole, he joined the Atalanta sloop, under the late Sir Thomas Foley. He afterwards served in the Winchilsea, commanded by the late Visc. Exmouth, and accompanied Commodore Cornwallis, in the Crown, to the East Indies; and although he was so fortunate as to perform his noviciate under some of the most distinguished officers, he did not obtain his promotion until 1793, having served as a Midshipman thirteen years!

After serving as First Lieutenant of the Cerberus with great credit, he accompanied Lord Hugh Seymour to the West Indies as Flag Lieutenant, and was by him promoted to the command of the Surinam, a fine corvette captured at the reduction of the Dutch colony of that name. He was next appointed to the Southampton frigate, which ship he paid off in the Peace of 1802.

We next find him, in June, 1804, in command of the Culloden, bearing Sir Edward Pellew's flag on the East India station, from which ship he removed to the Doris, and, in company with the Psyche, escorted the late General Malcolm as Ambassador to the Persian Court. He remained a considerable time on the East India station, performing many important services. In 1810 he removed to the Caroline, of 36 guns, and in this ship captured the Island of Banda in a very spirited and gallant manner, and greatly distinguished himself in the operations against Java. He arrived in England in 1811, and was honoured with a medal for the capture of Banda. Early in 1812 he paid off the Caroline, when the following genuine epistle was addressed to him by his veteran crew:—

"We, the crew of H.M.S. Caroline, wishes to give you our most gracious thanks for the care and favour you have shown to this ship's company, by making you a present of a sword amounting to 100 guineas, for your noble and brave conduct when you led us to the storm of Banda, and likewise the zealous bravery in landing our troops at Batavia; and by excepting of this present you will gratify the wishes of your most obedient ship's company, (Signed) THE CAROLINES."

On the 29th of May, 1812, he received the honour of knighthood, and early in 1813 was appointed to command the Ripon, 74, in which ship he intercepted the Weser, a French frigate, and he continued serving until the close of the war, a period of 34 years from his entrance into the Navy, a very short space of which he had been on shore.

He was nominated a K.C.B., Jan. 2, 1815, and, having married Lady Mary Talbot, of Margam Park and Penrice Castle in 1815, he sat in Parliament for the county of Glamorgan until her ladyship's eldest son became of age. He had arrived at nearly the head of the list of Post Captains, and was a Colonel of Marines. In his death the Navy has to regret the loss of one of its most distinguished members, and the county of Glamorgan an active and intelligent magistrate.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. W. LONG.

AT a General Court-Martial re-assembled at Poona on 28th Dec., 1835, Lieut. W. Long, 8th reg. N. I., was tried on the following charges, viz.—"in refusing to receive an official letter, addressed to him by Lieutenant Hunter, commanding the Poona Police force, relative to a certain claim against him by Subedar Motee Ram, and other official business connected with the period during which Lieut. Long had previously held command of the said corps, at the same time telling the man who presented the letter to throw it away; and in falsely stating in a letter addressed to the Adjutant of the 8th regiment, N. I., that he knew nothing about the letter, and that it must have been returned by mistake on the part of the orderly who brought it." Upon which charges the Court found the prisoner guilty; sentenced him to lose one step of his regimental rank as Lieut. in the 8th regiment, N. I., which will place him immediately below Lieut. A. S. Hawkins and above Lieut. H. C. Morse, and to be severely and publicly reprimanded at such time and place as the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

Approved but not confirmed,

JOHN KEANE, Lieut.-Gen. Com.-in-Chief.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—Lieut. Long being found guilty of unofficerlike and highly disgraceful conduct in making false assertions in an official letter, dismissal from the service was the proper and only punishment the Court could award by the express declaration of the Articles of War. The Court have not stated any circumstances of an extenuating nature, nor can I discover, after an attentive perusal of their proceedings, any such grounds for the very lenient sentence they have awarded. The Commander-in-Chief hopes that the lenity shown to Lieutenant Long on this occasion, and the narrow escape he has had from ruin, will not be without their effect, but that he will endeavour to efface the stigma of his past misconduct, and regain the good opinion of his brother officers and the authorities under whom he serves, by restraining that intemperate and reckless spirit to which his present discreditable position may be entirely ascribed.

Lieutenant Long is released from arrest and directed to join his regiment.

Literary Notices.

Adventures of Bilberry Thurland. 3 vols. post 8vo. Richard Bentley.

This is the history of a young English adventurer, the son of a kind of female Autolycus, whose elementary instructions to her boy as to the means he should take to better his fortune are given with a humour and gusto worthy of Gil Blas. In fictions of this nature our language has of late not been fertile; we are getting too historical, or sentimental, or finical, and thus a rich mine of incident, character, and native humour has long lain neglected. Our wandering beggars and other itinerants are as worthy of being studied and described as those of Spain, in the literature of which country the novela picoresca holds a prominent station; for no sooner did Mendoza, in his admirable Lazarillo de Tormes, furnish the model of this class of comic romance than Aleman set about his Guzman d'Alfarache, from which, in after times, Le Sage pilfered so largely. Bilberry Thurland, the novel before us, is a work of this class, and is to the full as entertaining, as vigorous, and as pregnant in variety and humour as the famous productions to which we have just alluded.

Mrs. Thurland, the hero's mother, is a most felicitous delineation of a reckless, cunning, witty cheat, whose practices upon her fellow-creatures are not the result of sudden impulses, but based on a code of elaborate principles. She would cajole and out-wit Shakspeare's famous rogue in "The Winter's Tale," and it may, therefore, be easily conceived what work she makes with the English rustics with whom she comes in contact. Bilberry's career is pregnant with events, in the progress of which some scenes of life are unfolded which are, in the highest degree, strange, characteristic, droll, and sometimes even pathetic and picturesque. Among the accessories of the present novel we may notice the extreme fidelity of the descriptions of external nature, which are as fresh and as free from adventitious ornament as the landscapes of Hobbima. The book is altogether a welcome rarity, and, we think, must take a permanent station among English works of fiction.

Mr. Midshipman Easy. By the Author of "Peter Simple," &c. 3 vols. Saunders and Otley.

We must treat our readers with another chapter from this most amusing and spirited novel, which is superior to any of the other productions of the gallant Captain, except "Peter Simple;" and, indeed, we doubt whether it will not be a greater favourite with the public than that much admired work. It is replete with humour and pathos. We gave the birth of the hero last week, and we now submit the christening, a chapter completely Shandean. Captain Marryat's writings combine the wit and drollery of Sterne and Smollet.

"It was the fourth day after Mrs. Easy's confinement that Mr. Easy, who was sitting by her bed-side, in an easy chair, commenced as follows: 'I have been thinking, my dear Mrs. Easy, about the name I shall give this child.' 'Name, Mr. Easy! why, what name should you give it but your own?' 'Not so, my dear,' replied Mr. Easy; 'they call all names proper names, but I think that mine is not. It is the very worst name in the calendar.' 'Why, what's the matter with it, Mr. Easy?' 'The matter affects me as well as the boy. Nicodemus is a long name to write at full length, and Nick is vulgar. Besides, as there will be two Nicks, they will naturally call my boy young Nick, and of course I shall be styled old Nick, which will be diabolical.' 'Well, Mr. Easy, at all events then let me choose the name.' 'That you shall, my dear; and it was with this view that I have mentioned the subject so early.' 'I think, Mr. Easy, I will call the boy after my poor father—his name shall be Robert.' 'Very well, my dear, if you wish it, it shall be Robert. You shall have your own way. But I think, my dear, upon a little consideration, you will acknowledge that there is a decided objection.' 'An objection, Mr. Easy?' 'Yes, my dear; Robert may be very well, but you must reflect upon the consequences; he is certain to be called Bob.' 'Well, my dear, and suppose they do call him Bob?' 'I cannot bear even the supposition, my dear. You forget the county in which we are residing, the downs covered with sheep.' 'Why, Mr. Easy, what can sheep have to do with a Christian name?' 'There it is; women never look to consequences. My dear, they have a great deal to do with the name of Bob. I will appeal to any farmer in the county, if ninety-nine shepherds' dogs out of one hundred are not called Bob. Now, observe, your child is out of doors somewhere in the fields or plantations; you want, and you call him. Instead of your child, what do you find? Why, a dozen curs at least, who come running up to you, all answering to the name of Bob, and wagging their stumps of tails. You see, Mrs. Easy, it is a dilemma not to be got over. You level your only son to the brute creation by giving him a Christian name which, from its peculiar brevity, has been monopolised by all the dogs in the county. Any other name you please, my dear, but in this one instance you must allow me to lay my positive veto.' 'Well, then, let me see—but I'll think of it, Mr. Easy; my head aches very much just now.' 'I will think for you, my dear. What do you say to John?' 'Oh, no, Mr. Easy; such a common name!' 'A proof of its popularity, my dear. It is scriptural—we have the Apostle and the Baptist—we have a dozen popes who were all Johns. It is royal—we have plenty of kings who were Johns—and moreover, it is short, and sounds honest and manly.' 'Yes, very true, my dear; but they will call him Jack.' 'Well, we have had several celebrated characters who were Jacks. There was—let me see—Jack the Giant Killer, and Jack of the Bean Stalk—and Jack—Jack—' 'Jack Sprat,' replied Mrs. Easy. 'And Jack Cade, Mrs. Easy, the great rebel—and Three-fingered Jack, Mrs. Easy, the celebrated negro—and above all, Jack Falstaff, ma'am, Jack Falstaff,—honest Jack Falstaff,—witty Jack Falstaff.' 'I thought, Mr. Easy, that I was to be permitted to choose the name.' 'Well,' as you shall, my dear; I give it up to you. Do just as you please; but, depend upon it, that John is the right name. Is it not now, my dear?' 'It's the way you always treat me, Mr. Easy; you say that you give it up, and that I shall have my own way, but I never do have it. I am sure that the child will be christened John.' 'Ney, my dear, it shall be just what you please. Now I recollect it, there were several Greek emperors who were Johns; but decide for yourself, my dear.' 'No, no,' replied Mrs. Easy, who was ill, and unable to contend any longer, 'I give it up, Mr. Easy. I know how it will be, as it always is; you give me my own way as people give pieces of gold to children—it's their own money, but they must not spend it. Pray call him John.' 'There, my dear, did not I tell you you would be of my opinion upon reflection? I knew you would. I have given you your own way, and you tell me to call him John; so now we're both of the same mind, and that point is settled,' 'I should like to go to sleep, Mr. Easy; I feel far from well.' 'You shall always do just as you like, my dear,' replied the husband, 'and have your own way in every thing. It is the greatest pleasure I have, when I yield to your wishes. I will walk in the garden. Good-bye, my dear.' Mrs. Easy made no reply, and the philosopher quitted the room. As may be easily imagined, on the following day the boy was christened John."

The Court and Camp of Don Carlos. (Third Notice.) John Macrone.

We shall conclude with Mr. Honan's description of bull-fights, the great feature of Spanish festivity. This paper we have had some weeks in type:—

"About an hour before the fight takes place, all Madrid is in a state of excitement; the Calle Alcala is crowded with people; the balconies are filled with women dressed in mantillas and flowers. Every one puts on the national costume, and it is a point of fashion for the men to go in the beautiful Andalosian dress, and the women with white lace mantillas, the hair full-dressed, and the never-failing rose and comb. A squadron of cavalry parade the street—another of cuirassiers pass through them to keep order at the Plaza—the royal carriage, with six cream-coloured horses, comes dashing along—the guards turned out, trumpets sounding, and drums beating to receive them. . . Then follow the carriages of the nobility and gentry, of the ambassadors, and cavaliers on horseback, and innumerable calesas, or painted cabriolets, with the drivers sitting on the shafts, or running by the horses' sides. Nothing can be more exciting; and if a stranger were to judge only from this day, he would suppose Madrid to be the gayest capital, and not the dullest, in Europe. In fact, every one with a shilling in his pocket is out; and such is the devotion or the madness of the people for these sports, that no sacrifice is deemed too great by which they may be able to partake of them. The fancy here is composed of every class in society, from the king down to the lime-burner. There is honour, and not reproach, in being of it. The women delight in the blood spilt on these occasions, and ridicule the affectation of foreign ladies in shrinking from it. All is tumult, all is excitement, yet not the slightest disturbance takes place; such is the admirable love of order produced by good feeling on the part of the people, and by strictness on the part of the police. . . The Plaza is a great circular building, as large as the inner ring of Portman-square. The benches which surround the circle when the fight takes place, are first of stone, where the common people sit; then of wood, where the gentry take their places; and over all is a row of boxes for subscribers, the price to all being nearly double at the shaded side. There is accommodation for 12,000 persons, the price of admission varying from four shillings to one, and yielding on full days 1200*l.*; the net produce of which is applied to charitable purposes. Every seat is marked with a corresponding number on the admission ticket, so that the whole crowd is placed without the slightest deviation from good order. . . Near the Plaza there is a range of stables where the unfortunate horses are kept, and a reception-room for the toreros and their friends. This is a kind of dandy lounge before the fight, and the young nobles and old amateurs resort there to talk to Montes and other chiefs, and to discuss the merits of new adventurers. The banderilleros are seen adjusting the points of t beautiful dresses; the matadores displaying their co jackets, probably the gift of some noble and ignoble la the picadores trying the steadiness of their horses. latter is the most pleasing. You see him gallop up wall, with his lance pointed as if to attack the bull, instructing the horse to give a demi-volt when he strike into the brick, or to remain firm while he presses on it all his force. After several exhibitions of this kind, when all the toreros are assembled, each coming in an carriage, attended by a host of initiators or friends, trumpets sound as soon as the royal parties arrive, and a procession is formed; the matadores in front, and picadores bringing up the rear. In this way they m into the Plaza, and the moment of their entrance is signal for cheers which rend the skies. . . The view this moment, is magnificent. All the nobility, wea youth, beauty, and nationality of Madrid is collec Every one is seen to advantage. All are highly exci and as handkerchiefs are waved, and cheers given, on th trance of each public favourite, a stranger might suppose the day was devoted to the honour of some famed General deliverer of his country. Previous to this, a troop of cu siers, with trumpets sounding, has cleared the Pl and the alguaciles, dressed exactly in the same costum you see in the old engravings of Gil Blas, have gallope and in, with the orders of the corregidor to the keep the bulls. Then come the picadores, who are presente form to the Infante, and the several other toreros, who their places along the barrier which surrounds the ring, separates it from the people. An alguacil gallops a the Plaza with the keys of the dens, and, as he return shout of expectation rises to the sky, after which a profound silence reigns for half a minute, every eye b directed to the door from whence the bull is to i . . . At length the door opens, and out rushes devoted bull, with eyes glaring and nostrils distended. true game, the first object he sees he flies at; common is the horse, but the picador is prepared to receive him, his lance firmly held under his arm, and grasped with a of iron, the eyes of his horse covered with a handkerc He patiently waits the assault, and receives the anima the small spear, about an inch long, which is at the e the lance. The bull turns aside, and rushes at the man, who is called a chulo, or cheat; but he springs n barrier, and the bull drives blindly on at the next, an neat, each of whom escapes in the same manner. He rushes at the other horse, but the picador receives him the same cool resistence; and the bull, having mad complete circle, stands for a moment glaring at the cro assailants, until he selects one more forward than the whom he rushes at to overturn. The chulo allows hi approach, and just as he is about to strike, lets fall the scarf with which he is provided; the bull drives eage it, while the other turns adroitly away, or has recour the barrier. Sometimes a hardy chulo will cross hal Plaza, moving from side to side the painted scarf, the bull following every movement of it. If the man be pressed, a second chulo comes to his aid, and flings an scarf into the bull's eyes, who is attracted by the new ob Another succeeds, and you sometimes see the bull thus fuded for several minutes, until he stands foaming with and panting from exertion. Occasionally the bull will use the original chulo, and then no other resource is l him but to throw the scarf down, and to fly over the pa and the crowd delight to see the animal vent his rage o silk, tossing it on his horns, and tearing it with his The picador now becomes the assailant, and, moving ther into the Plaza, puts himself in the way of the If the animal be of good blood, he flies at the horse, an despite of all the exertions of the picador, overturns Sometimes he will raise them on his horns, and, by immensity of strength, bear them for a few paces. The poor horse is gored in a fe manner, his chest with deep gashes, his belly often r up, and, can I say it, his entrails hanging on the gro The crowd do not feel the cruelty, and all classes r transport, and cheer the bull, exclaiming that such a is always game, and the most delicate ladies wave handkerchiefs, and exclaim with delight, The picad the meantime, is in the last extremity; he is either d against the barrier, where his head is all but broken b shock, or he is under his horse, or dashed with violen the ground some short distance from him. The bull i blind fury attacks the horse, and generally kills him w few strokes; or if he rushes at the man, the chulos their scarfs in his eyes, and seek to draw him off by object. Sometimes he will not be deluded, and the pi has occasionally paid the forfeit of his life; but, gen speaking, the scarf, particularly a pink one, as far a him, that he leaves his fallen foe to follow it. Moote celebrated matador, is distinguished for his courag quickness; and I have seen twenty men's lives saved fearless dexterity. . . The whole dog is mad wi light on such occasions, and Montes, if he be in good per, gives some additional specimens of his art. H taken off the bull from the picador, he suddenly gathe earf into the ferm of a mantle, and as the furious animal ushes at it, he shifts it from side to side without being reck. He then holds it before it, and makes the bull run ound him in a circle, his eyes straining at the scarf, and eeing no sight for the man who is close to him. After leying with the bull for two or three minutes in this manner, he boldly turns and faces him, and, rolling up the cer, stands right before him, as if daring him to do his erst. The bull appears overawed, and to shrink from the eady gaze of his master, and, after a few seconds' pause, noves away to seek another enemy. . . Sometimes he rows back, puts his nose to the ground, and scrapes up the arth, throwing it over the back with his hoof, which is a gn of cowardice; but if he rushes at his foe, Montes coolly ips aside, and another chulo is at hand to catch his attenon. Sometimes Montes is hard-pressed, and then he rmps between the bull's horns and over his back. I have ot seen him execute that feat, but I have seen him clear ne horn, and run round and round the bull, with his black ap in his hand, without the animal being able to touch im. . . These are the most beautiful displays that can e made, and if bull-fighting had no other end it would be magnificent sport. The audience are enraptured; and houts, and cheers, and the waving of handkerchiefs, proclaim the enthusiasm of the people. Montes, who is a lain, slight, ill-made man, more like Lord Chancellor Brougham than any other person I know, receives all these onours with composure, and, after one or two bows to his atrons, flies again to save some of his companions' lives. . The picador's legs and thighs are cased in iron, and is clothes are padded, to save him from the effects of the lls; but often they are severely bruised. The head comes gainst the barrier with a force to split it, and the horse freuently falls over them. They have bodies of iron; and evilla, in particular, has a frame which appears to be unonscious of pain, and unsusceptible of injury, so often have seen him re-appear after every one thought he was finished r ever. This man is a wonder, and he alone shares the ighest honours with Montes. He is a short, thick-set perin, with a head like an ox, an arm of iron, and a courage f the highest order. He can, if his horse be steady, keep ut an ordinary bull at the point of his lance, by the brute orce of his arm; and I have seen him, when dismounted, ill hold his lance and protect himself from the next rush f the bull until relieved by a chulo. Montes is his guarian angel, and their united exertions seem to bid defiance o all the bulls of La Mancha. . . It was in defending im that Montes lately laid hold of the bull's tail, and ulled him from his fallen friend, and hung upon it until he beast panted for wind; and I saw him draw the bull way from him on another occasion, at the risk of his own fe, as he was almost pent against the barrier, while Sevilla ay flat on his face, with the tips of the bull's horns almost n his side. . . . The contest between the bull and the icador is the most cruel, and most acceptable to a true paniard. Sometimes the bull rushes at the horses in succession, and kills both at two strokes. The riders then waddle off, while the chulos protect them, and are remounted on the instant. Sometimes these men are unhorsed, and their steeds gallop about the Plaza, and afford excellent fun to the mob, as the bull pursues them, and they kick at him as he approaches, so that he is unable to approach them. In the meantime the grooms of the Plaza are obliged to come in and catch the horses, and it is good sport to see their fears if the bull directs his fury to that part of the arena; but the chulos crowd round him on those occasions, and occupy his eyes with their scarves until the beasts are caught, and the picadores are replaced. A bull frequently kills eight horses, and then his blood is set down to the beat, and others of the same breed are looked to with great interest when they make their appearance: and it is most remarkable that bulls of the same breed fight exactly in the same manner, and the experienced torero knows what he has to expect the moment one of a noted stock comes into the Plaza. . . When the bull is often repulsed, the picador becomes more bold, and advances in the centre of the Plaza; and then he and the animal stand as if daring each other, for five or six minutes. As long as the animal glares on him he stands on the defensive, and sometimes pokes him in the nose to bring him on; but if he draws back, and bends his head to the ground, and paws up the sand, the picador apprehends no danger, and he takes the chance out of the rest, holding it in readiness for the attack, if the bull should take fresh courage. When the people are tired of this sport, the corregidor gives the word, and the drums beat and the trompets sound, on which the picadores retreat to the side of the ring, and a new combat begins. . If the bull has proved a coward, in order to disgrace his breed, banderillas, with fire works in them, are given; if not, those of the ordinary description are used. These are feathered darts, about half-a-yard long, with a barbed point like a fishing hook; and the banderilleros, or the men who use them, holding one lightly at the point of the fingers of each hand, with the arms fully extended, rush at the bull, and as he furiously drives at them, the moment he stoops his head to gore, they strike them into his neck, and the sudden pain causes him to stop, during which pause they escape. It is the work of an instant, done with the quickness of light, and as if by magic. . . Who can believe that a man will meet the rush of a mad bull, almost let his horns touch his body, and then escape in safety? But so it is done; and the eye is lost in wonder at seeing those active persons coming on in a crowd, each darting his arrows into the bull's neck, and flying from him to give way to another. If the fire banderillas are used, the poor bull is tortured by the prick of the barb, as well as by the explosion of the crackers. He drives about, jumps up, and lashes his sides in agony, all which gives great delight to the people, who exclaim, 'Toca la música,' 'El bayle,' 'Es un baylarino." . . Sometimes the bull is such a coward that he will not meet the rush of the man, and then the banderillo is in despair; for it is only the fierce bull that can be fought, it being essential to all the operations of the game that the bull rushes at his opponent, and bends his neck to gore. Sometimes the man makes a false step, and then his death is certain, unless Montes is at hand. I saw a banderillero fell, and the bull was about tossing him, when the brave Montes rushed forward and covered his eyes with the scarf. A thought of time later, and the man would have been dead; but Montes saved his life, and then made the bull dance round the Plaza, amid the cheers of the multitude. . . When there has been enough of this sport, the drums and trumpets again sound at a given signal, and the last act of the tragedy begins. The matador draws a short straight sword, and unfolds a small red cloth flag, and then, kneeling before the royal box, asks leave of the authorities to kill the bull, in honour of some noble lady, some saint, or some patron. He then, attended by a chulo, who is generally another matador, walks towards the place where the bull is surrounded by the other chulos, who torment him by throwing their scarves in succession before him. If Montes be the matador, the excitement is great, and every one moves from his seat to watch what he is doing. This gives rise to a great uproar, and the cry of 'Sentarse' is heard from those in the back places to those more in front. . . As Montes comes up, the chulos withdraw, and station themselves behind the bull, to give aid if necessary, while he and his attendant chulo go before and unfold the red cloth, which at once fixes the animal's whole attention. It stands quivering with fear and rage before it, while Montes holds it from him on the right side. The bull's eyes glare, he gives a low moan, and dashes at the flag, tossing it as he meets it. Montes yields to his rage, and suddenly shifts it to the left. The bull eagerly follows the object of his terror, and the matador makes him go round and round him, watching the flag as it slowly revolves. When Montes sees the bull excited to the utmost degree, he prepares to kill; and, passing the stick on which the flag is to his left hand, he holds the sword in his right hand over it, exactly in the centre; so as that, when the bull rushes at the cloth, and stoops to gore, he is enabled to introduce the point of his sword between the cartilages of the neck, and force it down to some vital part. . . Sometimes the bull, particularly a half-game one, turns from the flag to rush at the man, whose life is put to the greatest hazard; and he saves it by a lucky turn, or the assistance of a chulo. The bull's horns are often far apart, and that is always a case of great danger; for, as the animal must pass under the arm, it is possible that the point of one horn may catch some part of the dress, and throw the man be overturned. This was the case once with our hero Montes, and his life was nearly forfeited by an accident of the kind. The bull's horn caught in the sleeve of the dress as he passed under it; and Montes stumbling from the slight shock, the bull suddenly swung round, and ripped up his thigh. Montes was thrown on his back, but no friendly chulo was at hand to render him the same aid which he so often lent others; and, as he lay, there was a groan of despair heard all over the Plaza, and every one rose in consternation, and horror-struck at the loss of their favourite. Montes was the only cool person in the ring; and, undismayed, followed, with his usual sang froid, the instructions given for such extremities,—namely, to divert the bull's attention by repeatedly kicking him on the nose when he stoops to gore. This manœuvre was so successfully tried on this occasion, that the bull was not able to plant one efficient blow on the body; and as soon as the chulo took him off, Montes was found to have received no vital hurt, and he was led to the surgery, always provided with two operators, where his wounds were dressed so well, that he was confined but a fortnight from their effects. . . The bull, if skilfully killed, should fall at the feet of the matador; but it is seldom that so direct a thrust can be given. Most frequently it takes three or four assaults to finish the animal, and if the matador bungles in the least, or shows any want of courage, the spectators assail him with every epithet, and exclaim loudly "Fuera, fuera!" A cowardly bull is killed with great difficulty, as it is his rush, and the stooping of his neck, which give the swordsman a chance, and sometimes he lives for a quarter-of-an-hour after the sword to the hilt is sheathed in his body, and the matador is obliged to kill him with a second weapon. . . The moment the bull is severely wounded, the chulos surround him and complete his exhaustion by throwing their scarves and exciting his impotent rage. In vain he retires from them, seeking a corner where he may die in quiet, but they give him not a moment's rest till his strength deserts him, and he sinks on his knees in the middle of the Plaza, and the moment after rolls over dead on his side. Sometimes he will stagger as if drunk from the loss of blood, and then the toreros catch him by the tail, and endeavour to overthrow him; and if he still struggle between death and life, one of them strikes a sharp nail into the brain, and ends his torment. A flourish of trumpets and the roll of drums proclaim that the victory is achieved, and a team of mules, gaudily attired and covered with bells, gallop into the field, and drag out the bodies of the poor brute and the horses that have been his victims. The moment the carcasses are removed, the drums and trumpets again sound, and another bull is let in to undergo the same persecution, and to share the same fate. Sometimes two bulls are fought at the same time. This is highly exciting, as the space for each is reduced one half, and the men and horses are exposed to greater danger. There is also this further risk, that as the torero jumps over the barrier to escape the rush of the bull, he may fall on the horns of the other; and sometimes the bull overleaps the paling, and two united will banish a whole field. The narrowness of the space brings the picador more into action;—I have seen a bull on such occasions receive twenty assaults from the picador before he was delivered over to the banderillero. The two matadores keep up a rivalry of dexterity and danger, to satisfy, if not their own honour, that of their partisans. As they play with the cloak in the manner of Montes, and kill without repeated efforts, the spectators are in delight, and shout on shout is heard at each new feat. . . If the fight be protracted till the close of the day, each cigar-smoker takes out his flint and steel, and keeps up a shower of light sufficient for the purpose of the toreros. Nothing can be more picturesque than to see the immense theatre at one moment in darkness, and the next lighted up by glancing fires,—to see the sparks twinkle like the gleam of glow-worms in a wood, and to hear the deafening shouts of the people as the feats of the principal actors are revealed. . . The father of the bull-fighters is Jose Candido, a man now seventy years old, but he can kill with all the certainty that he did in the prime of life. He is the teacher of Montes; and his scholar evinces for him the greatest admiration, and watches over his safety when he appears in the Plaza. It is wonderful to see this old man face a wild bull just brought down from the mountains; but such is the coolness induced by practice, the accuracy with which time and distance are measured, the principles on which the fight is conducted so certain, that, even before his trembling hand and weak frame, the power of the stronger brute is unavailable, and death is as assured of him as if the matador was in the prime of life. . . Bull-fighting is on the decline in Spain, or rather the Government do not give it the same countenance as formerly; but it is equally dear to the people of all ranks and ages, and it will be a long time before they can be weaned from it, or be convinced of its cruelty. . . The toreros were, until lately, patronised by ladies of rank, and they were in the habit of receiving handsome presents from those to whom they inscribed their perils of the day. It is said, even now, that Montes is the favourite of a lady of rank, and another is having his portrait taken by the first master. . . The dress they wear is magnificent, and a well-made and active man is set off to great advantage in a tight fitting silk jerket, embroidered in gold, silver, or silk, with tight web small-clothes, equally embroidered, white silk stockings, smart shoes, his shirt-collar open, a pink riband tied round the throat, a pink scarf round the waist, a small embossed black cap on his head. Some of these dresses cost one, two, or three hundred pounds; fifty pounds is an ordinary price. The men have all what would be called, among the fancy in London, a fighting head; that is to say, a low forehead, well-protected eyes, high cheek-bones, full mouth, and well-turned and light limbs. The hump of pugnacity, according to the Behcherian system of craniology, is decidedly marked. The profession is a lucrative one, for each matador receives 30*l.*, each picador 20*l.*, and each banderillero 10*l.*, for every performance."

Mr. Martin's industry is only equalled by his research. The history of Southern Africa, comprising the Cape of Good Hope, Mauritius, and Seychellas, is included in this volume, which is illustrated with very neatly executed maps of the Cape and Mauritius. The work is agreeably written, and gives a correct view of the early history and present state of our Colonies.

Travels in Europe, for the Use of Travellers on the Continent. By Mariana Starke. 9th Edition. Ib.

These books are most excellent, both in form and substance. The first is a guide through Holland, Belgium, Prussia, and Northern Germany, and along the Rhine from Holland to Switzerland, whilst the other includes the island of Sicily, and an account of the remains of ancient Italy, with the roads leading to those remains. Within a small compass they furnish abundant useful information for travellers, and are in all respects the best

A NEW HISTORICAL SONG ON ## THE DEATH OF WOLFE.

Words by Mr. T. Dibdin—the Music by Mr. T. Williams, with Historical Illustrations to each Verse.

RECITATIVE.

Shades of Britannia's sons, who sleep
In hallowed earth, or in the deep!
Spirits of the patriot dead! who fell,
Inspire me, while a Hero's fate I tell!

ARIA (la Polacca Time).

The martial strife is heard no more,
The din of war no longer reigns,
On that far-famed Columbian shore,
Where blood o'erflowed Canadian Plains,
(Tempo di marcia.)
Wolfe! dauntless Wolfe! has boldly led
Of gallant chiefs a patriot band,
And in the arms of Victory bled
For freedom and his native land!
(Polacca.)
The foe did thrice his force display,
But thrice was conquered on that day.

During the elder Pitt's administration, Wolfe, who nobly distinguished himself at the Battle of Lafelt, n little more than twenty years of age, was appointed the fittest person to command the Army destined ttark Quebec, the dominion of the French in North erica, well fortified and defended by an army of up- ds of twenty thousand men. The foe was repulsed hree different points during the day.

No father e'er his children loved,
No children mourn revered a sire,— Beyond what Britain's hero proved,
'Mid Gallia's fierce, unceasing fire!
His shattered wrist he calmly binds,*
While cheerly "Onward!" was his cry;
A second shot!—his heart now finds,
And Victory mourns, that Wolfe must die!
Then raise to him the glorious lay,
In Victory's arms who fell that day!

Wolfe, it is said, by an uncommon magnanimity and leness of behaviour, had attached the troops so much his person, and inspired them with such heroic ardour, t nothing seemed too difficult for them to accomplish: ice Mr. Dibdin's delineation—"No father e'er his ldren loved," &c.

Their captured flag a chief displays!
"They run!"—"Who run?" the hero cried,
"The foe!"—"To God ALONE the praise!"
He sigh'd, serenely smiled, and died.
(Funeral Procession—Largo.)
His honoured corse, a British grave,
With brother chiefs, they brought to claim,
Entombed with the Illustrious brave,
Where sleep the favourite Sons of Fame!
(A tempo primo.)
Then British Minstrels raise the lay
For him who died for you that day!

Towards the end of the Battle he received his mortal nd; nearly at the same moment a shout was heard.— They run." The dying hero asked with emotion— Who run?" "The enemy," was the officer's reply; ey give way everywhere!" The General then said, n one of you run to Col. Burton, and tell him to ch Webbe's regiment with all speed to Charles' er, to cut off their retreat. Now, God be praised! I die happy!" He then turned on his side, closed eyes, and expired! His body was brought to Eng- , and buried with military honours in Westminster ey, where a magnificent monument is erected to his nory. James, Major-General Wolfe, was born at sterham, in Kent, in 1726; died 18th Oct., 1759, 33.

late Monument to Wolfe, enclosing the stone against h he died.—Previously to Lord Aylmers leaving nda, he caused to be erected a plain, but substantial nan, on the spot where the gallant Wolfe breathed his , on "the Plains of Abraham," near Quebec.—(Vide ng extract in one of the Daily Journals a short time e.)

The only song of any note on the death of Wolfe is one beginning—"In a sad moulding cave where the tche't retreat.†" But these verses are merely metn- ural, giving no historical account of the battle. This g was written by Mr. T. Dibdin (the only surviving of the late celebrated Nautical Lyrist), expressly at suggestion of Mr. T. Williams, of whom it may not thought altogether impertinent for him (Mr. W.) to le that a younger brother of Mr. W.'s late father was led in this action, and also that the latter, Capt. R. , R.N., was with Lord Rodney on the celebrated 12th April, 1782.

To the etching which, when published, will accompany this song, there hangs rather a singular and interesting anecdote, pertaining to the late Lord Nelson. Nelson's last visit in this country was at Fonthill Abbey. At table, he happened to sit next to the late Mr. West, the then President of the Royal Academy, to whom he said, "West, I have often considered with much attention that admirable painting of yours, the Death of Wolfe, and like him may I breathe my last! Should fate, then, ordain it to be so, and you survive me, promise to illustrate my death with your usual skill and fidelity!" This was a singular, and rather a trying request. The President paused, but at length pledged his word that he would do his best in the event of such an occurrence taking place. In a very few minutes—so it is said—after this conversation, despatches came from the Government with orders for his Lordship to join the Fleet immediately. All, of course, was hurry and bustle—every one anxious to see the hero of the Nile, &c. take his departure; and as the coach drove off, Nelson, perceiving West among the group, put his head out of the coach-window, and said aloud—"WEST, REMEMBER YOUR PROMISE!" This gallant hero had his wish—he fell, like Wolfe, in the arms and at the very moment of Victory, and the President faithfully performed his promise.

* In the beginning of the Battle he was wounded in the wrist a musket shot. he wrapt his handkerchief round it, and con- ued to give his orders with his usual calmness.

† It may not, perhaps, be generally known that this song was written by the celebrated Deist, Tom Paine.

TO FAMILIES,

Travelling, Riding, Promenading, or in Excursions on the Water, the following Article is indispensable for personal comfort and attraction:—

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR is Extracted from the most beautiful exotics, and warranted perfectly innocent. It protects the Face and Skin from the baneful effects of the Sun and Dust—as Sun-burns, Tan, Parched Lips, Freckles, Harsh and Rough Skin, and an unpleasant heat of the Face; it also completely eradicates Pimples, Spots, Redness, and all Cutaneous Eruptions; transforms even the most Sallow Complexion into Radiant Whiteness, imparts a beautiful juvenile bloom, and renders the Skin delicately clear and soft. In cases of Stings of Insects, &c., it immediately allays the most violent inflammation, and renders the skin delightfully cool and refreshing. After Bathing, it protects the Skin from the injurious effects of Salt Water.

Gentlemen will find it allay the smarting pain after Shaving, and make the skin smooth and pleasant.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

Observe.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, is engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the cork; also printed in red, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oathe of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if left from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combe, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HUNTSON, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by R. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soups, Currie, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 79, Wilbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin,—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

THE VEGETABLE SYRUP DE VELNOS.—At this period of the year, when, from increased heat in the atmosphere, inflammation of the blood more frequent occurrence, the use of a medicine which can without debilitating the system, must be evident and advantageous, if not indispensable. Of such a nature and properties experience of more than half a century has proved that the Vegetable Syrup is unquestionably possessed. It is of peculiar efficacy in correcting, purifying, and sweetening the blood; in those who are afflicted with Scrofula, Scurvy, Scorbutic Eruptions, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from an impurity of the blood and juices, should, especially at this season, enter without delay upon a regular course of the Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this medicine in promoting insensible perspiration, is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure, it operates on the animal juices, and requires only the common restraint of moderation in diet. It is dissolved in the chyle in the stomach, is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects all tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe, though a powerful, substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mineral occasions.

The Syrup is prepared by Mrs. Cunham, No. 52, Berners-street, Oxford-street, and sold by her, and, with her authority, by all respectable Medicine Venders in town and country. Mrs. Cunham's recently published Treatise on Scrofula, Scurvy, Consumption, and Diseases of the Blood and Liver. Sold by Ridgway and Sons, 169, Piccadilly.

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANIC PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at all the public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Disease, in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will never experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs by taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppresses the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimples, Face, Scurfy, Scrofulous Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, the unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first introduced these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-st.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved mode of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty I had never before witnessed; but what I consider their most valuable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that render the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, three doors from Wells-street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance to take at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any one that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SIR,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more particular, as it was between my toes I have in a week after since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended the SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. EMDEN, Surgeon Dentist.

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the Government wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 58, Bishopsgate Without, in bottles at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by all Medicine Venders.

GRAND NEW BALLOON, to be called THE VAUXHALL ROYAL BALLOON,
Which will, when inflated with Coal Gas, ascend with from EIGHT to TEN PERSONS; and if inflated with pure Hydrogen Gas, with TWENTY-EIGHT PERSONS, besides Ballast and Apparatus.

The Proprietors of VAUXHALL have the great satisfaction to announce, that, after many months of anxiety and labour, this wonderful Machine is at length completed, and will make its FIRST ASCENT on FRIDAY, 9th SEPTEMBER, 1836, at Four o'Clock in the Afternoon.

This beautiful and stupendous Balloon has been constructed under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Green, to whom, on account of his great experience and success in Aerostation, (he having made 220 ascents,) the Proprietors have, with the utmost confidence, entrusted the sole direction. The Balloon is 157 Feet in circumference; and the extreme height of the whole, when Inflated, and with the car attached, will be 90 feet. It is formed of 2000 yards of crimson and white silk, imported in the raw state from Italy expressly for the purpose, and was dyed by Messrs. Jaques, and manufactured by Messrs. Sniper, of Spitalfields. The method of uniting the gores (the invention of Mr. Green) is by a cement of such a tenacious nature, that, when once dry, the joint becomes the strongest part. It contains 79,000 cubic feet of gas. The weight of atmospheric air sufficient to inflate it, is about 5,346 lbs., and that of the same quantity of pure hydrogen gas, about 364 lbs; the Machine would consequently, if inflated with that gas, have an ascending power of 4,982 lbs.; and allowing 700 lbs. for the weight of silk and apparatus, and 364 lbs. for ballast, would be capable of ascending with 28 persons of the average weight of 140 lbs. each. But Mr. Green in his first experiments in Aerostation, seeing the great expense, difficulty, and inconvenience of using pure hydrogen gas, conceived the possibility of substituting carburetted hydrogen, or coal gas, such as is used for illumination; and proved the truth of his assertion by ascending with his Balloon inflated with it, from the Park, on the day of the Coronation of his late Majesty George IV. From that time the use of pure hydrogen has been almost, if not entirely, discontinued, the expense of generating it being six times greater than that of coal gas. The specific gravity of coal gas being considerably greater than that of hydrogen, it gives a Balloon a much smaller ascending power; and the quality of coal used, and the methods employed, by different gas companies in its manufacture, are so various, (the specific gravity having been found to vary from 348 to 790) that it is impossible to ascertain exactly what would be the power of a Balloon inflated with it. It is, however, calculated that the new Balloon will ascend with from eight to ten persons, besides ballast and apparatus; the power varying according to the quality of the gas, the state of the atmosphere, and a variety of causes. As a matter of curiosity, it may be stated, that the inflated silk will sustain an atmospheric pressure of 20,403,600 lbs., or 9,122 tons. The net which entirely envelopes the silk is of hemp and the car (or basket work) the grapple or anchor is of wrought iron, and will be attached to an elastic India rubber cord from the factory of Mr. Sievier. This will prevent, in a very great measure, any sudden jerk in stopping the Balloon in rough weather, whereby so many accidents have occurred.

Among the many advantages to be gained from the enormous increase in the dimensions of this Aerostatic Machine, are the following:—A much greater elevation will be attained than hitherto has been, and the long-agitated question decided as to whether there are, at a great altitude, currents of air proceeding in one direction for several months together. This, Mr. Green, from many observations he has made, believes to be the case at an altitude where the atmosphere is not acted on by the reflection of the sun's rays from the earth, or dense masses of clouds. Should this theory be found correct, a grand step in the progress of Aerostation will be made. The great power of the Machine, even when it is filled with coal gas, will enable scientific gentlemen to ascend with philosophical apparatus, for the purpose of making experiments on Electricity, Pneumatics, Magnetism, &c., or Astronomical Observations, which, from the small dimensions of all other Balloons, has been impossible; and this circumstance has caused them to be regarded by scientific men as mere objects of public exhibition. A small chamber to be attached, in place of the car, is about to be constructed for the above purpose, in which from three to six persons can ascend, with ample room and every convenience for experimental apparatus.

It having appeared in a public print that the Proprietors of Vauxhall were about constructing an Aerial Ship, which was intended to be guided through the air, it is proper to state such a plan was never contemplated, the opinion of Mr. Green, and indeed of all other experienced aeronauts, being that that grand desideratum is totally impracticable to any extent.

Gentlemen or Ladies wishing to ascend will be pleased to apply personally at the Gardens.

The Doors will be opened at One o'clock, and the following Amusements given during the Afternoon:—A Concert—The Ravel Family's Performances—M. Javelle on the Tight Rope—The Coldstream and Quadrille Bands—Dioramic Picture of the New Houses of Parliament, &c. &c. Doors open at One o'clock. Admission, 2s. 6d.

The Voyages of the Royal Vauxhall Balloon will not be confined to Ascents in this Country; but arrangements are in progress to visit with it the principal capitals of Europe.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.
THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH
BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an Imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, Alex. Thorn, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilman, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*
GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.
G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.
* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

ANTI-DRY ROT COMPANY.—KYAN'S PATENT, established under Act of Parliament, 1835.—To Shipbuilders, Shipowners, and others.—The following additional testimonies in favour of the process have lately been received:—
London, August 24, 1836.
CORBAGR.
To the Secretary of the Anti-Dry Rot Company.
I, William Parry Richards, of 8, Wallington-street, Waterloo-bridge, Wine Merchant, do hereby certify that, early in the year 1833, owing to certain vaults in my cellars being very much affected with damp, I was requested by Mr. Kyan to try some experiments therein, with the view of putting to the best possible test the efficacy of his process against the rot, and consequent decay of rope and canvas, which I complied with as follows:—On the 23d of February, 1833, I suspended a weight of four pounds by a piece of half-inch cord, two yards long, which was prepared by Mr. Kyan, and an equal weight by a duplicate piece of the same cord, but unprepared, immediately adjoining it, and placed them in one of the vaults where my observations had previously shown me that cordage decayed with unusual rapidity. This trial was made with new cord of the very best quality, sold by Mr. Tull, in Penchurch-street.
The following are the memoranda kept by me in proof of this experiment:—
March 8, 1833—Fungus became visible on the unprepared.
July 4—The said unprepared specimen broke, and was replaced by another unprepared piece.
October 14—The second replaced unprepared cord broke.
Feb. 24, 1834—The third ditto ditto ditto.
July 22—The fourth ditto ditto ditto.
March 20, 1835—The fifth ditto ditto ditto, at which period the prepared piece was tried and found quite sound, although covered with fungus.
August 27.—The sixth replaced unprepared broke.
November 26.—The seventh ditto ditto ditto.
June 10, 1836.—The eighth ditto ditto ditto, and at the date hereof (August 24, 1836), which embraces a period of three years and six months, the prepared cord is still sustaining the 4lbs. weight originally suspended to it, and appears as sound as ever.
Three other trials of exactly the same kind were made in different vaults, but which have been consumed by supplying specimens at various times to Commissioners sitting at the Admiralty, and to other persons.
Canvas.—And with regard to my experience with canvas, on the 2nd of March, 1833, I placed some prepared and unprepared pieces cut from the same bolt in the aforesaid damp vault. The unprepared specimen has long since become quite unsound and rotten, while that which was prepared remains at the present time sound and firm in its texture.
Considering such tests as these to have proved incontestably to all who have witnessed them the great value and advantage of Mr. Kyan's process, I am convinced it will be well worth my while henceforward to make use of the preparation.
W. P. Richards.
Applications for licences, and all matters connected with the Company, to be made to the Secretary, 2, Lime-street-square, where every facility will be given by the Company to bring the process into universal adoption.

Two sailors were disputing on board ship respecting the wisdom of Solomon; and, after making very original and singular remarks on that mighty monarch, one of them closed his argument as follows:—"Why, Jack, you may talk till the tongue drops out of your wooden head; but I'll tell you what perhaps neither you nor King Solomon ever knew; that is, that d—n my eyes but the times are so altered, that if he was now alive, he would not know a jib-boom from a poop-lantern!"

PORTSMOUTH, Sept. 9.—(From our own Correspondent).—H.M.S. Jupiter, Captain the Hon. H. W. Grey, arrived from Columbo on Sunday, with part of the 97th regiment. The Jupiter had a capital passage home. She left Columbo, 2d June, St. Helena on 1st Aug., and Ascension, 6th Aug. (The Lynx was lying there.) Rear-Adm. Sir T. Capel was on his passage in the Winchester from Bombay to Madras. Andromache and Rose at Calcutta. Hyacinth spoken at sea on the 20th May, going to Bombay to receive her orders for England. Raleigh on the Coast of Java in quest of pirates. Zebra at New South Wales, but the Victor on her passage thither to relieve her. Algerine gone to Trincomalee. The Rattlesnake at the Isle of France. Wolf in the straits of Malacca. The Jupiter was ordered to harbour, but subsequent directions have been received for her to refit at Spithead, and hold herself in readiness for other service. Lieut. Rainier, R.N., on leave. Lieut. Gray and Messrs. Freeling and Newland, mates, from Raleigh, Com. the Hon. D. A. Pelham, and Mr. Hookes, purser, on promotion. Mr. Browne, master, and Mr. Lee, mate, from Victor, came passengers in the Jupiter. She spoke the Comittart from China in St. Helena roads the day she quitted. Beacon, surveying vessel, was paid advance on Monday, and sailed for Malta on Wednesday. Lieut. Ayscough to join Caledonia, and Mr. A. La Touche, to join Tribune, went passengers in her. Seaflower, Lieut. Roche, came in to refit. She is to go off Jersey when ready. Pique has bent sails, and got her guns in. She is expected to go to Spithead on Monday. Stakesby transport, Lt. Ward, R.N., with part of the 1st batt. of the Rifles, Capt. Warren, arrived at Spithead last evening, and is ordered on to Chatham to disembark them; the rest of the regiment are hourly expected in the Catherine Stewart Forbes. The Stakesby has had a good passage. We have a letter from the Melville at Halifax, dated 19th August. They have been very gay there. The Officers of the Melville gave a splendid ball on board to nearly 500 of the inhabitants. Sir P. Halkett intended to quit for the Southward about the middle of October, calling at Bermuda, to meet the English mail, and afterwards go to the West India Islands, commencing at Antigua, and spending Christmas at Jamaica. Ships in Port—Jupiter and Stakesby at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Inconstant, Pique, Royal George yacht, Excellent, Seaflower, in harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, Sept. 7th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Board of Admiralty having been expected last week at this port, for some days past anxious eyes were continually on the look out for them, particularly as the First Lord had never before visited the haven. On Sunday afternoon the Firebrand st.-v., with their Lordships on board, was seen making the harbour, and, passing this place about 5 o'clock, shortly after made her number to the Royal Sovereign yacht off Pembroke-yard. The Board, consisting of Lord Minto, Sir Charles Adair, Sir William Parker, and the Honourable Captain Elliot, accompanied by Sir W. Symonds, and C. Wood and H. Tuffnell, Esqrs., landed at the dock-yard the following morning at 10 o'clock, where they were received by Sir Charles Bullen and the Officers of the establishment, under a salute from a Guard of Honour, furnished by the Royal Marine detachment, when the Admiralty flag was immediately hoisted. That day they investigated the office accounts, and went over the ships in progress, all of which are on the plans of Surveyor Symonds, and in the evening dined with Earl Cawdor at Stackpole Court. The following morning their Lordships returned to the dock-yard and mustered the workmen; they then inspected the Marine detachment, barracks, temporary guard-house, pier at Hobbs' Point, went on board the Carysfort, lately launched from Pembroke-yard, and left for Tenby, where the Firebrand was to meet them, and convey their Lordships to Bristol en route to London. The Board generally, and the First Lord in particular, intimated their entire approbation of every thing connected with the establishment, and the able superintendence of Sir Charles Bullen. With the harbour, and the peculiar eligibilities of the dock-yard, which may be increased to almost any extent, his Lordship was particularly struck, and could not but feel with the King, when here as Duke of Clarence, that "the Port must become of essential service to the interests of the British nation." The Marine detachment, under command of Major Bailie, too, obtained their Lordships' encomiums; but the temporary guard-house, appearing so totally incommodious, insufficient, and uninhabitable, that it more than half inclined the Board at once to order the erection of the one contemplated, and for which a sum of money was readily granted to the last Navy Estimates. This, however, with the construction of a suitable barracks on the heights, the ground for which has long since been purchased by the government, their Lordships deferred deciding on until their return to town*. The Firebrand left this about 5 o'clock on Monday for Tenby. The Goodwill lighter came down here on Monday morning with Mr. Walker and a party of riggers, and took the Gibraltar in tow for Pembroke-yard, where she is now moored. As soon as the Mulgrave is undocked the Gibraltar will be taken in and broken up. It is calculated the expense of taking her to pieces will be amply repayed by the value of the cedar and mahogany, of which there is such a quantity in her composition. The orders for sending the Carysfort to Plymouth to be fitted for sea have been countermanded, and she is now again directed to go to Sheerness for that purpose. She is so far ready for navigating thither, that she is expected to leave in a few days. W. Perryman, an incorrigible character belonging to the Marine detachment at Pembroke, was tried by a Court-Martial last Saturday for repeated acts of insubordination, and sentenced to receive 100 lashes, and be discharged on a blank ticket. On Monday the punishment was inflicted in the barrack-yard, before the whole detachment; and, as soon as he recovers, the latter part of the sentence will be inflicted. It is not more than six weeks since this man returned from the county gaol, to which he had been committed for trial on charge of theft. The prosecutor, not appearing, there was no bill found against him at the grand sessions, and he consequently was sent back to duty.

* The value of the copper and other materials in the Dragon, 74, now used as a temporary Marine barracks, it is calculated will equal the amount of money required for building new quarters, so that the country will be at no expense in the affair.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, Sept. 9th.—(From our own Correspondent.—The African st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Joseph West, arrived here on Friday last, and very opportunely, as two rafts of spars were ordered for Sheerness, which one of the Steam Merchant Comps. had refused to take down the river under 20*l.* each, although they are allowed, by the Capt.-Superintendent's permission, to ship their boilers and funnels on board their vessels by the Shears here, which indulgence it is hoped will be discontinued, as the exorbitancy of the sum demanded is apparent, 10*l.* each raft being considered a fair remuneration; however, the African got her steam up on Saturday, and towed one raft down, and returned the same day, the other she took down on Monday, and came back to her moorings the same evening; she has since hauled into the basin. The want of a small tug steam boat is much felt; besides the evident utility of it, it would save the wear and tear of larger vessels. The African has been hauled into the basin, and is to be paid off. The Echo st.-v. has been masted, and has crossed her yards. The Columbia st. tr., Master Commander Henderson, has discharged her hands while she refits; she has had her old wheels taken off. The Alban st.-v., Lt.-Com. Tinling, will not, it is said, carry a Mate; she has taken in new boilers and funnel. She was hauled out of the basin on Thursday to moorings in the river, where she will be "turned end hand" by the shipwrights. The Sovereign tr., Lt. Brady, Agent, is taking on board Naval stores for the West Indies. The Flamer st.-v. has been taken out of dock for the Unite, 46, to go in to have her copper cleaned and over-hauled. It has excited no extraordinary attention in the Military circles here for some time past, that the Band of the Royal Marines should come down to the yard with the guard in the forage or undress caps, although the Officers are obliged to be in full dress.

PLYMOUTH, Sept. 8.—The fleet under the command of Rr.-Adm. Sir C. Paget weighed and stood to sea on Friday morning, and returned at noon, the Vanguard having carried away her main-yard, and another ship her spanker boom. The squadron sailed again on Sunday morning, but put back a few hours after, the Bellerophon having sprung her foremast. Sir C. Paget has shifted his flag to the Pembroke, and the Bellerophon is ordered into harbour, but the strong westerly winds keep her still in the Sound; on coming into harbour she will be fitted with the mainmast of the Donegal. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Russell, Bellerophon, Fly, Phœnix st., Partridge. In the Sound—Hercules, Vanguard, Pembroke, Minden, Madagascar, Scylla, Pataloon, Hope packet, Emerald tender, Eden convict ship.

On the night of 2d inst. the Firebrand st. arrived at Falmouth, having on board the Board of Admiralty. On the 3d Capt. Clavell, the Superintendent, and the Commanders of the Packets, waited on their Lordships on board the steamer, and in the course of the forenoon they proceeded, accompanied by Capt. Clavell, to survey the naval yard at Mylor, and the slip which is constructing for the purpose of hauling the packets up when requiring repairs, instead of their going to Plymouth. They proceeded the same evening for Guavas Lake, Penzance, and shortly after their departure, the Pantaloon arrived in quest of them; and on finding them gone, the Commander proceeded to join them.

The following Officers attended the levee of Earl Minto, at the Commissioners' Office, Plymouth, on Thursday:—Maj.-Gen. Vincombe, R.M. Captains—Curry, Sir J. Hillyar, Carter, Pascoe, Tremlett, Wilson, J. A. Worth, J. Bowker, Branch, Monds, Lawrence, Maurice, Hollinsworth, Kellow, R.M., M'Quhae, Phillips, Nott, Boger, Lillicrap, Mends, R.M., Barnard, J. Foote, Ellis, R.M., Davis, R.M., Glascock, Allen. Majors—M'Cullum, R.M., Walters, R.M. Commanders—King, Hamilton, Crowley, Oliver, Grover, Patey, Clarke, Hutchinson, Slaughter, Simpson, Smith, Webb, Parker, Pickard, Fuller, Haswell, Richards, Reeden, Thomas, Edwards, Mapyman, Padden, Chesmen, Lucraft, Tincombe, Maingy, Whipple, Pierce, Hewett, Cammillieri, Munday, R. B. Rowden. Lieuts.—Croke, Parker, Childs, R.M., Derriman, Walls, Nicolas, G. F. Somerville, Pennington, Lister, R.M., Hay, Warten, J. Somerville, Searle, Clarke, Rogers, Pleydell, R.M., Creser, Coets, Lean, Knapmen, Addis, Rye, T. Mitchell, Spurin, Charles, Hall. Physician—Sir D. Dickson. Surgeon—J. Morgan.

Mr. Harry M. D. Niblett, late acting Purser of the Comus, is eppointed first Clerk in Rear-Adm. Sir C. Peget's office.

The First Lord and the Board of Admiralty returned to London, from their official inspection of the Dock-yards, on Thursday evening, and resumed their official duties yesterday. Report states that their Lordships are highly gratified at the state of efficiency in which they found the different departments at the arsenals, and the crews af the ships in commission, some of which they mustered, and they would have inspected athers but for the accident which prevented the squadron accompanying them to sea.

We are glad to find the report which we some weeks back published, that Capt. Drinkwater was to have the Conway, confirmed. He has been ordered to commission that ship forthwith. We recollect Capt. Drinkwater some years back in the Mediterranean, in command of a brig, the crew of which he had brought into a high state of discipline, particularly as regarded their proficiency in gunnery. It always gives us pleasure to announce the promotion or appointment of an able and intelligent officer.

The statement which has appeared in a Portsmouth paper, that the water tanks on board the Vanguard were made purposely to the shape of her hold, is erroneous. They are of the same form as those usually supplied.

The John is taken up and fitting at Deptford, to take convicts to New South Wales.

The artificers or the wood and block machinery mills at Portsmouth, are ordered to work six days to renew the supply of blocks to the navy; and it is expected the same cause will require the sailmakers to work six days also.

Mr. Scott, not Henderson as mentioned in our last, of the Accountant's Office, Plymouth, succeeds Mr. Archer as Clerk of that Ordinary.

On Thursday the Numa transport, Lieut. Howe, Agent, arrived at Woolwich, and will, when her stores are landed, refit at Deptford. The Sovereign transport, Lieut. Brady, Agent, has taken a party of artillery from Woolwich to Gibraltar.

The Rhadamanthus is ready for commission and immediate service at Woolwich. Her forecastle and poop have been taken off.

The Emma, at Deptford, is loading for Malta. The Dock-yard artificers are to be allowed half an hour dinner time when they are working aßoat, and to go out in the evening an hour before bell-ringing.

The Diligence naval transport and Falmouth lighter are transferred from Woolwich to Chatham. The Check lighter and Messenger steamer are attached to Portsmouth.

The Rapid and Cockatrice brigs are undocked, and ready for commission at Chatham. Sir J. Gordon, of that dock-yard, is Acting Commander in Chief in the Medway, vice Admiral Fleeming, gone on three months' Admiralty leave.

Myrtle Harrison, a Boatswain Pensioner of Greenwich Hospital, was dashed to pieces by a fall from a very high landing-place, Duke of York's ward; and Philip Kilmany dropped dead on Crown's Hill. Verdicts accordingly.

Official notice has been issued that the Naval College, Portsmouth, will be discontinued at Christmas next, and the accounts and other affairs relating to the establishment closed by the 1st of March. The commissioned and other officers, &c., not entitled to retire, are to be placed in other establishments, such as Greenwich Hospital, &c., as vacancies occur.

Viscount Ingestrie, who has been on service three years in the Tyne frigate, is on the eve of returning to England.

We had inadvertently placed H.M.S. Saracen at Lisbon, in several of our late distributions, instead of the North Coast of Spain, where this vessel has been stationed since June, 1834, and performed good service, having been several times engaged with the Carlists in the river Bilboa, and sustained some loss in the protection of property belonging to British subjects, or to the Queen of Spain.

MALTA, Aug. 8.—"There are no men-of-war in this port, excepting Ceylon, with Rear-Adm. Sir T. Briggs's flag, the Favourite sloop of war, and Spitfire st.-packet, together with the Neapolitan steamer of war, Nettuno, and the French steamer, Phocion. An earthquake was recently experienced in Calabria, which laid waste the districts of Rossano and Cronia, scarcely a single house being left standing; 192 lives were known to have been lost, and 240 other persons were maimed and bruised.—The American squadron, under Commodore Elliot, left Toulon some time since, but intends visiting that part for supplies again in Oct. The Tartarus st., which brought the July mail from Falmouth, went on to the Levant on 24th ult., and on the 26th the Barham, 52, Capt. Corry, sailed for Zante. The French squadron under Admiral Hugon is cruising in the neighbourhood of Tunis, and consists of four sail of the line, a frigate, a corvette, and a store ship. Adm. Sir J. Rowley's squadron was last heard of at Zante, and was about to go to the Archipelago.—The Barham has lately returned from the Dardanelles, at which place she had some little difference with the Turkish authorities respecting the usual firman to pass the Castles. She had been ordered to convey Colonel Considine to Constantinople, and arrived off the Dardanelles on 5th June, and communicated, as is usual, with the Consul there, when it was found that, on account of the late business of Mr. Churchill, she could not be allowed to proceed to the usual anchorage, which is some leagues above the lower Castles; but the Pasha of these forts was fully given to understand that the Barham would return with interest any insult offered to the flag she carried. As soon, therefore, as the wind was sufficiently strong to give her any chance of success in working up against the strong current which always sets down, she cleared for action and weighed, and, with a smart breeze from the European side, she passed within her own length of the Castles of Europe. The Turks were surprised, but fired not a shot, though, to "save their bacon" with the Sultan, they burnt the priming of a few of the guns. Reports are rife here that the French squadron is about to put itself under the command of Sir J. Rowley, and that the Rodney is ordered from the Coast of Spain to join the united squadrons. This intention, it is asserted, is merely to manifest to the Russians in the Black Sea, that a coalition could be formed between the French and English ships, should their presence in the Mediterranean render such an alliance advisable."

The French Government have determined on employing a frigate in a survey of the banks of Newfoundland.

The celebrated French philosopher, the Baron Charles Dupin, last week paid a visit to Portsmouth Dock-yard; his inquiries were most minute, though he appeared to have a perfect knowledge of the economy and arrangement of the establishment.

COWES, Sept. 3.—The Royal Yacht Squadron is, we are sorry to say, near a close, both Commodore and Vice-Commodore having sold their yachts; the Duke of Norfolk also has offered his yacht Arundel for sale: and further, the Secretary has given notice to Mr. Goodwin, the proprietor of the Club House, to quit as soon as the lease is out, which will be about next July, the tenor of the lease being a twelve month's notice from either party. Seven yachts have been laid up this week.

A Toulon letter of the 1st inst. says:—"The concentration of the French Naval forces in the Mediterranean still continues. The Jupiter came into our roadstead today from the colonies. She is the ship on board of which Admiral de Mackau hoisted his flag when he was sent with his small squadron towards the French settlements in the ocean. It is stated that the Sylphe, commanded by Lieut. Rosamel, jun., which sailed a few days ago, is bound for the Levant, with orders to Admiral Hugon to return to Toulon with the ships under his command.

By letters received by the African st., which brought home the Mediterranean mail, we have the painful duty to state an act of insubordination had taken place on board the Rodney, which was attended with fatal consequences. It appears that one of the marines belonging to that ship, was reported by the Serjeant to be off deck during his watch, for which, by way of punishment, he was ordered to walk the gangway for a certain time; shortly the Serjeant having occasion to go forward, was suddenly knocked off the gangway by the said marine into the water, and received so much injury, that he died two days after.

It is reported that when the Bellerophon has shifted her foremast, for which purpose she has been obliged to go into Hamoaze, the squadron will proceed for a short croise off the coast of Ireland, and probably look in at Cork, where preparations have been made in expectation of their arrival.

During their late official visit to Falmouth, the Lords of the Admiralty inspected a packet of each class; namely, one of the old kind, a ten gun brig, and a new one (the Swift), built by Sir Wm. Symonds; and expressed themselves in strong terms of the great superiority of the latter, in point of efficiency and accommodation.

Mr. Drummond, surgeon of the Jupiter, has been appointed surgeon in ordinary to the Gov.-Gen. of India.

Ships on Foreign stations.—Blonde and Sparrowhawk at Callao, on 14th of April. Talbot at Coquimbo on the 7th April, expected to be despatched to Panama, and to call at Pitcairn Island with the annual clothing, &c. for the Islanders; North Star, on her passage to San Blas. Basilisk, on the Coast, in quest of runaway convicts. Harrier, at Buenos Ayres, on the 14th June. Scout, at St. Helena, 4th July, sailed for the Coast on the 7th. Beagle, in Simon's Bay, 8th July, was to sail next day for Ascension, thence to the West Indies and home. Pelican, sailed from the Cape to the Isle of France on the 4th July.

The following ships were put up by Dutch auction, at the Admiralty Office, Somerset Place, on Thursday last:—Scarborough, 74, sold for 6220*l.*, to Mr. T. Ward, of Shadwell; Greenwich, 74, for 5310*l.*, to Mr. Ledger, of Rotherhithe; Santa Margarita, 36, to Messrs. Browne and Ascuyne, for 1710*l.*; Zephyr brig, to Mr. Greenwood, of Plymouth, for 650*l.*; Swallow brig, to Mr. Wheeler, for 1000*l.*; the Salisbury, 58, Experiment, 44, and Surly lighter, were reserved, by order of Sir Thomas Trowbridge, the offers not reaching the estimate; but the sale of the others, particularly the Scarborough, was considered favourable for Government. The terms are, that the ships be broken up, and all articles marked with the broad arrow be returned to Dock-yard, and paid for according to a certain scale.

When the brave Sir G. Booke was making his will, some friends who were present expressed their surprise that he had not more to leave. "Why," said the worthy veteran, "I do not leave much; but what I do leave was honestly acquired: it never cost a sailor a tear, or my country a farthing."

EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON.

The following account of the recent trials of sailing, which we believe to be substantially correct, has appeared in the Times Journal. As it is not official, our readers must take it on trust, but we publish the whole matter relating to the trials, lest we should be accused of partiality. The comments of the writer who furnished this document (no friend of the Surveyor) are worthy of notice. He observes, if the Bellerophon had but the beam of the Vanguard, and if she had a leetle more beam, &c., she would beat the favourite. There is some truth in this, and the nearer the ships approach the proportions of the Vanguard the better position will they be found to sustain in the contest.

Friday, Aug. 5.—At 8.45 a.m., answered signal to prepare to try rate of sailing with Bellerophon and Pembroke, Cornwallis and Minden; signal to chase to eastward, wind from N.E. to N.E. by W., moderate, decreasing: at commencement of trial, 8. 50. under courses, single-reefed topsails, topgallant-sails, royals, jibs, and spanker. Bellerophon on weather quarter, S.E., distance a quarter of a mile; Pembroke on weather beam, E. by N., a quarter of a mile; at 10 gaining fast to windward, and fore-reaching on Bellerophon and Pembroke, but all reefs, following Admiral's motion, and in royals; at 11. 25. stood into light baffling winds off the Dunbuan, and shortly afterwards becalmed. At this period Bellerophon bore S.S.E. by angle distance two miles; Pembroke S.E. ¼ E., 1¼ mile. This trial ended here, Vanguard having, in two hours and 40 minutes, gained the above distance, and altered bearings in weathering as above stated. Inclination per pendulum never more than 2 deg.

Sunday, Aug. 7.—At 7 a.m., wind from E. by S. to E. by N., a gentle increasing breeze, under single-reefed topsails, courses, topgallant sails, jib, and spanker, Bellerophon on weather beam E. by N., by angle distance 450 yards. Answered signal, permission to take station as convenient, which being made to Vanguard only, was considered a challenge to try rate of sailing. At 9, 50, hove to, following Admiral's motions; at this period Bellerophon bore N. a difference of seven points, Vanguard having weathered and fore-reached to see the luff of Bellerophon's weather-bow. 10. 20. People at church, filled and made same sail, Bellerophon having closed Vanguard whilst lying to, and altered bearing to N. by E., Bellerophon by angle distance 530 yards. At 11. 30. tacked together at noon, Bellerophon N. ¼ W. by angle distance one mile. From noon to 2. 30, when tacking together, Vanguard had gained nothing on Bellerophon, partly from bad steerage and partly from baffling winds, but from that period to 5. 5., when Bellerophon shortened sail and hove to, Vanguard altered Bellerophon's bearings from N. ¼ W. to N.N.W., by angle distance 1¼ mile; Pembroke the next ship, N.N.W. ½ W., three miles; the other ships far to leeward, inclination per pendulum 2 deg.

Thursday, Aug. 11.—At 11. 20. a. m., a moderate but very unsteady breeze from E. to E.S.E., in order of sailing, in two columns, answered signal to try rate of sailing, steering W. under all sail; Bellerophon's mainmast bearing S. distance by angle 245 yards; Pembroke E. ¼ N., distance 632 yards; whilst breeze continued steady, Vanguard gained fast upon Bellerophon and Pembroke, and upon all the squadron. At noon Pembroke and Bellerophon the nearest to Vanguard, Bellerophon S.E. ¼ S. by angle 708 yards; Pembroke E. by N., 1,470 yards. From noon to 4 p.m. running out of the breeze, and the other ships astern bringing it up, but still dropping. At 4, Bellerophon by angle distance two miles: Pembroke E. by N. 1¼ mile. From 4 to 6 p.m. a light unsteady breeze, gaining fast upon all the squadron. At 6. 5. answered signal, shorten sail, and lie by for squadron. At this period Bellerophon, Pembroke, Cornwallis, and Scylla nearly the same distance astern, 3¼ miles. Bellerophon E. by N., Pembroke E.N.E., Cornwallis and Scylla E. by S. The Hercules, Malabar, and Partridge being six or seven miles astern.

Friday, Aug. 12.—Lying to head to S.S.E., a fresh increasing breeze from eastward, answered signal to prepare to try rate of sailing with Bellerophon, Pembroke, and ships mentioned yesterday. At 9. 50. made sail upon a wind per signal from flag shifted to the Pembroke, single reefed topsails, topgallant sails, courses, jib, and spanker; Bellerophon on weather beam by angle distance 250 yards, E. ¼ N.; Pembroke on the weather quarter N. by E. 600 yards; all the squadron in windward at greater distances. At 11, weathering and fore-reaching on Bellerophon, Pembroke, and all the squadron. 11. 15. carried away jib-tack, which, together with the wind veering two points to N. enabled Pembroke to close in our wake. 11. 30. set jib again, soon fore-reached and weathered upon Pembroke. Signal from Pembroke, tack immediately together; tacked, but Pembroke stood in and tacked upon weather quarter. At noon in two reefs in topsails together, per signal: could have carried former sail with ease, although the other ships appeared pressed; at this period Vanguard had weathered all the squadron, Scylla excepted; several mishaps occurred to Vanguard—in setting topsails after reefing, carried away earrings maintopsails, lowered ditto to secure them, carried away maintopgallant sheets in ditto in rebend; this enabled the Pembroke and Bellerophon to gain ground, but after sails were set and trimmed soon gained to windward and fore-reached. At 3 answered signal to discontinue trial, Bellerophon on lee beam, W.N.W. by angle distance 1⅞ of a mile, Pembroke on lee quarter, W. by S. 1,200 yards; Hercules, Cornwallis, Malabar, and Partridge far on the lee quarter, the Scylla on weather beam, E. by N. ¼ N. 1¼ mile. At the end of trial, although the breeze was decreasing, the sails being well set and trimmed, the ship trimmed also a little more by the head, was fast weathering and fore-reaching on all the squadron, and if the trial had continued, must have come up with the Scylla, the only vessel to windward; inclination per pendulum from 5 to 6 degs.

Wednesday, Aug. 17.—Wind W. by N. ¼ N. light and variable; answered signal at 8. 50. to close Hercules on lee beam; edged away to Hercules, standing to S. W. At 9. 15. answered signal to chase W., squadron in company; made all sail upon a wind; all the squadron in windward, except the Hercules: Bellerophon on weather beam, N.W. ¼ N. by angle distance 520 yards; Pembroke N. by W. one mile. At 9. 40. passed to leeward of Cornwallis. At 10. 15. weathering and fore-reeching on Bellerophon and Pembroke. At noon all the squadron to leeward except Bellerophon and Scylla; Bellerophon N. by E. ¼ E. angle distance one mile. Pembroke on lee beam one mile 300 yards; Scylla having weathered, but not fore-reached, all the other ships, fast dropping astern, and to leeward; rate of sailing from 5 to 6 knots per hour: inclination from 2 to 3 degrees. At 1. 20. answered signal, tack immediately; at this period Bellerophon N. by E. ¼ E., angle distance 2,400 yards. Pembroke S.S.E. 3,531 yards. At 1. 30. answered signal, tack immediately; neared Bellerophon, but lost ground by tacking twice in light wind in such a short space of time, Bellerophon having continued on the same tack. Pembroke tacked and passed a mile to leeward. At 2 Bellerophon tacked. Answered signal to tack immediately, being three tacks for one in light variable winds. At 3.45. Bellerophon tacked, and at 4 passed closed a-head of us, and when bearing N.W. ½ N., the bearing at commencement, distance by angle 389 yards. At 4 30. answered signal, form order of sailing, thus ending a trial of 7.15., in which Vanguard, by being ordered to tack so often in light winds, lost the advantage expected from equal tacks. Perhaps, as the signal was not made to try the rate of sailing, it was not considered necessary to give the Vanguard an equal chance; but under all these disadvantages the Vanguard gained on the Bellerophon, since in crossing the angle was increased 131 yards, Scylla weathered very much on all the squadron, having only tacked once. Pembroke fell much to leeward.

August 18.—At 9 a.m., a fresh breeze W. N. W., answered signal to prepare to try rate of sailing, wore to S.W., Pembroke, Bellerophon, and Malabar. Ditto Hercules and Cornwallis tacked at 9.20. under double-reefed topsails, courses, top-gallant sails, jib, and spanker; trial commenced, Bellerophon a-head and a little to windward, W.S.W., angle distance 900 yards; Pembroke on weather-beam, N. W. by W. ¼ W., angle distance 260 yards; Malabar on the weather-bow; Cornwallis on the weather-quarter; Hercules and Scylla on lee bow; the Vanguard was baffled and thrown out considerably, being under the lee of these ships, and Pembroke being so close as to take wind out of her sails, but luffing across her stern soon got to windward of all these ships. At 10. weathering fast upon Bellerophon and Pembroke and all the squadron; Bellerophon, S. by W. ¾ W., angle distance 3,000 yards; Pembroke, S. ¼ E., on the lee-beam, distant 1,480 yards. At noon, breeze occasionally freshening, Bellerophon, S. by W., angle distance 4¾ miles; Pembroke S. ¼ E., angle distance 5 miles; Scylla E. ¼ S., angle distance 2½ miles; all the squadron dropping fast to leeward and astern. About this period the wind favoured the Vanguard a point. At 1 p.m. Pembroke nearly hull down, Bellerophon dropping to leeward fast. At 3 p.m. Bellerophon S. ¼ W. angle distance 6¾ miles; Pembroke S. ¼ E., angle distance 7¾ miles; Scylla nearly in our wake, about 5 miles astern; Hercules appeared the most weatherly of the other ships; Bellerophon kept her bearings during the last hour, but dropped fast to leeward; Pembroke dropping to leeward and astern. At 4 p.m., answered signal to form order of sailing; observed Bellerophon shorten sail; could not take angles from haze and distance. Bellerophon S. ¼ W., estimated 7 miles; Pembroke S. ¾ E., estimated distance 8 miles. In topgallant-sails, and up mainsail and spanker, and bore away S. by W. for station, going 8 knots 2 furlongs; average rate of sailing 7 knots 4 furlongs; inclination per pendulum 5 deg. At 5. 13. took station on lee-beam of Bellerophon.

Aug. 20.—A fresh breeze from N. W. by W. to N. W. Topgallant-yards down and topgallant-masts struck; at 6 answered signal to prepare to try rate of sailing. Malabar's signal having been previously made to take a position a-head and to windward, hove to, to allow Pembroke and Hercules to come up, Cornwallis having passed and stood on a-head. At 9. 40., Bellerophon on weather quarter, made sail, angle distance 800 yards to windward of Van- uard. Made sail also; double reefed topsails, courses, eefed spanker, and jib. Pembroke on lee quarter, S. E. S., angle distance 920 yards, Hercules S. by E., Corn-allis N. by E. ½ E., Malabar N. W. by W. ½ W., wos-her beam, 1¼ mile to windward. Answered signal to arry sail as convenient. Up fore and main topgallant-ards and set sails. At 1 t passed to windward of Corn-allis, weathering and forereaching upon all the squadron. t. 30. Vanguard's signal, to tack immediately; in tacking, oin tack and sheet got foul, and could not be cleared for early five minutes, which threw Vanguard out a distance hat would have enabled her to weather Bellerophon asily; on nearing, Bellerophon shot up in stays, which mpelled Vanguard to bear up to pass astern; on hauling o the wind, crossjack, braceblock-strap, and bowline-strap arried away, sail partly aback; at noon passed to wind-ard of Malabar, and weathered all except Bellerophon; rom noon to 2. 50. came up two points, which gave Belle-ophon an advantage, which Vanguard was fast regaining, aving a steady strong breeze, when at 3. 25. signal to tack: t 3. 35. passed close to Bellerophon's stern, shortly after bserving Bellerophon's topgallant sheets carried away, in opgallant sails; 3. 55. carried away jib pendants, passed windward of Pembroke three quarters of a mile, observed Bellerophon, shortened sail, up courses and shortened to ame sail, ending a trial of 6. 15. in which Vanguard ould only claim an advantage of a few hundred yards. anguard could have carried single-reefed topsails easily.

Tuesday, Aug. 23.—A short indecisive trial, with Pem-oke going large.

Wednesday, Aug. 24.—A strong breeze from N. E. by . to N. E. At 8. 50. answered signal to prepare to try te of sailing. Reefed spanker, nut third reef maintopsail, nd employed shifting to second jib. When signal to com-ence trial, set courses, spanker, and foretop-staysail, coul jib not being ready, treble-reefed fore and mizen psails, topgallant-yards down, topgallant mast struck. ould have carried double-reefed topgallant-sails with ease. o signal made to carry sail as convenient. Bellerophon at is period (9. 5,) bore N., angle distance 800 yards; Pem-oke N. W., angle distance 1,350 yards; Scylla N. by W. ½ . 1¼ mile; Bellerophon being to windward, with jib set nd every thing ready, keeping good full, soon ran a-head. hen jib was set and sails trimmed, Vanguard soon wea-ned upon Pembroke and Bellerophon, but both these ips forereached; Pembroke from being upon weather uarter, in nine hours passed on lee quarter, and at noon bore S. E. ½ E., angle distance 2,400 yards; Bellerophon aving forereached, but gone to leeward S. E. ¾ E., 3¾ miles; cylla had also forereached, but dropped to leeward: at is period breeze became unsteady, and broke Vanguard 1¼ point; at 1. still bracing off, in all 3¼ points, which bringing Bellerophon and Pembroke a-head was a loss Vanguard of all she had weathered upon these ships om commencement, and the circumstances of their fore-achieving and going to leeward became a decided advantage them. Permission being required to make more sail, s el was shook out and the large jib set, and Vanguard as fast gaining ground, when Bellerophon shortened sail, eing the unfairness of continuing the trial. Wind having ifted nearly four points, at this period, 2.50., Bellerophon re S. E. ¾ E., angle distance 1¾ mile, Pembroke S. S. E. E. angle distance 1¼ mile, Bellerophon having altered her earings from north to the above bearings nearly 11 points leeward, but increased distance 1¼ mile, Pembroke from W. to S. S. E. ¾ E., passing from weather quarter astern leeward 14¼ points, increasing distance nearly half a le.

Saturday, Aug. 27.—At 9. 50. A.M., steering E. by N., nd W. by N. to W. by S., a steady moderate breeze; swered signal to try rate of sailing, and carry same sail Admiral—viz., single-reefed topsails, foresail, topgallants, yals, topgallant, and fore topmast studding sails. Belle-ophon, S. ¾ W. angle distance 880 yards; Pembroke, S. by . ¼ W. angle distance 1,350 yards; 10. 30. made sail, llowing Admiral's motions. Set lower studding sails and ntop studding sails, gaining fast on all the squadron cept Pembroke. At noon, breeze freshening, gaining fast on Bellerophon, and also upon Pembroke; Bellerophon, W. ¼ W., angle distance 1¼ mile 110 yards; Pembroke, S. W. angle distance 1,900 yards; Scylla S.W. by W. ¼ ., angle distance 1¼ mile; the rest of the squadron far tern, and dropping fast. At 1. 45. signal to shorten l, and close Admiral. Bellerophon W.S.W. angle tance 2 miles 1,533 yards; Pembroke, S.W. ¼ W. 1 le 540 yards; Scylla, W.S.W., 2¼ miles. Vanguard's antage over Pembroke was evident when breeze ckened. Scylla appears to answer well on all points.

When Admiral Boscawen added no gloriously to the rels so often reaped by British tars, and defeated the nch Fleet, he was under the necessity of going on rd a boat, in order to shift his flag from his own ship nother, in the midst of a violent storm. In his pas-e on shot went through the boat's side, when the Ad-al, taking off his wig, stopped the leak with it, and by t means kept the boat from sinking until he made the p be intended to hoist his flag in.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards—Lieut. the Hon. J. W. B. Macdonald has resigned his appointment on the Staff of the Lord Lieut. of Ireland, and returned to head-quarters.

7th Hussars—On Monday the King reviewed this regiment, under the command of Lieut. Col. Hall. In the evening his Majesty entertained the Officers, at a grand banquet in St. George's Hall, covers were laid for upwards of one hundred. At the review one of the soldiers fell from his horse, and was so seriously injured that his life was despaired of. He was immediately removed to the hospital, where he has remained ever since. Yesterday the King, without any previous notice, drove to the Horse Barracks, inquired for the hospital, and desired to be shown into the room where the poor soldier was lying, and asked him in the kindest manner how he was getting on. His Majesty had the gratification of learning from the wounded man that he was much better.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards, 1st bat.—On Wednesday a district Court-Martial was held upon John Bolton, one of the Pay-Serjeants at the Wellington Barracks, St. James's-park, and a great deal of interest was excited in consequence of the high character which the accused had borne in the regiment. Lieut.-Col. Lyster was president. The Serjeant, who had embezzled upwards of 40*l.*, with which he had been entrusted to pay his company, was sentenced to three months hard labour at Brixton, and to be reduced to the ranks. It was also ordered that half of his pay be stopped until the defalcation is fully made up.

1st West India Regiment—The recent augmentation of this corps has given promotion to two very old and very deserving officers, Lieut.-Colonel Capadose and Major Chads; the former entered the Army in 1794, and has served from that period to the present time constantly in the East or West Indies; the latter was A. D. C. to the late Major-Gen. Sir James Campbell when Governor of Grenada, and received the highest testimonials from that officer on retiring from his command.

On Wednesday last eight cos. went through infantry evolutions on the barrack field, under the inspection of Col. Adye, C.B., with great steadiness and precision. By letters from the Mediterranean we are sorry to learn that Lieut. Matthias (brother of Lieut. Matthias, first of the Caledonia flag-ship) had been killed by being thrown from his horse at Zante, whilst engaged in a racing match.

New Pay and Pension Warrant.—Horse Guards, Sept. 1.—Sir, I have it in command to direct your special attention to His Majesty's Warrant, dated the 18th ult., which has been transmitted to you by the Secretary at War, and to express Lord Hill's desire that you cause the provisions of that document to be fully explained to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers composing the regiment under your command, impressing upon them, by every means in your power, a due sense of the important advantages thus held out to them as the reward of perseverance in obedience to their military superiors, and in general good conduct. The principal object of this letter is to enjoin Commanding officers to take care that, so far as depends upon them, none of the benefits conferred by the Warrant in question shall be enjoyed by any but the well-conducted soldier; that nothing amounting to misconduct, in the ordinary acceptation and meaning of that word, shall, on any account, be overlooked; and that every instance of misconduct shall be distinctly registered against the individual in the regimental records, so as to preclude the possibility of his coming into possession of either additional pay or pension, to which his behaviour as a soldier, and as a member of society, shall not have established his claim under the provision of the Warrant. The General Commanding-in-Chief is too well acquainted with the high principle of the officers of the Army, and has too confident a reliance upon their love of order, discipline, and subordination, to suffer himself to entertain the remotest auspicion that any of them will ever lend their instrumentality towards obtaining for the unworthy any of those rewards which their King and country have provided exclusively for the meritorious soldier. I have, &c. John Macdonald, A.G.

The following depots at Chatham are now paid and commanded by the Acting-Adjutant and Quartermaster of the Provisional Battalion, viz.:—2d, 3d, 13th, 25th, 40th, 62d, and 63d Regiments. If two individuals can pay and command so many depo's, we wonder at the economists not having proposed that the Captains of depots be discontinued.

As a proof of the extreme dishonesty of the piratical Limerick Chronicle, we request our friends to compare our Military Intelligence of last week with the Limerick of this; viz.—of Wednesday, the 7th, when they will find at least twenty paragraphs copied from our pages. As we have before said, the Limerick only exists by its pilfering from us. We shall probably make arrangements for publishing in Limerick.

STAFF CHANGES.

Major-General Sir Alexander Woodford remains at Gibraltar (as will be seen by his being gazetted Governor instead of his former appointment of Lieutenant-Governor), with an increased salary of 5,000*l.* per annum.

Sir Edward Blakeney returned to Dublin on Wednesday with the rank of Lieutenant-General, and retains the command of the Forces in Ireland. His promotion, over the heads of numerous gallant officers, has given great umbrage. It is reported, that his two permanent Aides-de-Camp are Captain Bruce and Lieutenant Fitzroy Somerset, of the Guards; extras, Captain Lord Hamilton Chichester, 7th Fusiliers, and Lieutenant Conroy, Grenadier Guards; Military Secretary, Major Greaves, 34th Regiment.

Major-General Sir Henry Bouverie, commanding the Northern District, succeeds to the Lieutenant-Governorship of Malta, on the resignation or retirement of Major-General Sir Frederick Ponsonby, who is at present on leave in England, and the command of the Northern District is, we expect, to be given to Major-General Sir Richard Jackson, now Deputy Quartermaster-General at the Horse Guards.

There is a vague rumour of Lord Frederick Fitzclarence being appointed Brigadier in command either of the Eastern District of Ireland or of Dublin Garrison only.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. F. Dundas.

At a General Court-Martial, held at Nusseerabad, 3d March, 1836, Lieutenant-Colonel James Fullerton Lindes, 2d Batt. Art., was arraigned on the following charge, preferred by Captain Rawlins of the same regiment, viz.:—with having caused to be overdrawn and misapplied the sum of 600 sonat rupees, by falsely certifying that a mess was maintained in the 2d Bat. Artillery during the months of March, April, May, June, and July, upon which charge the Court, upon consideration of the circumstances of the case, and the manifest intention which he, in common with the majority of the officers of the battalion (the prosecutor included), entertained of establishing a more regular mess, considered him justified in drawing the said money, and therefore most honourably acquitted him.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—His Excellency embraces this opportunity of making known to the Bengal Army, that this is the only case during a period of seven months which has rendered the assembly of a General Court-Martial for the arraignment of European officers necessary, and he contemplates it as a most flattering and gratifying compliment to himself, because he is willing to attribute much of the altered state of the army, in this particular, to the kindly feelings with which they have received such advice as His Excellency has taken occasion to offer them, and to the attention which they have paid to what he has said.

The case under consideration was simply as follows: Lieutenant-Colonel Dundas had signed several certificates to the effect that a mess had been maintained in the 2d Battalion of Artillery, and had accordingly drawn the mess allowance of 120 rupees per month. The Lieut.-Colonel was charged by Captain Rawlins that this was a false certificate, no mess having been maintained, and consequently that the allowance was overdrawn and misapplied. The Colonel proved that there was a flock of sheep with two shepherds, and that the flock was called the "mess-flock," and that food for the sheep and the labour of the shepherd was paid for out of the mess allowance, and that the mutton or lamb was or might have been divided or disposed of among the officers at the headquarters; but the Commander-in-Chief could not but think that the bonâ fide establishment and maintenance of a mess was the contingencies on which the allowance was meant to depend. On a careful examination of the whole case the Commander-in-Chief cannot think that the proceedings or the result of this Court-Martial satisfactory, but as he does not foresee that good would result from calling for a revision, His Excellency has confirmed, the same subject to the foregoing remarks;—Lieutenant-Col. Dundas is released from arrest and will return to his duty.

THE BANKS OF THE STREAM.

Away to the streamlet, away, away!
The sun is up in his realms of light,—
But it is not alone from his captured prey,
That the fisherman wins his keen delight,—
Ah no! 'tis the breath of the infant day,
'Tis the air so fresh, and the sky so bright,
In these is the fisherman's best delight.

And what is so sweet as a morn like this,
And what so fair as these tranquil dells
When dances the heart with its thoughts of bliss,
When the wild, clear note of the sky-lark swells,
When the cowslip is wooed by the sun's first kiss;
And nestles the bee in its amber cells,—
Oh! such are the charms of these tranquil dells.

Then give me the rays, and the birds, and flowers,
Oh! not for the world would my heart forego
The pure sweet joys of these peaceful bowers,—
And the charms which the thought of the past can throw
On our happier days and our calmer hours;
When kindling again the impassioned glow
Which t deemed with my childhood had ceased to flow.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

DISMISSAL OF OFFICERS—THE ROYAL PREROGATIVE.

[The high station this Paper maintains, arises as much from its strict independence and impartiality, as from its superiority of information on all Military and Naval topics. We accordingly publish the following letter, though we disagree with the writer on some points, and more especially in that of the discipline of our ships, which is so relaxed and different from the strictness and authority the Captains formerly maintained, as to forbode the worst consequences. —Ed.]

Sir,—I trust, with your usual impartiality, you will give the following remarks a place in your valuable and influential Paper. It is high time, Mr. Editor, the system of neglect and oppression, pursued towards the officers of the Navy generally, but especially towards the unfortunate rank of Lieutenants, should be noticed and exposed. It may be necessary to observe, that the Lieutenants are in a different situation from that of any other class of officers on board H.M. ships. The officers of Marines, the Masters, the Medical officers, and the Pursers, have each an intermediate "Board," or other superior, interposed between them and the Admiralty, who watch over their interests, and to whom they can appeal, in the event of their suffering any unjust treatment from their superiors on board ship; consequently, we seldom or never hear of any of those officers being treated with the contumely and contempt with which the Lieutenants are so frequently visited. The unsatisfactory replies of the Secretary of the Admiralty to the different motions brought forward in the House of Commons by Sir Edward Codrington on the subject, show plainly enough his consciousness that the conduct pursued towards Naval officers cannot bear the light, and evince the determination of the Admiralty to uphold and perpetuate the exercise of a most oppressive and unconstitutional power. I am only surprised the Lieutenants of the Navy have hitherto conducted themselves so well, considering the degrading system of discipline to which they are subjected. These unfortunate men, Sir, are treated in the most disgraceful and degrading manner, and still they are expected to act like gentlemen! —they are treated as slaves, and they are expected to show the courage and the conduct of freemen![*]

Yes, Sir, like slaves! They are subject to a system of the most hateful tyranny. What is the definition of a tyrant? Not one who uniformly acts in a violent and unjust manner, but a superior who possesses the power of doing so if he pleases. Such a system would bow down the spirit, and brutalise the conduct of any class of men, and is calculated, with devilish iniquity, to lower those officers in their own estimation, and in the opinion of all other persons. I am no advocate, Mr. Editor, for insubordination among the inferior officers of any service, any more than I would uphold tyrannical conduct upon the part of those in command; but, Sir, if we would wish the law, military or civil, to be respected, it ought to be humane, reasonable, and well defined; nor should any officer who may perhaps have shed his blood, and spent the best part of his days in the service of the country, be at remembered, as well as the crown, be turned over to disgrace and ruin at the caprice of any unprincipled superior. It would be in vain to reply here, and say—there are many men of interest, and sons of nobility, serving in the Navy in the rank of Lieutenants; such fortunate persons are well assured that they will ere long be shot through the degraded rank by the force of interest, and are cheered by the hope of being speedily relieved from such a state of degradation.

The recent attempts of Sir Edward Codrington, Mr. Hume, Capt. Boldero, and others, to obtain some revision of so hateful a system, are deserving the thanks, not only of the service, but of the country. I care nothing, Sir, about the names of Whig or Tory—actions are the best of principles, and the only just ground upon which to challenge the confidence of the public. The appeals which have been made to Parliament in favour of the unhappy victims of Naval tyranny, have been designated by the cauning absurdity that, indeed, the House of Commons was endeavouring to interfere with the government of the Army and Navy! Miserable subterfuge! Never was there a more contemptible endeavour to shuffle off, and shrink from, a just and constitutional responsibility. These gentlemen, Sir, appealed to Parliament and to the public, not in their capacity of officers, but as citizens of a free state, who have suffered unjust and arbitrary conduct at the hands of certain public functionaries. We have been also told, Sir, that a parliamentary inquiry into such acts of oppression would be an infringement upon the prerogative of the crown. It is a gross libel upon a King of England to assert that he claims the power of doing wrong; and I am fully persuaded that our present most gracious Sovereign would be the last man in his dominions who would either perpetrate or permit any injustice towards even the meanest of his subjects; but it would be impossible for the chief magistrate of any county to inquire personally into every case of the kind. It is the unworthy depositaries of his power, who, by their unjust conduct, bring a scandal upon his government, and inflict a lasting injury upon a service upon which the country must ever rely in times of difficulty and danger; for be it remembered, that every such act of oppression will be quoted as so many admitted principles and established precedents for increasing the power and diminishing the responsibility of the Admiralty. I assert, Sir, it is clearly within the province and privileges of Parliament to scrutinise into the conduct of Ministers and all public functionaries, and to hold them responsible for the honest administration of those vast powers which have been confided to them for the service of the country.

In illustration of what has been advanced above, I will just allude to one of those cases of hardship brought under the notice of the House of Commons: that of the late Capt. Edwards, R.N. That gentleman may have been of dissipated and extravagant habits;—be it so. It appears he became involved in some pecuniary difficulties, and a person who alleged a debt against him applied to the Admiralty for redress! What had the Admiralty to do with it? But that Board, instead of referring the supposed creditor to the proper legal tribunal, thought fit to take upon themselves the task of inquiring into the private and pecuniary affairs of an officer upon half-pay, and, by so doing, presumed to usurp to themselves the functions of the civil magistrate. Capt. Edwards, it is stated, was struck off the List of the Navy, not because his conduct was dishonourable, but because he (and justly) refused to recognise such an inquisitorial power upon the part of the Admiralty. Allow me to ask, Sir, if that officer felt himself aggrieved in any pecuniary or other civil transaction, would the Board of Admiralty have interfered to see him righted?

Are we then to be told, Sir, that the Royal Prerogative is to be exerted only for the oppression of officers in the service of the crown, and not for their protection?—that it is incompatible with even-handed justice? Believe me, Mr. Editor, such doctrines will go further to bring the system of kingly government into disrepute, and Royal Prerogatives into contempt, than the writings and speeches of all the Radicals and Republicans in the kingdom.

NEW TITLE OF THE NAVAL SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE.

Sir,—Lest by any chance you should miss so good a thing, I send you a paper containing the report of a lecture read at the Bristol Association. The inhabitants are still, I understand, in doubt whether or not it was intended as a hoax, for the worthy President deported himself with the greatest gravity, and nothing seemed to divert the attention of the audience except inwards the class, when some unmannerly person sung out, "Did you ever?" and "Lop." I think you will join with me in opinion, that the ci-devant school have now earned a cognomen which will stick to it for ever; and I trust you will apprize your readers of the fact. A vast deal of humbug there has been displayed and tolerated at the meeting, but nothing at all approaching to this. It has had the effect, however, of putting the people in good humour; for, now that their astonishment has ceased, they enjoy a hearty laugh at the whole affair; and it has a little enlightened the dull monotony which such a satiety of science had produced.—Long life to the Lop-Endians.

Clifton, 7th Sept., 1836. Chip.

[We have not allowed the opportunity to pass of noticing the "Lop-Endians." Hitherto the discussions on naval architecture have been rather dry, but we anticipate much amusement from the future lucubrations of these sages.—Ed.

ON HONOURS—KNIGHTHOOD.

Sir,—In one or two of your numbers a few months since I remember to have read with much interest some remarks on the subject of honours conferred on Naval and Military men, and I well recollect your very just observation, that unless those on whom these distinctions were bestowed felt and knew that they had had the good fortune of finding opportunities against the enemy of meriting these marks of royal favour, that such honours must always sit most awkwardly upon them, and be regarded but as so much tinsel and silk.

In order, then, to make titles and insignia valuable in the eyes of the world, they should never be conferred on Military and Naval Officers but for some signal service in war, whereas, of late, we have seen Knighthood showered down like hail-stones in the sister isle, and almost every Commander in the Coast Guard Service, who happened to have furnished a boat to the Lord Lieutenant to convey him across a river, has been at once dubbed a Knight! I mean not to dispute the prigate worth of either or any of those officers, I believe them to be excellent men, but I do contend that it must seriously lessen the value of Knighthood altogether, to find it bestowed for a service of this kind, and it is to be hoped that His Majesty, as the fountain of honour, will command some measures to be adopted without delay for putting an end to these unlimited vice-regal distributions of honours on Military men; and that, henceforward, those marks of distinction will be conferred by the King alone upon the officers of his Army and Navy.

Sept. 1, 1836. An Admirer of Just Reward.

ON THE EMPLOYMENT OF THE DOCK-YARDS ON SATURDAYS.

Sir,—The sum you mention, 50,000*l.* as being sufficient increase to the navy estimates for employing the Dock-yards on Saturdays, may, I think, be materially reduced, if the expense of building and repairing revenue cruisers, steamers, &c. at private yards, be taken into consideration. The amount of this expenditure, to which the nation is at present subject, should of course be deducted from that contemplated, to bring these establishments into active operation on the idle day. But, as you say, even if such a sum were required, it is a well-ascertained fact, that the talented secretary, Mr. Wood, would meet little or no opposition from members of the House of Commons to a proposal of that nature. I cannot, with you, imagine that in some instances work may be done cheapest at merchants' than at the King's yards; for, however lower the original cost, it must be acknowledged that the rapid decay which ensues from the want of seasoned materials, doubles the ratio in the former to what takes place in the latter instances. I fully agree with you, though, on the greater profits to merchants in the repairing than in the building department, and can instance the case of a friend of mine, (no singular one in any seaport town), in a very extensive way, who never builds but when he has no repairs. His plan is, always to keep a small vessel on the stocks, merely to give employ to his apprentices and a few workmen, (whom he is compelled to keep on constant pay), when old work is scarce; for, as he quaintly enough observes, "new work seldom brings in new money." These vessels he sells when completed, just sufficient to clear his outlay. Your perseverance in this cause will ever endear you to the Dock-yard people; and, if success follow your efforts, you will deserve at their hands a lasting token of their gratitude.—The insertion of the above will oblige your old contributor, PHILOTHEORUS.

MR. HOLLAND AND THE ROYAL NAVAL COLLEGE MEDALS.

SIR,—I observed a statement in your journal of August 27th, that Mr. Holland, lately promoted, was the last who had obtained the first medal at the Rl. Naval College at Portsmouth. Being a Collegian I am desirous that this error may be corrected. The fact is, a medal is still given at that establishment, though no claim for promotion is now attached to it; but this change in its value did not take place till June 1831. Prior to that period, all who entered the College were bound to remain six years in the service, and it was always the custom, and considered to be a rule, to promote those who obtained that medal and passed a good examination at the end of their service. After that date the bond was removed, and all value, except as an honorary distinction, was taken from the medal, but, of course, this could not affect those who entered before that date. The following is a list of medallists from June, 1828, to December, 1832:—June, 1828—Mr. Ward, a Lieutenant; December, 1828—Mr. Gardiner, left the service; June, 1829—Mr. Hulland, a Lieutenant; Dec., 1829—Mr. Ross, dead; June, 1830—Mr. Moorsam; Dec., 1830—Mr. Kingston; June, 1831—Mr. Crawford; Dec., 1832—Mr. Heath; June, 1832—Mr. Wood; December, 1832,—Mr. Spicer.

Mr. Spicer is, therefore, the last who obtained the medal under the old system, as he must have entered the College before June, 1831. Mr. Moorsom is now the senior medallist not promoted. It appears he passed his examination for commander in June, 1835, and at the College in Nov., 1835. Mr. Spicer cannot yet have passed.

As this statement can be verified by the returns, &c., the insertion of it will oblige

A COLLEGIAN OF JUNE, 1830.

Portsmouth, Sept. 1st.

[We hope to enroll a Collegian in the list of our Correspondents. The subject of his present letter shall have our early attention.—ED.]

COAST GUARD SERVICE.

SIR,—Observing a statement in your valuable Gazette of the 6th August last, from Brutus, relative to the payment of the compensation for half-pay to the Lieutenants in the Coast Guard Service, I beg to correct the same, by stating that the above officers are kept without it generally a month after it becomes due: for instance—in the Hastings District it was not paid for the last quarter until the 6th August, which is the case at least three quarters out of the four, and which alone requires to be strictly looked into; for every man who has a family must be fully aware of the inconvenience attending such unnecessary delay, independent of the injustice done to a body of zealous and deserving individuals.

There are many more acts of injustice inflicted with impunity on the Lieutenants of the Coast Guard, which your worthy correspondent Numa has omitted to state, but which will shortly be made public through your valuable paper, if you have no objection to notice them.

Sept. 5th.

PAY.

ROYAL NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

SIR,—Several weeks having elapsed since last I addressed you on the subject of the "unnecessary office expenses of the Royal Naval Charitable Society," the interval has been, I am pleased to see, ably filled up by your kindness in giving publicity to the communications of your several correspondents on that subject, who have so clearly introduced so much new matter, which, if adopted, will tend very considerably to improve the present system in the management of our Society.

I should be wanting in gratitude to your correspondents, Philanthropist, A Thirty Years' Subscriber, and An Old Member, did I not request your further attention in conveying to them, through your valuable columns, my most sincere thanks for their able support in the cause of "consistent economy;" and I beg to assure them most candidly, and the members generally, that I was influenced by no personal motive, having been solely actuated by the wish that the Society's affairs should be conducted with less expense (calling into consideration our decreasing funds, with increasing claims), which I assert can be easily effected, without diminishing the respectability, as feared by some, of the efficiency of the Society's arrangements; and they may rest assured that I will not relax my exertions, and trust that the advocates for reform will be in the majority at the next meeting (10th October).

I decidedly agree with Philanthropist that other societies are to be no criterion for us; we are, I hope, fully competent to manage our own affairs. In fact, I should be very sorry to pay the "members of the Royal Naval Charitable Society" an ill a compliment as to suppose for one moment that they are not quite efficient to the duties. I am as well aware as Philanthropist that much perseverance is required to remove a long-existing evil: it therefore calls forth for all friends to good management to be strenuous in their exertions, and to bear in mind that, during the last five years and a half, the Society, I regret to add, has lost by death nearly 500 members; consequently, a very great increase of claimants, without a proportionate addition of new members.

I am not surprised at the idea entertained by a Thirty Years' Subscriber and his friends, relative to our "Annual Office Expenses" not exceeding 120*l.*: it is quite in accordance with what has been expressed to me by several members in London who are not general attendants at the quarterly meetings. I hope they will add their weight to the "scale of reform." The granting a gratuitous office in a government building would be a rich boon conferred upon us.

Having noticed in your correspondent, An Old Member's, letter, the thanks of several ladies to me and others for our exertions, I beg to express to those ladies my warmest acknowledgments, and assure them they will find me persevering in the good cause, their approbation being a spur to my endeavours. There are many suggestions contained in his letter well deserving our deepest consideration.

The advertisement expenses of the "Charitable" and "Royal Naval Annuitant" Societies present such a contrast, that I cannot avoid extracting it from An Old Member's communication. The former amounted to the extravagant sum of 13*l.* 10*s.* in 1835, while the latter, including its eight branches, was only 8*l.* 4*s.* I feel assured that the strongest advocate for the present system, in viewing this, cannot but admit that a revision is highly necessary. The "office expenses" alone (247*l.*) for that year engrossed nearly a fifth of the annual receipts, or 988 Lieutenants' subscriptions out of the 1250. In conclusion, I beg to return my thanks to Philanthropist for his faithful report of the proceedings at the last meeting of the "Royal Naval Charitable Society."

I entreat those who do not subscribe to this truly laudable institution to come forward; many of the most distinguished and affluent are enrolled as members or donors, from a benevolent desire to support a society of brother officers, who, having shared in the perils of their profession, renew the bond of fraternity by aiding to smooth the pillow of death, and calming the dying officer's fearful apprehension of leaving a beloved wife and orphans to the cold sympathies of a wretched and heartless dependence. With the hope that all will bear in mind the immortal Nelson's last words—

"England expects that every man will do his duty,—" with this feeling, Sir, allow me, for your continued attention to the interests of the "United Service," to subscribe myself your grateful correspondent,

COIR FOR SAILORS' AND SOLDIERS' BEDS.

SIR,—The readiness with which you admit into the columns of your estimable Gazette, any communication which has for its object the good of the United Service, renders any apology from me on the present occasion quite unnecessary, for the subject on which I now address you is certainly one of great importance in the amelioration of the health and comfort of our seamen and troops, and I offer this opinion on the strong foundation of personal experience.

As to whether the sailor will be benefited by the reduction of the Captain's share of Prize-money and consequent increase of his, or by some other alterations that have taken place in these days of reform, is, in my opinion, very hypothetical, for a forty-years' experience has proved to me, that (with but few exceptions) he will get rid of ten pounds in as short a period as of five; but it is not a matter of hypothesis, whether the man will be more healthy by sleeping in a dry bed or a wet one.

During a long and particularly active servitude, it was my lot, so the wat, to be a good deal in small ships employed in the blockading, and other arduous services, off Brest, in the Bay of Biscay, and on the coast of Ireland, when the almost universal custom of keeping the sea in all weathers frequently reduced our people to the most distressing condition, having their bedding, and every article of clothing soaked with rain or the sea, and, notwithstanding all opportunities were taken to expose them to sun and air, in the winter months, the intervals of fine weather were so short, that I have often known this miserable state of the men to continue for a fortnight, and hundreds of times I have suffered the most painful sensations on going between-decks, and inhaling the dank vapour driven out from the bedding by the heat of the men's bodies, and also arising from the accumulated quantity of wet clothing, and for which the state of the weather precluded all remedy, and I have as often gone to bed under the most gloomy apprehensions on the all-important subject of health, and passed many a restless night in endeavouring to devise some antidote to the evil, but without success; nor have I ceased to be anxious on the matter during the time I have been unemployed, but have constantly watched for anything that might effect so great an improvement to the condition of our sailors and soldiers, as the removal of this terrible source of disease amongst both, for our troops, when embarked on board small transports, according to the present wretched system, are quite as badly off as the seamen.

Under these feelings, it was with much gratification that some time ago I received a paper, stating the discovery of a substitute for hair and other materials, at present in use for beds, by Captain Wildey. It is coir, or the fibre of the outer coating of the cocoa-nut. The valuable properties of this article are stated in the paper to be so numerous that I felt somewhat sceptical, and therefore determined to have ocular proof; the result of which is, my firm opinion that this is one of the most beneficial discoveries, particularly for the Navy, that has been made for a great many years.

Amongst the advantages of coir over hair, &c. are durability and unsusceptibility of injury from wet; but the point of most consequence of all is, that it will dry in one fifth part of the time that hair or flock will, and hence consists its superior adaptation for sailors' and soldiers' beds, as, under the above-mentioned circumstances of their being wet, exposure to the sun and air for an hour and a half will render them perfectly dry, which in hair and flock beds I have frequently known could not be effected in a whole day.

Coir has also a peculiarity which renders it still more valuable, but which I am not chemist enough to account for, it is this—that although every other material, after being much wet with salt-water, on all occasions of moist air is liable to give, coir, let it be ever so saturated with salt water, being once dried in the sun, the most humid atmosphere will not cause it to evince the slightest dampness; on the contrary, so congenial to it is salt, that whenever the bed-tick is worn out, if the coir be immersed for an hour or two in salt-water, then dried in the sun, and put into a new case, it will be like a perfectly new bed.

I have stated to you the result of my observations and inquiries, and as I think the trial of coir, as a material for sailors' and soldiers' beds, is a desideratum of great consequence, I trust you will favour me with space for these few remarks, and give your powerful aid in so good a cause by drawing the attention of the Lords of the Admiralty to the subject. I must add, that a coir bed would not be more than two-thirds the price of a hair one, and is much lighter.

ROYAL ARSENAL POLICE, WOOLWICH.

SIR,—It has often been commented on here, by those who have observed how excellently adapted for all exigencies the Dock-yard Police has been since its formation, that a similar force has not been raised to assist the military in the protection of the public property in the Royal Arsenal, which, in addition to being the grand emporium of the "matériel for war of this great nation, is considerably exposed to pilfering: and, when we remember that all ordnance stores are here delivered by transports from all quarters of the world, the obvious utility of the establishment of similar chests for the reception of nails, coppers, &c., as in the Dock-yard, (which would otherwise be thrown away), which are now picked up and therein deposited by the Naval Police, and which alone, since the formation of that body, has amounted in value to a considerable sum, beyond a question. From the high state of efficiency and discipline of the Dock-yard Police, under the respective warden and director, Lieut. Peake, R.N., (which has often been the subject of eulogium by members of different Boards of Admiralty), I should think the valuable co-operation of that gallant officer might be secured; and, by a similar corps being raised, the assurance of safety to this public depot in all its varied departments, fully relied on.

Mr. Schloss, the English and Foreign bookseller, has very handsomely undertaken the publication of a Narrative of Trials on the Western Coast of Africa, by the late James Fawckner,—who, it will be remembered, lost the whole of his furniture and property in the recent lamentable fire at Plymouth,—with the laudable intention of raising something considerable, by the sale of so interesting a Narrative, to compensate that gentleman for his heavy calamity. It is a novel way of repairing damages, but as we understand these adventures contain full portraits of the manners of a country so little known, embracing a period of six years, during which Captain Fawckner explored a vast deal of the Coast; we augur that it will be successful, particularly as they are inspired in a modest octavo volume.

TO SUBSCRIBERS AND THE PUBLIC.

We have sincere satisfaction in reducing the price of the NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE to a sum that will render it available to every class of Officers. The alteration in the Stamp Duty, which comes into operation next week, gives a reduction of little more than 2½d., and the present Sevenpenny Papers will in future be sold at 6d. and 4½d. We shall not, however, be influenced in this matter by our contemporaries, but intend to give our Subscribers the benefit of a Reduction of one-third in the present price: the Naval and Military Gazette will therefore, after this day, be published at 8d. instead of One Shilling.

Experience has proved to us, that the circulation of a journal is not altogether dependent upon its price; as, when we advanced this Paper from 7d. to 1s., the change did not occasion us the loss of one hundred Subscribers; and our circulation has since gradually and steadily increased, until, at the present moment, it more than doubles the number when sold at sevenpence. Still we are aware that many Half-Pay Officers, who are desirous of filing this Gazette and preserving the professional intelligence it contains, have been deterred by the expense, which, although comparatively trifling to some, is of importance to others as regards their limited incomes.

A Reduction of a third is a boon which only one other periodical (the Court Journal) has announced; and when it is considered, that three-fourths of the contents of the Naval and Military Gazette are original, the professional information not only early but authentic; and that the course which we adhere to of eschewing politics, avoiding personalities, and maintaining a strict independence, renders our Paper acceptable to all parties, we do not assume too much in stating that we represent the interests of the United Service.

That many of the measures advocated in our pages have been subsequently adopted, is at least a proof of the soundness of our views; and the large space we appropriate to our Correspondents, thus inviting free discussion on all subjects connected with the Service, is the certain mode of eliciting truth.

Finally, we shall observe, that the humblest member of the United Service has ever found us an advocate in a just cause, whilst the highest authorities have had our prompt defence of good measures when misrepresented for party or other purposes.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1836.

IT does seem as if a certain portion of the public press had a systematic design to ruin the United Service, labouring incessantly to subvert its discipline by officious interference with the conduct of officers. We speak not of those low publications which pander to the worst passions of the mob; but of leading, and strange to say, the conservative journals in the greatest circulation, which profess to give information upon current events, and oftentimes assume to lead and direct the opinions of their readers.

In the Times and Morning Herald of this week a paragraph has appeared, purporting to be a letter from Plymouth, and evidently inserted with the intention of tarnishing the reputation of the Board of Admiralty, and through them the existing Government; without considering that the publication of this libellous matter, as regards the efficiency of the ships under Sir Charles Paget, is calculated to bring our Navy into contempt amongst numbers of persons who have no better means of information than what the newspapers afford, in this as well as foreign countries. It is lamentable to think that any motive could have induced the conductors of these journals to admit such a statement as the one in question, which, besides being utterly untrue, is evidently the splenetic effusion of some disappointed expectant, who pretends he would rather be at once rudely informed that his pretensions were ridiculous and incompatible, and far outweighed by the merits of his brother officers; than that the First Lord of the Admiralty received him with courtesy, noted his request, and gave him to understand that his claims should have due attention when opportunity arrived; meaning, when those of greater merit had been satisfied.

We recollect the time when the lament was loud, that the First Lord would not receive an officer of lower rank than a Captain; subsequently it was complained that an ungentlemanly want of courtesy was shown by that Minister; and now it appears that civility goes for nothing, and rudeness is desired. As we conceive it an imperative duty to defend the reputation of every person, high or low, connected with the Navy or Army, when unjustly assailed, we will appeal to the Service, whether the conduct of the present First Lord and his two immediate predecessors has not been such as to give general satisfaction, as regards their reception of officers; and as respects the distribution of their patronage, we challenge the author of the scurrility in question to compare the promotions of the last three years with those of any antecedent time. There can be no mistake in this matter, the means are immediately available, for we this week complete a return, commenced in our last, of the names of all Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants promoted between the 1st January, 1825, and the 1st January, 1835, and the Navy List will show the remainder up to the 30th of June, 1836. Upon a scrutiny of these names it will be found that, taking the Naval Administrations of Lord Auckland, Earl De Grey, or the Earl of Minto, either conjointly or separately, considerably more than two-thirds (we may say full three-fourths) of their patronage has been bestowed upon merit, without the least consideration of political influence, or even political feeling; for, in many of the cases, the officers promoted have been Tories; we have before published data to prove this, and challenge contradiction.

But the Naval officer does not confine himself to a sneer at the First Lord in return for a gentlemanly reception; he calls the Board of Admiralty an incapable one. We will not now canvas the reputation of the individual Members of that Board, nor the estimation in which their characters are deservedly held by the Navy and the country;—we will point to their acts, and be satisfied with enumerating the two last, viz., recommending to the executive and obtaining from the legislative without a dissentient vote, a great increase to the active service of the Navy; and placing the Ordinary under such a system as to render its whole strength available upon emergency, and thus give the facility of nearly doubling our actual force should occasion require. These two acts, besides many others already effected, or under consideration, are no proofs of incapacity in the view of the Service and of the nation, whatever may be asserted to the contrary.

Next as to the efficiency of the squadron lately commissioned. This unworthy member of an honourable service ("'tis a villanous bird that defiles his own nest") asserts, that the ships are badly manned, and the officers incapable of doing their duty. We could only wish that some opportunity was afforded before an enemy to put this to the test. That the ships are not all manned with prime seamen we will admit, and this could not be expected whilst the pay of the Merchant Service is put in competition with the King's. When it becomes necessary to offer extraordinary inducements, no doubt the best men will be obtained. The crews want only exercise and that rigorous discipline, which few Captains are inclined to enforce in the present day, to become as efficient as those of line-of-battle ships need be, and they have a much greater portion of seamen than was usual in ships of their class during the war. It is by keeping up a respectable force, and giving employment to officers and men, that the efficiency of the Navy can be maintained, and the nucleus of future crews preserved ready against a sudden increase is called for. We trust that we shall never more see the miserable economy adopted, of reducing the number of men beyond the moderate estimate which has been taken for this year, but that the policy of increasing it further will be admitted, and seamen employed in every department when they can do their duty, so as to be already disciplined and available for immediate service in case of war.

WE have very sincere pleasure in notifying to the Madras Army the appointment of Colonel Welsh thereof, by the Court of Directors, to the Staff as a General Officer. This nomination will show the Coast Army that its veteran and gallant leaders of other days are not wholly overlooked by the home authorities, and cannot but tend much to remove the ill-feeling engendered by the appointment some time back to the division staff, by the influence of interest alone, of one of the youngest Colonels of the Madras Army, to the exclusion of many whose claims to the distinction surpassed, as did their length of service, ten-fold those of the individual so appointed.

The career of Colonel Welsh was one of hard and good service to the Government. He performed several most gallant achievements, and considered with his general high character as a soldier, richly merited that his name should have been among the first of those submitted to our gracious Sovereign for the Companionship of the Bath, on the extension of that Order; but alas! this day we perceive his gallant breast, like many others, has most unaccountably been left unadorned with the distinction. Let us hope, however, that his being called to active service as a General Officer will bring this omission to notice n the proper quarter, and lead to his early re-eiving the order; and, if accompanied with the onour of Knighthood, as in the cases of Colonels Lindesay and Vigoureux, on his receiving superior ommands in the Madras Presidency, we venture o assert it would afford great gratification to the Coast Army, on the officers of which, we know not hy, titulary honours have hitherto been bestowed ut scantily indeed.

Colonel, now Brigadier-General Welsh, and amily, embark we hear this week for India. He to succeed to the first vacancy, and should no hance one occur before then, he will succeed Brigadier-General Taylor, now commanding the Madras Northern Division, whose period of Staff ervice expires in July next.

THE report, circulated in other papers (on the est authority), that the 16th, 45th, and 54th Regiments are ordered home is without foundation. No order of the kind, we regret to say, has been et issued.

We request Lord Hill and the authorities at the Horse Guards will do us the favour to read the ollowing petition; and we shall be additionally rateful if his Lordship thinks proper to submit t to the fountain-head of justice.

To His Majesty—To William the Fourth—To the Commander in Chief of all British Soldiers, my King!

"The humble petition and respectful complaint of an ld and loyal Soldier, now serving in India since 1819,

"Sheweth,—

"That your Majesty's old soldier has served in the 45th egiment of your army since he was fourteen years old, hen he enlisted as a drummer, anxious to make a noise p the world.

"That petitioner, at the age of seventeen, exchanged his drum for a firelock, and blazed away at the battles of Rolela, Vimiera, Talavera, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, Ciudad Rodrigo, Badajoz, Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthez, Toulouse, and in various skirmishes too numerous to mention.

"That petitioner is now in India, having been sent first o Ceylon in 1819, after the long war was over, and that he served in Ava. He is after all this long service still Private, and must remain one, being too fond of drinking your Majesty's health to make a Corporal even.

"That your old soldier begs for himself, the 45th, 54th, and 16th regiments, all of which embarked in 1819, and are still in India, a relief as soon as your Majesty can spare three regiments. We all know that Ireland troubles your Majesty; but we do not like to stay behind the tough old 20th, which went abroad with us in 1819, and are now going home before us. Well, they deserve their good luck!

"That your old soldiers cannot believe that your Majesty knows that your regiments are kept abroad in India twenty years, and that only one Captain and a dozen men remain at home to recruit. We hear, but cannot credit it, that all your other regiments serving abroad remain out only ten years, and that four out of their ten companies are left at home like 2d battalions. This is very strange, and we are not able to see why the regiments in India serve twenty years, and have all hands abroad, while regiments elsewhere serve only ten years, and have four companies always at home. We think this must be false, and only put into the papers to make us more unhappy.

"That your old soldier, and all in this country, have been astonished to hear that the 17th regiment is coming to India again. It served twenty years in India, went home for five years, and is now come to serve twenty years more. In forty-five years it will have been five years at home, and forty years abroad. Your Majesty, we all know, never gave that order. If the 17th be culprits, they certainly have got a long day, as the Irish say.

"That your Majesty's old soldiers in India complain that they are paid not even in a rum way; as in the West Indies, but in a racking way, in the East Indies. Your old soldier is no more of a Pay-Serjeant than your Majesty, and cannot understand rupee-pay—not a whit more than Indian jugglery. He, however, knows to his cost that he must serve two days and a half for one rupee, and that when he gets it no one will give him two of your shillings for it; and yet it was for your shilling a-day that he listed. The Company say that their rupee is 2*s.* 6*d.*, but it is not worth two at any time. Thus, your soldiers serve in the distant and dangerous climate of India two days and a half for two shillings, or one rupee; whereas, if at home in merry old England, your soldiers serve two days for two shillings, good current coin of your kingdom. Your Majesty little knows how the Company chouse your soldiers out of sixpence every two days and a half.

"That, lastly, your Majesty's regiments complain, but in the manly and respectful manner of soldiers, to their King, that all the advantages of a shorter foreign service of ten years, having four out of ten companies always at home, and being fairly and faithfully paid, are all on the side of your regiments serving out of India; while all the disadvantages of longer foreign service of twenty years, having only one skeleton company, consisting of about twelve individuals, at home, and being unfairly paid in rupees, are all on the side of your regiments serving in India. Your Majesty's soldiers in India petition to be relieved within fifteen years from these disadvantages, and, as in duty bound, will ever fight, hoping the parsons, as in duty bound, will ever pray, for your Majesty.

"J. HAUDIMAN, Private Grenadier, 45th Reg.

"Madras, 20th March, 1836."

UNDER the head of Correspondence will be found a letter upon the subject of Indian Knighthood, which it would seem has of late been rather too liberally bestowed by Lord Mulgrave, on the Naval Officers in the Coast Guard Service, at the different places that his Lordship happened to visit. With the writer of this letter, and with many others who have in like manner complained of this circumstance, we quite agree; and further we concur, that the King, as the fountain of honour, should alone possess the power of rewarding in this manner the officers of his Army and Navy; for if, as has been remarked by our correspondent, honours are thus profusely bestowed, without any especial public service calling them forth, the value of them will be speedily at an end, and that which has hitherto been looked up to with pride and emulation by every officer, will, by so unlimited an extension of it, become an object rather to be shunned than desired by the gallant members of the United Service.

THE question of Steam Navigation to India, which has for years past greatly interested all connected in any way with that vast and valuable portion of the British Empire, and which continues to create the liveliest anxieties at the three Indian Presidencies, but has languished most unaccountably under the delay, not to say the neglect and discouragement, of the Indian Authorities at home, will, we hope, soon be brought into activity by the spirited exertions and united efforts of the Mercantile community of London and Liverpool, who are interested in the Indian trade. In the mean time our attention has been drawn to a most interesting article in the Journal des Debats, of the 31st ultimo, upon the subject of the French Government Steam-Boats in the Mediterranean, by which we are happy to see the vast extent to which that establishment has been carried for the public convenience, and for the advancement, we hope, of the happiness and civilisation of the countries bounded by that sea. It appears, that in a few weeks hence eight of ten steam-boats, built by the French Government for this service in the Mediterranean, will be ready at Marseilles to commence working; and that the Government has neglected nothing to place them on the most improved footing, for which purpose Monsieur Moissard, an able Naval Engineer, was sent to England to report on the Lisbon and Malta Steam-boats: and upon the latest improvements in them the French Steam-Boats have been constructed. They are formed so as when required they can be turned into vessels of war, carrying six guns each, but having ordinarily only two; and in arrangements and comforts surpass the English Steam-Boats. Each vessel is of 580 tons, 160 horse power, and with accommodation for thirty passengers in the first, and forty in the second, cabins. The expenses of the first equipment of each steam-boat is 600,000 francs the crews, &c., amount to forty-eight men, and the annual expense of each is 206,100 francs, or for the ten 1,854,200 francs. Great as this expense may be, it is expected that the speculation will afford a fair return. Both for passengers, letters and despatches, from the extreme regularity of the arrangements, it is believed that all Europe will prefer the route by Marseilles to the Levant and that England will adopt the same for her despatches to India.

There will be two lines,—one from Marseilles to Constantinople, the other from Marseilles to Athens and Alexandria; they will meet at the little island of Syra, and change their passengers and despatches;—between Marseilles and Constantinople they will touch at Leghorn, Civita Vecchia, Naples, Messina, Malta, Syra, and Smyrna; stopping twenty-four hours at Smyrna and at Malta and at the others from two to six hours each. The distance thus run will be 591 leagues, not taking the calculation of the rates stemmed by the Toulon and Algiers' boats, and those from Falmouth to Corfu, being about two one-third leagues per hour, including stoppages, the time will be as follows:—

| From Marseilles to Leghorn . | 1 day and 10 hours |
| Leghorn to Civita Vecchia | 2 days and 6 hours |
| Civita Vecchia to Naples . | 3 days and 6 hours |
| Naples to Messina . . | 4 days and 11 hours |
| Messina to Malta . . | 5 days and 10 hours |
| Malta to Syra . . . | 9 days and 12 hours |
| Syra to Smyrna . . | 10 days and 15 hours |
| Smyrna to Constantinople | 13 days and 7 hours |

From Athens to Alexandria is 173 leagues, which could be done in four days and two hours without stopping at any other place than Syra. The despatches will take place every ten days, and they will be so combined that three times a month a boat from Marseilles, one from Constantinople and Smyrna, and one from Alexandria shall meet at Syra, so that the passage should be made in eighteen days, and replies to letters received, from Constantinople or Alexandria, at Marseilles, on the 29th day from the original despatch from the latter. The charge of passages is fixed at a reasonable rate,—one franc per league for the first cabin, and sixty cents per league for the second cabin, but the shorter passages of the intermediate stations and a reduction of about ten per cent. upon the charge for the entire route, which brings the charge of the route from Marseilles to Constantinople to 540 and 325 francs; and from Alexandria to Athens to 170 and 100 francs, exclusive of table, according as the first or second cabin is arranged for.

From this it appears that for a very trifling expense it is now in the power of any person to make the tour of the Mediterranean, either for business or pleasure, stopping at any place for ten days, and as to pass from boat to boat; proceeding from Marseilles to Leghorn, so as to give ten days to Florence; from Civita Vecchia to Rome, and staying ten or twenty days there; the same again at Naples, and as many in Sicily, &c.; this, with the comforts and convenience to be found in the boats, will lead many to take this course, and only requires some regularity for the arrival of steam-boats from India at Suez, in the favourable monsoon, to lead almost all the East India Company's Officers by this route to and from Eurustead of that now pursued, by the Cape of Good Hope.

We will add little to the above statement, taken hiefly from the Journal des Debats, as to the ar-angements made for thus traversing the Mediter-anean sea; there can be no doubt, that, if the ritish Government do not avail themselves of it to expedite their communications with India, that least all private individuals and trading associa-ons will do so. The Journal des Debats contains so some pertinent remarks on the necessity of anges in the quarantine laws in France and aly, as applicable in particular to those steam-oats, which we hope to see effected. It would pear that, including these ten Government eam-boats now built by France for the Mediter-anean, there are in all fifty-two steam-vessels on at sea, of which thirty-one belong to France, in-uding eleven attached to the communication with lgiers, seven are English, five Neapolitan, two rdinian, two Greek, two Austrian, one Spanish, e Turkish, and one Egyptian.

It has afforded us much satisfaction to observe, at the articles in our late numbers, on the sub-ct of the Shipwrights in our Royal Dock-yards, ve been copied into several of the port papers, ith expressions of approval from their different ditors.

Knowing as we well do the important worth of ese valuable men to this great maritime nation, e must repeat our sincere hope, that the Lords ommissioners of the Admiralty will command ch measures to be adopted as shall at once emedy the evils complained of, and thus prevent e fatal consequences which would attend e emigration of any of those artificers to rival ates; for, as we before remarked, no greater isfortune could befal this country than the loss any number of the experienced Shipwrights longing to our Naval Arsenals; and as we be-ve that their Lordships of the Admiralty will convinced, by their recent personal observa-ns, of the necessity of materially increasing the sans in our Dock-yards, in order to keep all r ships in a perfect state of repair, we trust that y will see fit to order, that these deserving men all henceforward work six days of the week in-ad of five; and, though this may augment the timates some forty-five to fifty thousand per num, yet this sum is of comparative insigni-ce when we consider the advantages that will se from giving our ships the repairs that they y require, at the instant that such repairs are covered to be needed, thus folfilling the old -repeated adage of

"a stitch in time saves nine;"—

, by following this course, it is probable that full amount of this additional expenditure may saved in making good the defects of only half-a-zen ships. On every ground, then, even that of nomy, we earnestly hope that their Lordships ll take all the circumstances connected with this estion into their early consideration, and will ereupon fulfil the well-grounded prayer of the ficers of our Dock-yards.

The vast superiority of the percussion musket over the common flint and steel firelock has been demonstrated by the reports and returns from Woolwich, and the several corps to which the percussion guns were sent for trial. We have been favoured with the following statement of practice made in the 80th Regiment at Chatham. There were four sets by different makers tried, and the following is the result:—

4 Common Percussion — out of 1,520 rounds, six mis-fires - - hits 1280
4 Lovell's do. out of 1,520 rounds, fifteen mis-fires - - hits 1288
4 Eccle's do. out of 1,520 rounds, 12 mis-fires, and five hang-fires, hits 1278
4 Manton's do. out of 1,900 rounds, 29 mis-fires, and 6 hang-fires, hits 1143
4 Common Flint—out of 1,520 rounds, 167 mis-fires. and 45 hang-fires, hits 992

"Every thing hath its uses." An era in the science of ship-building has just been accomplished at the Bristol Association. The School of Naval Architecture, bent on notoriety, but driven to desperation by the failure of their late predictions, and the success of the Vanguard, resolved upon divulging to the enlightened assembly collected in that philosophic city, a secret upon which they have long acted in designing their ships, and deputed one of their learned body to make the announcement.

We can imagine with what impatience that portion of the meeting, who are famed for building their vessels "Ship-shape and Bristow fashion," endured the advent of the time selected by the President to divulge the mighty intelligence; to point out the cause of failure hitherto, and thus, by a knowledge of the evil, to apply the remedy. At length he mounted the rostrum, and in the midst of wondering hundreds delivered this pithy sentence:—"All ships are built lop-ended," and proceeded to demonstrate this perfectly original idea to the conviction of the astonished assembly. Thus has one great stride been made in this noble science, and let no man in future reproach the school for having accomplished nothing. Twenty years and more have they hatched this egg, and now, finding there is no longer a chance for turning the knowledge exclusively to their own account, they announce it to the whole world. The question will not admit of a doubt; so sure as "man is born to trouble," so sure are all "ships built lop-ended, aye, and lop-sided too." Every thing proves it, and this evil, which we must not longer designate a peculiarity,—seeing it is now established as a general axiom on the authority of philosophers,—is more apparent in the productions of the School than any others.

We have heard that the remedy for this will be publicly divulged at the next scientific meeting at Liverpool, in the same handsome and disinterested manner as upon the late occasion. In the mean time how gratifying must it be to the crew of the Actæon for instance, to know that in a few months, —if they escape a capsizing so long,—they will be relieved from the duty of continually standing by top-gallent sheets, and topsail bowlinyards, by night and by day. We put it, however, to the generosity of the School, whether, having so honourably acquitted themselves in the eyes of the scientific public, and bestowed the information matured by the study of years upon the profession at large gratis, we put it to their honour, whether they should not at once accomplish the whole hog by divulging the remedy? This would be a benefit to the civilised world; aye, of which even the savage when building his canoe (if he does not already know it) would partake. And how easily might it be effected, either in the annual, or a special pamphlet framed on purpose. There is the wood-cut already available for the occasion; and, by-the-by, as this wood-cut is always represented on an inclination, it strikes us that the School must have long ago been acting upon lop-sidedness, both in their words and deeds; they have hitherto certainly adopted a one-sided view of the case on all occasions. But let that pass; they have at length established one axiom in Naval Architecture, others will follow. Let the wood-cut be the coat of arms of the body, a maul for the crest, and lop the motto, it will suit either end or side, as the case may be; and we trust some worthy will forthwith chalk this upon the Dock-yard gates, and spare no pains to assign the whole honour of the discovery to this enlightened body. We should not be surprised at a controversy arising between the Lop-Sidians and the Lop-Endians: the Naval School of Architecture have an undoubted right to the first distinction, and we think that they have now put in a very fair claim for the last.

We have heard with much pleasure from the principal
-ports, of the grateful feelings expressed by the difrent classes of officers towards the First Lord of the dmiralty, for the courtesy and kindness evinced to-rds each and all of them by his Lordship, in the veral audiences which he gave to those who waited on him, and all of whom quitted his Lordship pleased d satisfied, even though they might not have obtained e object of their solicitude.

Growth of Russia.—At the accession of Peter the llions; at the accession of Catherine the Second, in 62, twenty-five millions; at her death, in 1796, thirty-millions; and at the death of Alexander, now eleven ars since, fifty-eight millions. The acquisitions of ussia from Sweden are greater than what remains of at kingdom; from Poland are nearly equal to the ustrian empire; from Turkey in Europe are of greater tent than the Prussian dominions, inclusive of the enish provinces; from Turkey in Asia are nearly ual in dimensions to the whole of the smaller States of ermany; from Persia are equal in extent to England; om Tartary have an area not inferior to Turkey in urope, Greece, Italy, and Spain. The acquisitions e has made within the last sixty-four years are equal in tent and importance to the whole empire she had in urope before that time. The Russian frontier has en advanced towards Berlin, Dresden, Munich, Vi-ple, 500 miles; towards Stockholm, about 630 miles;

wards Teheran, 1,000 miles.

Approaching Marriages.—Duke William of Bruns-ick is to espouse the Princess Maria of Wurtemburg, aughter of the present King by his former wife, Cathene, sister of the Emperor Nicholas.—Otho, King of reece, has demanded and received the hand of a Prin-d the marriage is about to be notified to the European overnments. The marriage will be celebrated in Oc-ber. The King of Siam is about to give his favourite the rank of second King.—Count Pozzo di Borgo, on his return to Paris, is to be married to the Countess de Borgne.

Mr. Bunn, who is still in Paris, has finally settled an engagement with Mademoiselle Taglioni to dance at Drury-lane Theatre.

The Grand Balloon.—Yesterday, in accordance with the announcement in our last, this balloon ascended from Vauxhall-gardens. The dimensions of it are enormous; it is 157 feet in circumference; the height is 80 feet. It is composed of 2,000 yards of silk, crimson and white, which is exceedingly thick in the fabric, and wove in a peculiar manner. The gores are united by a cement invented by Mr. Green of a nature so tenacious as to prevent all chance of separation. It contains 70,000 cubic feet of gas. It required nearly a ton of iron, beside the joint strength of a host of policemen straining at the ropes, to keep this gigantic machine from mounting into the air before the party who were to ascend with it were prepared for their voyage. The inflation was under the direction of Mr. Hutchinson. The peculiarly heavy state of the atmosphere produced a weight of condensed air upon the surface of the balloon of nearly half a ton, but as excellently had everything been arranged, and so highly rarified was the gas, that the balloon was sufficiently buoyant to have taken up 20 people. As it was, nine persons got into the car, viz.—Mr. Green, Mr. T. Green, Mrs. Green, Mrs. Green, jun., Capt. Currie, Mr. Hillyard, Mr. E. Gye, Mr. W. Hughes, and a gentleman whose name did not transpire. They all displayed the highest intrepidity, and were greeted with the loud cheers of the crowds assembled. The decorations of the car, in consequence of the state of the weather, were removed, but an enormous quantity of ballast was placed in the bottom of it. The ascent was accomplished at exactly 20 minutes past 6 o'clock. At this moment the interest of the scene was most intense, every spectator showed by his countenance the anxiety which he felt for the situation of the aeronauts. No praise can be too great for the coolness and presence of mind displayed by Mr. Green in this somewhat trying situation. He gave his directions in a manner which inspired the crew of his comparatively frail vessel with confidence in his management, and, as it were, anticipated their security from accidents and dangers. The ascent was most magnificent; directly the word was given to cast off the last rope by which the balloon was restrained, it shot with velocity from the earth, and mounted in mid-air, in the direction towards Tunbridge, shifting its course from east to south east. The shouts of the multitude, and the clang of the instruments of the military band which was stationed in the grounds, accompanied its flight. The aeronauts waved their hats and flags, and continued rapidly to rise. A grander sight can hardly be conceived. Notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the day, the gardens were filled with thousands of persons, and on the outside, and on Vauxhall-bridge, Milbank, and the adjacent streets and roads, thousands were waiting for hours to witness the sight. This is certainly the most surprising ascent of a balloon that ever took place, whether the dimensions of the machine, the number of persons ascending, or the excellent manner in which every thing was arranged, be considered. The balloon descended two miles from Rochester, in an hour and a half after leaving Vauxhall, and Mr. Gye and Mr. Holland, two of the aeronauts, arrived in London at half-past 12 o'clock. It being dark, and no conveyances obtainable, the other passengers remained.

It is said to be the intention of the Marquis of Westminster immediately to employ a number of workmen to raze to the ground the old and dilapidated infantry barrack at Knightsbridge, which has recently been vacated by the Foot Guards, and to erect on its site two elegant markets, one for the sale of vegetables, and the other for the sale of meat.

An interesting ceremony took place at Moscow on the 4th of last month. The famous bell, the largest and handsomest in the world, was raised from the ground, where it had long lain. It was cast in 1733, by order of the Empress Anne, by Michael Motoren, a Russian metal founder. Its height is 21 feet; its diameter, 23 feet; its weight 12,000 poods, 480,000 lbs. (432,000 lbs. English weight). The beauty of the form, the bas-reliefs with which it is adorned, the value of the metal, which is a composition of gold, silver, and copper, render it remarkable as showing the advanced state of the art of casting in metal in Russia at that early period. It was raised by a very ingenious contrivance of M. Montferrand, and is placed for the present on a pedestal.

Tiger Hunt.—Extract of a letter from Calcutta of 6th March:—"We arrived last night in Dacca, after a melancholy winding up of our shooting excursion. We had intelligence of an immense tiger which had killed several bullocks, &c. On Saturday we hunted him for several hours, but could not get him. On Sunday Mr. C., Mr. B., Mr. E., sen., and Mr. E., jun., went out and sprung the tiger and wounded him severely. He charged the elephants six times, wounded three of them, and pulled poor Elias, sen., from the howdah and killed him instantly.

About 7 o'clock on Thursday evening a tremendous collision took place between the Fly, Greenwich steamer, and the Naiad, Woolwich steamer, near the London Docks. The Fly was coming up, and the Naiad going down the river, and, not observing each other, the two vessels ran foul, and produced a violent concussion. The shouts of the men and the screams of the women were truly appalling, but fortunately no lives were lost. The Naiad was a good deal injured, but the Fly sustained little damage.

British Auxiliary Legion, San Sebastian, Sept. 1.—Lieut.-Colonel Kirby has been promoted to the Colonelcy of the 1st Regt., and Lieut.-Colonel Beckham, of the 7th has been appointed Lieut.-Col. Commandant of that reg. A few weeks ago a duel took place between Colonel Lasanpaye, Dep. Quartermaster-General, and Major Richardson, late of 4th Regt. After firing three shots, each without effect, an explanation took place on the part of Major Richardson, and the parties left the ground. Yesterday evening Capt. Parkes, of the 10th, fought with another officer, who, I believe, was slightly wounded; and this morning the same officer (Capt. Parkes) went out with Capt. O'Connor, of the 3d Regt., who was dangerously wounded. The day before yesterday Brigadier-General Shaw sent in his resignation to the Lieutenant-General, and will in consequence take his departure hence, viâ France, in two or three days for England. The Carlists are strongly fortifying Irun and Fontarabia. Near the former they have constructed a strong fort in stone, called "Fuerte del Parque," and three covered ways of great depth, one leading to the "Casa de la Villa," which is strongly barricaded; the second takes the direction by the fort to the house of M. Olazabal; and the third extends to the left of the town, as far as a large square house, which is also strongly barricaded.

The Court.

Thursday being the anniversary of the Coronation, the morning was ushered in by merry peals of bells: at one o'clock the 2d Life Guards, and the 3d battalion of Grenadier Guards, fired a Royal salute in Windsor Great Park. Their Majesties gave, in the evening, a grand banquet in St. George's Hall.

Their Majesties will come to town on Monday, to meet the Duchess of Gloucester, and return to the Castle in the evening.—Early in October the King and Queen will take their departure for Brighton.

Sir Horace Townshend has been invested by the King with the office of Deputy Governor of Windsor Castle.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur contains several Royal ordinances, constituting the new French Ministry. It is as follows:—Count Mole, President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs; M. Persil, Keeper of the Seals, Minister of Justice and Worship; M. de Gasparin, Minister of the Interior; Vice-Admiral de Rosamel, Minister of the Marine and Colonies; M. Guizot, Minister of Public Instruction; M. Duchatel, Minister of Finance. The resignations of Marshal Maison, late War Minister, and of M. Passy, late Minister of Commerce, are accepted. The provisional direction of the War Department is intrusted to M. de Rosamel, and of the Department of Commerce to M. Duchatel. Only two places in the Cabinet remain unoccupied. The appointment of War Minister has been offered to Marshal Soult. Should he decline to join the Cabinet, it was not thought impossible that M. Sebastiani would obtain the situation, and the long-desired Marshal's baton at the same time. With respect to the Department of Commerce, it appears to be resolved to place that under the direction of M. Martin (du Nord), who is at present in Switzerland.

RUSSIA.—Letters from Warsaw state, that the Emperor Nicholas will visit that city in the course of this month. His arrival will be marked by the proclamation of an amnesty for the Poles who took part in the late revolution. It was not expected, however, that many would avail themselves of that act of clemency, the nature of Russian amnesties being well known to the Poles. Moreover, it would be so clogged with exceptions and with categories, that it would become a mere dead letter. The levy of men ordered throughout the Russian empire by the late ukase is greater than that commanded in 1812 to meet the French invasion.

AUSTRIA.—The Emperor and Empress recently paid a visit to Brunn, in Moravia. Great rejoicings took place in honour of their visit. A grand review occupied the morning, a grand dinner the afternoon, and a superb ball the night. The whole neighbourhood poured in to pay homage to the imperial party.

SPAIN.—There is a report, that the troops, 1,500 men in number, which lately quitted Madrid, had been completely defeated by some Carlist bands at Jadraque, between thirty and forty miles from the capital, on the 1st or 2nd instant.

The Carlists under Gomez had entered Valencia on the 20th, without experiencing any resistance, and after levying a contribution of four millions and a half on the city, had passed into the province of Burgos. General Espartero, who was still in pursuit of him, was at Villalpando on the 22nd, within a few hours' march of Lerma.

M. Mendizabal has been appointed President of the Committee of Patriotic Donations, and commissioned to provide means for the speedy termination of the civil war. The Ministry still remains incomplete, and will not, it is supposed, be filled up before the meeting of the Cortes.

HOLLAND.—His Majesty left the Hague on the 29th ult., to return to the Loo. The Prince of Orange has been at the Hague, but made only a short stay, and returned to his head-quarters at Tilburg. Prince William Frederic Henry is to make a voyage to the East Indies on board the Maas frigate. It is said that the Grand Duke Michael of Russia will shortly visit the Hague.

Theatres.

LYCEUM.—The long promised opera, "The Pacha's Bridal," was produced on Thursday evening, and met with a most favourable reception from one of the most crowded audiences of the season. This opera is intended as a dramatic version of Byron's Corsair; the author has, however, departed not a little from the original in the character of the Hero. He has made the bold and daring Conrad as tame and lamb-like as a love-sick lady. The words of the songs are pretty, and rather better than the general run of modern operas, but the dialogue is very poor and trashy. The music is by Mr. F. Romer; and, although it is neither remarkable for striking beauties or novelty of style, still there is much in it with which the most fastidious critic may be pleased. In its general character it is light and agreeable, several of the melodies are pleasing, and, with two or three exceptions, it is free from imitation.

VICTORIA.—A burlesque of the "Jewess" was produced at this theatre on Monday night, and proved successful. It is by Fox Cooper, Author of "the Spare Bed."

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—These gardens, which were numerously and respectably attended, closed a very profitable season on Wednesday night, when the farewell address was delivered by Mr. Buckingham.

THE SPINSTERS' PETITION.—(From the Essex Herald.)—"The humble petition of certain single ladies in the county of Essex, who are dying to obtain husbands, sheweth—That your petitioners have lately seen with deep regret the lamentable extent to which celibacy prevails amongst the young men of Great Britain, from which it is evident that that dangerous principle of Popery is making vast progress in the land—a principle fraught with danger to church clerks, as it reduces the amount of marriage fees, and at the same time deprives your petitioners of the dignity of matrons, and all the comforts of double blessedness. That your petitioners are convinced old bachelorism sours the temper, promotes avarice, lengthens the face, sharpens the nose, and prevents longevity; and though it thus swells the amount of probate duty, the early death of a bachelor does not benefit the State so much as a large family of children wearing taxed articles of clothing, and eating food which has contributed in the shape of duty to his Majesty's Exchequer.—That in consequence of the prevalence of the above monkish principle, several of your petitioners have already reached the age of 35 years without receiving any offer of marriage, although they are told that they are by no means behind their countrywomen in those qualities which would render comfortable the household hearth; and in order, therefore, to bring the unmarried male portion of society back to their sober senses, and prevent enormous expenses to counties for Coroners' charges, your petitioners pray that your Honourable House will be pleased to pass a Bill enacting that every man found unmarried after the age of 26, without showing reasonable cause to a Jury of single ladies, shall be immediately banished to 'No Man's Land,' and branded on the forehead with the letter 'B.' And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c."

Beet-root Sugar.—MM. Fics and Stsnewsld, of Quedlinhourg, have found out a method of extracting a perfectly pure and crystallised sugar, in twelve hours, from the pulp of beet-root, and in the proportion of ten pounds of sugar to one hundred pounds of beet-root.

THE LATE VICE-ADMIRAL SIR JOHN GORE, K.C.B., & G.C.H.

THIS officer was the second son of the late Col. John Gore, who served many years in the 33d reg., and retired from the command of that corps, in 1776, upon being appointed Lieut.-Gov. of the Tower of London, where he died in 1794, leaving three sons and two daughters. His eldest son, Ralph, was then a Captain in the 33d, and his youngest, Arthur, a Lieut. in the 73d reg.; the latter gentleman attained the rank of Major-General, and was slain on the walls of Bergen-op-Zoom, Mar. 9, 1814.

Mr. Gore entered the Navy as a Midshipman on board the Monarca, 70 guns, Capt. John Gell; but he first went to sea in the Canada, 74, commanded by the Hon. William Cornwallis, with whom he sailed for North America, in Aug., 1781. The Canada formed part of the fleet under Rear-Admiral Graves, when that officer proceeded from Sandy Hook to the Chesapeake, for the purpose of extricating Earl Cornwallis from his perilous situation at York Town. She subsequently accompanied Sir S. Hood to the W. Indies, and bore a very conspicuous share in his brilliant actions at St. Christopher's; as well as in the battles between Rodney and De Grasse, April 9 and 12, 1782.

The Canada was paid off soon after her return to England, on which occasion Mr. Gore followed his gallant Captain into the Dragon, 74. In Mar. 1783, he joined the Iphigenia frigate, Capt. James Cornwallis, under whom he served in the W. Indies till Oct. 1786.

His health being now much impaired by that climate, Mr. Gore was discharged into the Royal Charlotte yacht, the command of which vessel had been conferred upon the Hon. William Cornwallis, at the close of the American war. We next find him in the Robust, 74, with the same officer, during the Dutch armament; and subsequently in the Hebe frigate, Captain Edward Thornbrough, with whom he continued until Oct., 1788. At this latter period Mr. Gore rejoined his distinguished patron, who had hoisted a broad pendant in the Crown, 64, and was then about to sail from England for the purpose of assuming the chief command on the East India station. Commodore Cornwallis there promoted his eleve into the Perseverance frigate, Nov. 29, 1789. From thence Lieutenant Gore returned home in the Crown (1791); and his health having suffered extremely, he did not go afloat again till the commencement of the French revolutionary war, when he was appointed to the Lowestaffe, 32, Capt. W. Wolseley, then fitting at Plymouth. In that frigate he accompanied the fleet under Lord Hood to the Mediterranean, where he was removed to the Britannia, a first-rate, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Hotham, previous to the occupation of Toulon. While belonging to that ship, Lieut. Gore frequently landed with a detachment of seamen under his command, and was often engaged with the enemy, both on shore and when employed in floating batteries. After distinguishing himself by his gallantry on various occasions, Lieut. G. was removed to Lord Hood's flag-ship, the Victory, of 100 guns, and ordered to land at the head of a body of sailors, selected to serve as Artillery men in Fort Mulgrave, an important post, against which the enemy were then bringing forward heavy guns and mortars, their repeated attempts to take it by storm having proved unsuccessful. During the bombardment that ensued, he received a severe wound in the head, which obliged him to return on board for surgical assistance. On the morning previous to the evacuation of Toulon, Lieut. G. was ordered by Lord Hood to visit the arsenal, and ascertain if anything effective could be done by means of fire-vessels. In consequence of his report, he was directed to tow the Vulcan thither, to place her in a proper position, and then to put himself and his boats under the orders of Sir W. S. Smith.

After taking the Vulcan to her station, and when in the act of receiving some combustible materials from her, for the purpose of setting fire to the French ships in the southern basin, Lieut. Gore was blown out of his boat by a premature explosion, of which the following notice is taken in Sir W. Sidney Smith's official letter to Lord Hood:—

"I was sorry to find myself deprived of the further services of Captain Hare: he had performed that of placing his fire-ship to admiration, but was blown into the water, and much scorched, by the explosion of her priming, when in the act of putting the match to it. Lieut. Gore was also much burnt, and I was consequently deprived of him also, which I regretted the more, from the recollection of his bravery and activity in the warm service of Fort Mulgrave."

We next find Lieut. Gore commanding a detachment of seamen, landed to co-operate with the small British army in Corsica, under Lieut.-Gen. D. Dundas, whose approbation of his conduct was repeatedly expressed.

Fornelli was taken possession of by the detachment of seamen under Lieut. Gore. He had not been long in possession of Fornelli, when he discovered that the enemy were about to set their frigates on fire. He immediately sent off a report to Lord Hood, and succeeded in drawing the spike of an 18-pounder, with which gun he played upon the nearest ship until she sunk: the other was observed in flames about four P.M., when a boat went off to the squadron to announce that the enemy had fled from St. Fiorenzo: the seamen and marines were then ordered to embark.

During the siege of Bastia, the subject of this memoir received two severe contusions, notwithstanding which he continued to command a party of seamen on shore until its surrender, May 22, 1794, when he was immediately promoted into La Fleche, a corvette found lying in the harbour. After fitting her out, he proceeded to Malta and negociated with Rhoan, the Grand Master, for a supply of seamen, stores, &c. His promotion to post-rank took place Nov. 12, 1794, on which occasion Lord Hood's successor appointed him to command the Windsor Castle, 98, bearing the flag of Rear-Adm. R. Linzee. In her he assisted at the capture of two French line-of-battle ships, by the fleet under V.-Adm. Hotham, Mar. 14, 1795; the Windsor Castle's loss on that day amounted to 6 killed and 31 wounded.

Capt. Gore's next appointment was to Le Censeur, 74, one of the above-mentioned prizes, which vessel was re-captured by a French squadron under Rear-Admiral Richery. On his return home Capt. Gore was tried by a Court-Martial and most honourably acquitted, with a very flattering compliment from the president, Rear-Adm. Sir R. Curtis. He was afterwards successively appointed to act as Captain of the Robust, 74, and Alcmene frigate.

In Sept., 1796, Capt. Gore obtained the command of the Triton, 32, and from that period we find him actively employed on Channel service until the escape of the French fleet from Brest, April 25, 1799, when he was despatched with the important information to Earl St. Vincent, Com.-In-Chief on the Mediterranean station. After communicating with Lord Keith, the second in command, Capt. Gore proceeded, with two frigates under his orders, to reconnoitre the coasts of France and Spain, from Toulon to Cadiz, in which latter port he at length discovered the enemies' combined fleets, amounting to 38 sail of the line, with a suitable train of frigates, corvettes, &c.

This very formidable force sailed from Cadiz, July 21, 1799, and Capt. Gore closely watched them until they all bore up round Cape St. Vincent, and made sail to the northward; he then pushed past them for England, and arrived at Plymouth, with the intelligence of their junction and movements, five days before they reached Brest.

Capt. Gore was subsequently sent, with a squadron of frigates under his command, to observe the enemies' movements; and while thus employed he deterred five Spanish line-of-battle ships and two frigates from entering the port of their ally through the Passage du Raz. The Triton afterwards accompanied Sir John B. Warren in pursuit of this Spanish squadron, the Commander of which had very wisely returned to Ferrol, where his ships were lying dismantled when the British arrived in sight of them. After Sir John B. Warren's return to the Channel fleet, Captain Gore continued cruising in the vicinity of Ferrol, where he had the good fortune to assist at the capture of the Santa Brigada, Spanish treasure ship. Capt. Gore's share of prize-money for the cargoes of the Santa Brigada and her consort, exclusive of their hulls, stores, &c., amounted to 40,730*l.* 18*s.*!

In Feb., 1801, a melancholy accident happened on board the Triton. She was firing at a French cutter which had been driven upon the Denmark rocks, when one of the main-deck guns burst, killed the second Lieutenant and 2 men, and wounded 22 other persons, one of whom was Captain Gore, who received a violent contusion in the back.

On her return to port the Triton was taken into dock, and Capt. Gore felt himself under the necessity of requesting leave of absence. This the Admiralty would not grant; but, upon his reporting himself ready for service again, he was immediately appointed to the Medusa, a 32-gun frigate, mounting 18-pounders on the main-deck, recently launched at Woolwich.

During the summer of 1801, government received intelligence that the invasion of Great Britain by France might be certainly expected; and the general wish of the nation that Lord Nelson should be the guardian of that part of its southern coast where it was expected the enemy would make the attempt, was gratified by his lordship being appointed Commander-in-Chief of all the Naval force employed on both shores, from Orfordness to Beachy Head, inclusive. Capt. Gore had been previously ordered to assume the command of a light squadron employed in watching Boulogne, and the Medusa was now selected to bear the flag of Nelson.

On the 3d Aug., 1801, Capt. Gore was directed to place three bomb-vessels in a situation to throw shells amongst the enemy's flotilla; and on the following day three or four large gun-vessels were destroyed. On the 15th he was ordered to arrange an attack upon thirty-six sail lying in the mouth of the harbour.

We subsequently find Capt. Gore commanding a squadron stationed under Dungeness, to protect that part of the coast, and occasionally to menace Boulogne. From Oct., 1801, until Feb. 12, 1802, the Medusa was employed in cruising against the smugglers, between the Sturt and the Isle of Wight. At the latter period she was sent with despatches to the Mediterranean.

On 5th Oct., 1804, the Medusa assisted at the capture of three Spanish frigates laden with valuable merchandise, and having on board specie to a very large amount. During the action that took place on this occasion, a fourth frigate blew up, by which dreadful accident 240 persons perished. On the 8th of the following month Capt. Gore returned to Portsmouth, and the Medusa being in want of considerable repairs, he now obtained a short leave of absence.

Capt. Gore received the honour of knighthood, Feb. 21, 1805, and sailed for Bengal, April 15 following; and after waiting for despatches till Nov. 3, 1805, he sailed for England with Messrs. Robinson, &c., and the treaty of peace that had been concluded with the Mahratta Chief, Holkar.

Soon after his arrival, Sir John Gore removed to the Revenge, 74, in which ship he was successively employed off Brest, L'Orient, and Rochefort; and this ship formed part of the squadron under Commodore Sir S. Hood, when that officer lost his arm in an action with some French frigates, from Rochefort bound to the West Indies.

Early in 1807 Sir John Gore was sent to join Lord Collingwood, who gave him the command of the in-shore squadron off Cadiz, where he continued until June, 1808, at which period the inhabitants of that city sent two officers on board the Revenge, with offers of amity, and to solicit assistance against the French. This being made known to the senior officer, Sir John Gore and Col. Sir George Smith were immediately ordered to land and negociate with the Spanish authorities; after which his lordship directed Admiral Apodaca, and the other commissioner appointed by the Supreme Council of Seville, to be conveyed to England in the Revenge, for the purpose of treating with the British Cabinet on matters important to the interests of both nations. On her arrival at Portsmouth the Revenge was taken into dock, and Sir John Gore's health being much impaired he solicited and obtained permission to retire for a time from the fatigues of active service. He accordingly gave up the command of that ship Aug. 6, 1808.

His next appointment was, Sept. 12, 1810, to the Tonnant, 80 guns, in which ship we find him successively employed in conveying troops to Lisbon, cruising under the orders of Sir Thomas Williams, superintending the blockade of Brest and L'Orient, and serving with the squadron in Basque roads, where he was very severely hurt by a tackle from the main-top falling on his head, contusing it badly, and giving a general shock to his whole frame. The Tonnant being in a defective state was thereupon sent home, and put out of commission in August, 1812.

On 27th Nov. following, Sir John was again appointed to the Revenge, and ordered to the Mediterranean. During the whole summer of 1813, he commanded the in-shore squadron off Toulon.

Sir John's promotion to the rank of Rear-Admiral took place Dec. 4, 1813; and on the 23d of the following month he hoisted his flag in the Revenge. During the remainder of the war he commanded the squadron employed in the Adriatic.

On 22d Mar., 1814, he commenced the close blockade of Venice by sea, anchoring his squadron off the town, and stationing the boats of the different ships to watch the entrances of Chiozza and Malamocca; but shortly after withdrew when the French occupied Italy.

From Venice Sir John proceeded to Corfu, and informed the Governor-General of the Ionian islands of the great events that had recently occurred on the continent, but could not prevail upon him to evacuate them. He then went to Trieste, and there received instructions to attend Lieut.-Gen. Campbell, the commissioner appointed by Government to receive possession of Corfu. On 8th June a French commissioner arrived to cede that island; on 25th the British flag was hoisted in the citadel; on 26th a French squadron sailed from thence accompanied by the late garrison, 10,000 strong, embarked in English transports; and on the 28th Sir John took his departure for Minorca, from whence he returned to Spithead on the 16th Aug. following.

Sir John Gore was nominated a K.C.B., Jan. 2, 1815, and appointed Com.-in-Chief in the Medway, at the buoy of the Nore, and from Dungeness to the Tweed, Mar. 23, 1818. His flag continued flying on board the Bulwark, 76, till the end of June, 1821. Since the battle of Navarin he was employed in the Mediterranean on a mission from H.R.H. the Lord High Admiral. His commission as a Vice-Admiral bears the date May 27, 1825. His last command was in the East Indies, from whence he returned last year, and it is supposed that he never recovered the severe shock he sustained by the death of his only son, his Flag Lieutenant, and a most promising young officer, who lost his life in the gallant attempt to save the life of a seaman who had fallen overboard, and whose melancholy fate the Admiral witnessed from the quarter gallery window. Sir John married, Aug. 15, 1808, Georgiona, eldest daughter of Admiral Sir George Montagu, G.C.B., by whom he has had one son, Lieut. Gore, and six daughters.

The remains of the distinguished Admiral were interred, a few days ago, in the new burial-ground at Datchet. The funeral was very unostentatious; the pall was borne by eight Admirals, and a number of relations and friends of the much-respected deceased followed, among whom were several distinguished Officers.

MY BONNY MARY,

OR SANDY'S FAREWELL TO LONDON.

Adieu to the lasses o' Lunnon's gay town,
Wi' their fine silken gowns an' their faces,
Wi' their sma' mincing feet, an' their beauties fu' shown
In the sight o' sae mony men's faces!
I'll gang to the lassie wha lifts in the glen
O' Gleniffen, sae simple an' chary;
Wha shrinks frae the touch an' the glances o' men,—
I will gang to my ain bonny Mary.

O I wouldna exchange for the bonniest queen,
Though a' shining wi' jewels an' graces,
Nor the finest court-lady that ever was seen,
Seeking Jo's in the Park, and sic places:
O I wouldna exchange my dear lassie sae shy,
Wi' her skin like the cream o' the dairy,
An' the locks curled by nature that sportingly lie
On the breast o' my ain bonny Mary!

O' the gay city lasses wad gar a man dream,
They wadna be dainty in choosing,
Sin they a' look sae kind at the men-fo'k, they seem
As they had no' the knack o' refusing:
But I like no' the fruit that's sae ready to fa',
Nor the wooing that's carried no' chary,
Where the laddie sits mum, an' the lassie says a',
'Tisna sae wi' my ain bonny Mary!

Though I ken that she loves me wi' a' her young soul,
Sin her eye answers "yes," when I ask it;
Yet to steal but a kiss, it is just as she stole
A wee gem frae a double-locket casket!
O that is the wife for a laddie to wed,
Nae town loving lassie sae airy,
But a creature o' God in the wilderness bred,
Leal an' pure, as my ain bonny Mary!

Old time wad grow young wi' a wife sic as that,
When the spring time o' passion is over;
A man needna take up his bonnet or hat,
To make his last bow as a lover!
There'll be aye a green spot, like the circle that's trod
By the steps o' the moon-loving fairy,
For the blossoms o' love, an' the sunshine o' God,
Wi' a wife like my ain bonny Mary!

THE NEPAUL WAR.

Assaults of Kalunga and Death of General Gillespie.

The campaign commenced by the seizure of the Tinley pass, in the Deyra Dhoon, on the 20th of Oct., by Lieut.-Colonel Carpenter, who had been detached for that purpose by Major-General Gillespie. The latter officer entered the Dhoon on the 24th, by the Kerree pass, and immediately marched upon Kalunga, while detachments occupied the passes and ferries of the Jumna. On the 29th, preparations were made for an attack upon Kalunga; the army under General Gillespie being formed into four columns, commanded respectively by Lieut.-Colonel Carpenter, Captain Fast, Major Kelly, and Captain Campbell, with a column of reserve under Maj. Ludlow. At half-past three o'clock, on the afternoon of the 30th, the columns under Colonel Carpenter and Major Ludlow marched from their encampment, without any resistance from the enemy, and took possession of the table-land, where they established themselves so as to cover the working-party, which was to be employed during the night in constructing batteries. The three remaining columns moved at an early hour the next morning, to be in readiness to attack simultaneously with that from the table-land; Major Kelly, on Kuraulie, by the Jagherkeena road; Captain Fast, towards the stockade, by the village of Luckhound; and Captain Campbell, by the village of Ustall. Shortly after daylight the batteries opened on the fort with ten pieces of ordnance.

The signal for the columns moving to the assault was to be given from the batteries two hours previously to the moment of attack, and repeated from the camp below; but the arrangements appear to have been ill-concerted; at all events they were inefficient. The signal was fired about eight o'clock, but it was not heard by either Major Kelly, Captain Fast, or Captain Campbell; and, consequently, only the columns under Colonel Carpenter and Major Ludlow moved. These advanced and carried the stockade thrown across the road leading to the fort; they then pushed on close under the walls, which were stockaded all round. Here their progress was stopped. The fire of the batteries had been ineffective; a small opening only was visible, and that defended by stockades within stockades. The British force was consequently obliged to retire, after sustaining a frightful loss in officers and men. Soon after the columns moved, three additional companies had been ordered from the camp; but, by the time they arrived on the table-land, the columns in advance had been forced to fall back. An attack by so small a force had obviously little chance of success; but General Gillespie was, no doubt, apprehensive of the unhappy effects likely to follow a repulse at so early a period of the war, and this, in addition to the impulses of his personal bravery, probably induced him to head an assault made by the little band, assisted by two six-pounders. The assault was made and failed; a second met with no better success; a third was still more unfortunate in its results, for when within thirty yards of the gateway, the gallant General was mortally wounded while in the act of cheering on his men. Thus terminated the proceedings of that ill fated day, with the loss of an officer who had rendered good service to his country in the East; and whose career had been marked by a courage which deserves the epithet of heroic. The memory of General Gillespie received from the public authorities the honours which are so well deserved.

Kalunga was yet to be the scene of fresh misfortune and discomfiture to the British force. The failure of the former attack had suggested the necessity of procuring a battering-train. It arrived, and was forthwith brought into operation. At one o'clock, in the afternoon of the 24th of November, the breach was reported to be completely practicable, and Colonel Mawbey, on whom the command had devolved by the death of General Gillespie, ordered a storming-party to advance. But this renewed attempt to gain possession of the fort was more unfortunate than the preceding one. The enemy defended the place with desperate valour, and, after a contest of two hours, Colonel Mawbey withdrew his troops with severe loss. The storming-party had succeeded in gaining the top of the breach, when a momentary hesitation proved fatal to them, and a large proportion were swept away. The failure was ascribed by Colonel Mawbey, partly to the bold resistance of the enemy, who, in spite of repeated discharges from all the guns, mortars and howitzers, of the battery covering the advance, persisted in manning the breach, and bidding defiance to the assailants, and partly to the difficulties of the service which the British troops were called upon to perform. The descent from the top of the breach is represented as having been so deep and rapid, that the most daring of the assailants would not venture to leap down; and, it is added, that had they done so, the attempt would have involved the certain destruction of those who made it, from a number of pointed stakes and bamboos which had been placed at the bottom, and which it would have been impossible to avoid. Such was the representation of the officer in command. But the explanation was by no means satisfactory to the Earl of Moira, who expressed some discontent and surprise at this second failure to carry a place (to use his own words), "certainly of great strength or extent, destitute of a ditch, laid open to breach up which a carriage might have driven, and defended by a garrison whose only means of resistance consisted in their personal gallantry." While some weight must be allowed to the circumstances enumerated by Lord Moira, candour must attribute a portion of the implied censure to the feeling of disappointment at the repeated reverses which thus marked the commencement of a campaign, on the plan of which he had bestowed much thought, and in the success of which his own reputation was essentially committed.

But the repeated assaults upon Kalunga, though unsuccessful when made, were not without effect. Though retaining possession of the fort, the garrison had suffered dreadfully from the fire of the British artillery, were greatly reduced in numbers, deprived of their officers, in want of provisions and water, and in danger of pestilence from the accumulation of the dead, they, on the morning of the 30th November, evacuated the place, which was immediately taken possession of by Colonel Mawbey. The scene within the fort was of the most appalling description, and bore ample testimony to the desperate spirit which had animated its defenders. The fortune without the walls was not happier than it had been within, their flight being intercepted by detachments of the British force, and the greater part of the fugitives either killed, wounded, or made prisoners. In this service, Major Ludlow greatly distinguished himself, especially by attacking and dislodging from a very advantageous position, a force composed of the few followers who had accompanied the killadar, Bulhudder Sing, in his escape, strengthened by a body of about 300 Goorkhas, who had been despatched to reinforce the garrison at Kalunga, but had vainly hovered about the hills, seeking an opportunity to enter the place. The fort was ordered to be destroyed.—Asiatic Journal.

Literary Notice.

The Despatches, Minutes, and Correspondence of the Marquess Wellesley, K G., during his Administration in India. Edited by Montgomery Martin. Vol. 2. W. H. Allen and Co.

THE documents now before us include the proceedings of Lord Wellesley which followed the reduction of Mysore to the commencement of the Mahratto War, and therefore embrace a period pregnant with events of extraordinary interest in the history of India. In these are included the settlements of Mysore, Oude, and Surat; the Egyptian Expedition, the Rebellion of Doondiah Waugh, &c. Lord Wellesley's letters are admirable compositions: they are evidence of a highly-gifted mind, and this collection of historical facts cannot but be highly appreciated. We must, however, recommend the indefatigable editor to avoid for the future the introduction of any extraneous matter, for we perceive a few letters in this volume of no public interest. The work will be most valuable if it can be confined within moderate limits.

Recollections of Cadiz, Feb. 1810.—The British troops disembarked without delay,—laden with knapsack, haversack, great-coat, blanket, &c., thus bearing about them all those comforts to which the poor "soldado Espanol" is a stranger. By noon the splendid line of red coats in grand parade (extending nearly a mile in length) were drawn out on the city wall, which, broad and beautifully paved, forms a magnificent esplanade. The Cameron Highlanders were the chief objects of attraction; the warlike appearance of this fine battalion—every man of which, in his full-plumed bonnet, appeared to the Spaniards to stand six feet high at least, struck the people with astonishment;—then the kilt, the philabeg, the naked knee, and tartan stocking, were altogether novelties hitherto unseen in those countries. The fair sex, who honoured them with their smiling regards, soon overcame the feeling of bashfulness which the first sight of these warriors created, and so greatly had this favoured corps grown on the good graces of the beholders, that when it became known that its destination was Isla de Leon, a murmur of regret ran through the admiring crowd. . . The word "attention" struck the multitude suddenly mute—not a whisper was heard. At the next word of command, "Shoulder Arms," the effect on the people was absolutely electric!—the whole five hundred file, like a mighty engine moved by a single spring, came to the "shoulder" like clock-work; after which, the line appeared as if suddenly petrified into a wall of porphyry. The astonishment and admiration of the spectators was too great to be expressed; they stood gazing in mute amazement at that steadiness under arms which can only be acquired by the most rigid discipline. But when the line brake into column of sections, and commenced its march, the wild and warlike music of the national bagpipe was almost drowned in the cheers of the people. "Vivas los Escoses." — "Viva los sin calzones!" (breechesless) was heard on all sides; nor were such noisy demonstrations of pleasure confined to the male sex alone; thousands of men, women, and children accompanied the regiment to the Puerta Tierra, with complimentary greetings. The bagpipe is an instrument not unknown to the Spaniards; it is the music of the peasantry of Gallicia, and called the "gaita Gallega" —the said Gallegos, be it observed, having, from their habits of industry, frugality, and trust-worthiness, time out of mind, obtained the name of the "Highlanders of Spain." Next came the 94th regiment (Scotch also, but of Highland, being the remnant of the Scotch brigade of 1794). This corps was what might be justly termed a fine, well-set up, steady-looking body of men, accurately clean in person and accoutrements, and every way calculated to impress the Spaniards with a favourable idea of the character of British troops. Marching in the rear of the Highlanders, they partook of those uproarious gratulations so lavishly bestowed by the people on their new allies. . . The last in the order of march was the 87th, or Prince of Wales' IRISH HEROES, a title which (although since exchanged for that of Royal Irish Fusiliers) that gallant corps has ever nobly maintained;—they were Hibernian to a man.—(and as the Spaniards concluded, "Catholica por supuesto"). They each wore in front of their cap a leaf of laurel (which they took care to bring with them from their suburban quarters near Lisbon), in testimony of their share of the victory of Talavera. Having been nearly two years in the Peninsula, no inconsiderable number of the officers and men spoke a motley mixture of Portuguese and Spanish, which, with that total absence of bashfulness, added to the reckless gaiety of manner for which their nation is famed, strongly recommended them to the favour of the Spaniards of all ranks. Another circumstance tendered to insure their favourable reception, and that was their uniform, which happened to be exactly the same as that of the Regimento de Irelanda, one of the Irish brigade in the Spanish service, which produced some of the most distinguished officers of their army. Persons of all ranks crowded round the regiment, front and rear, to shake their hands, English fashion—and "viva" them — courtesies which the officer in command very prudently did not attempt to repel, but, on the contrary, participated in them with every mark of respect and good-will. . . This regiment was destined to occupy the fort and barracks of Santa Elena at Cadiz; a post of distinguished honour assuredly, as it was the guard of the land gate. When the order to march was given, the drums and fifes (for men were too valuable to afford bands in those times), struck up the lively air, "A las armas! corre Patriotas!"—(Patriots, fly to arms), — then so popular in Spain. This completed the conquest of the hearts of the populace, which in a living tide almost carried the regiment to its quarters. Those who have only seen an English mob excited by some passing event to the expression of its feelings, whether of pleasure or of discontent, know enthusiasm only by name.—Blackwood.

East India Intelligence.

WE have with regret to announce the death of Lieut.-Colonel Brooke, of the 14th regiment of Bengal N. I. This casualty promotes Major F. Buckley, Capt. Gavin Young, Lieutenant and Brevet-Captain Mercer, and Ensign Hennay, of the 70th N.I. We have also heard of the death, under peculiar circumstances, of Mr. Chas. Tidd of the Civil service.

The last accounts from Goomsur state that the troops were fast falling victims to the climate. Lieut.-Colonel Muriel, 8th Madras N.I., had died of fever, and 1400 men were in hospital with that fever. Capt. Gomperlz, of the 44th, is reported to have likewise died of the fever.

On Thursday the chairman and deputy-chairman of the East India Company proceeded to the King's yard, at Deptford, to visit the Prince Regent yacht, which is now ready for sea, and will sail probably about the end of the month, taking out Lord Elphinstone to his Government of Madras, touching probably at Madeira, the coast of South America, the Cape, Mauritius, and Ceylon, before she reaches Muscat, her final destination, where she will be presented to the Imaum or reigning Prince, who is the most powerful chieftain in the Persian Gulf and a close ally of the British. The chairman was accompanied by Sir C. Forbes, Sir A. Johnson, and a large party of the Directors and friends of Captain Ogan, who had prepared a sumptuous collation for his guests.

The Spitfire steam-vessel, which arrived at Falmouth on Tuesday last, has brought intelligence of the recovery of the Tigris steam-vessel, which was recently lost in a hurricane on the Euphrates. It was found with its keel upwards, and had received no material damage. The accounts from Colonel Chesney were favourable, and the expedition was proceeding satisfactorily.

We are sorry to learn that the Madras Military Fund has been declared by a committee of officers to be in a condition of such decided insolvency, as to require very important modifications in the subscriptions to it, and in the pensions and allowances it provides. The committee have drawn up a Report upon the subject, which is too voluminous to insert, but from which next week we will give a sketch of the embarrassments of the Fund at different periods.

Sir Henry Pane, the Commander-in-Chief, had republished Lord Hill's order of the 31st Aug., 1835, prohibiting the introduction of Orange Lodges in the Army, and forbidding all officers and soldiers to countenance or attend any Orange lodge or any other meeting or society whatsoever for party purposes. The Gov.-Gen. had appointed to his Staff, as A.D.C., Capt. J. Byrne, 31st reg., Lieuts. E. Champneys, 39d Bengal N.I., G. M'Gregor, Bengal Art., and Ensign the Hon. W. G. Osborne, H.M.'s 26th reg. The last named officer had been previously gazetted as Military Secretary to the Governor.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Rowls, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Lifevery Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, St. Bishopsgate Without. HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass sloppers, 12s. each.

TESTIMONIALS.

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. From Bransby Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From William Hewitson, Esq., No. 2, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANIC PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years perience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians Surgeons in London, and are always administered at se public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorr Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Disease either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible they do not require the slightest confinement, or any altera of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as la cases with all other medicines in use for these complaints, after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like na which, only possessing a local action, merely suppress complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitu and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than nary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffe under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constr to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. The likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, butic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of sels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their rivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other profess recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first o these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-stre

Dear Cooper,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instan and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved sy of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you re mend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty t had never before witnessed: but what I consider their most loable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that h the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you c fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, Joshua Brook

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various coments to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*
GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.
G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.
* Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

TO PREVENT FRAUD.
THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, Alex. Thorn, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

INFANTRY.

1 Foot—"We have just received intelligence that the Lord William Bentinck, which some time since conveyed convicts to Sydney, and there took in 400 troops, we believe the 4th Foot, for Bombay, is lost on her passage to that place, and we fear few, if any, of those who were on board are saved."—Salisbury Herald of Saturday. [This report is without foundation. No part of this regt. has as yet embarked for India.—Ed.]

1—400 of this regt. were on board the Lord William Bentinck when that vessel encountered a hurricane off Barrier Reef. No tidings of the fate of the ship have been received.

1—are to proceed to Dublin.

1 Depot—The comp. at Ashbourne moved to Pigeon House, Dublin, on the 12th inst.

1 Depot—A considerable detachment, under Maj. Kell, is under orders to join the service comps. Capt. Cosby, Lieut. Le Blanc, and Ens. Griffith, will accompany the detachment.

1—have orders to embark for Halifax.

1 Depot—have moved from Haslar to Colewort bar.

1—Lieut. and Adj. Charles R. H. Granville was drowned the end of last week while bathing on the Coast of Kent.

1 Depot—have moved to Fodine barracks.

West India Regt.—An order has been received at the head-quarters of this regt. to recruit in the colonies, and Lieut.-Col. Bash, K.H., is indefatigable in his exertions to raise the complement of men required, 540, to complete the number of his comps; to effect this as speedily as possible, Capt. Dowglas, Lieuts. Palmer and Burke, are ordered to Sierra Leone, and Lieut. Winn to Cuba. The following changes have taken place in the stations of the officers, viz., Major Mills, from Dominica to the head-quarters at Trinidad. Maj. Chads, from Grenada to Barbadoes; Capt. Delamot, relieved by Capt. Hay, at St. Lucia, to head-quarters; Capt. Duarne, from Antigua to head-quarters; Lieut. Pinder, relieved by Lieut. Horsford, at Barbadoes, to head-quarters. Qur.-Mas. Cornwall has proceeded on sick leave to Canada.

Royal Artillery, Woolwich.—On Sunday last 53 men, non-commissioned and gunners, embarked on board the Royal Tar st.-v. for Dublin from the Arsenal, under charge of Capt. and Adj. Olway 2d batt., another Officer being permitted to do his duty during his temporary absence from head-quarters. Gunner Ford, of the R.B., has been sentenced to 90 days hard labour in Cold-Bath-Fields Prison, having been detected in stealing three pecks of oats from the troop-houses. The Officers gave a concert in the mess-room on Thursday, which passed off with much eclat, though it was but thinly attended.

Militia—G. M. O. Head-quarters, Guernsey, 2d Sept., 1836.—The Com.-in-Chief has been pleased to make the following appointment in the Militia:—1st or East Regt. Lt. Inf., Henry Price, gent., to be Lieut.

The 19th and 85th regts. returning to Europe without relief coming out, will cause a general movement of the troops to take place, after the hurricane months are over: 36th and 76th regts. to Barbadoes; 74th St. Lucia h. q., and Dominica; 14th Antigua h. q., and St. Kitt's; 65th St. Vincent h. q., and Grenada; 67th Berbice; 69th Demerara; 89th Trinidad h. q., and Tobago; 1st West India regt. h. q. Trinidad, detachments at Antigua, Barbadoes, Demerara, Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Tobago.

Irish Pensioners.—The Chelsea out-pensioners are in future to make a solemn declaration in lieu of the oath heretofore required. As regards the out-pensioners in Ireland, only one declaration will be required, on or immediately after the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year, which must be made in the presence of, and subscribed by, one of his Majesty's justices of the peace, and afterwards delivered to the chief constable of police of the district in which the pensioners may reside, who will thereupon countersign the declaration and transmit the same at the period and in the manner observed in forwarding the affidavit which has hitherto been required.

We understand that his Excellency Maj.-Gen. Ross will resign the governorship of this island on the 26th of this month. In alluding to this circumstance, we cannot deny ourselves the pleasure of bearing our humble testimony to the amiable, conciliatory, and impartial spirit which has uniformly regulated his conduct since he has held his responsible office. We are indebted to him for mitigating the severity of militia duty, for which he has received the silent thanks of many of our countrymen, who feel grateful to his Excellency for his humane and liberal consideration. He has never ostentatiously displayed the pomp or the authority of a military ruler, but manifested the milder and less obtrusive virtues of a civil governor. He may be assured that he will ever retain the good wishes of our inhabitants, who will deem themselves eminently fortunate if his successor imitates his example.—Guernsey Star.

A garrison Court-Martial was held at Malta on the 6th ult. on Giuseppe Seli, a drummer of the Royal Malta Fencibles, charged with firing a musket loaded with ball, at Tomasn Abela, of the same corps, and thereby causing his death. The prisoner was found guilty, and expiated his crime on the scaffold.

The expence of sending a regiment to India now is not one third of what it was a few years ago. This can no longer be urged as the reason for keeping the regiments twenty years in that country. The charge per man is now 8*l.* 17*s.* or 9*l.* at most. To meet this the soldier pays sixpence per diem out of his pay while at sea, by which means the charge becomes equal to, if not less than, the cost of him in barracks at home.

A convict guard of the 80th regiment, consisting of twenty-nine men, under Lieutenant Dickson, 17th regt., and Lieutenant Christie, 80th regiment, embark at Deptford on the 17th instant, on board the John convict ship, for New South Wales.

The Committee of Inquiry at Fort Pitt has not yet closed its proceedings. The inquiry has been extensive and rigid into the whole system.

Infantry regiments next for foreign service,—18th, 33d, 35th, and 82d, which returned from abroad in 1832.

Relief.—The three regiments of Foot next for relief in India are 16th, 45th, and 54th, abroad since 1819. The 22d and 86th will come home without reliefs, and leave the 81st next to be relieved, which has been abroad since 1827. In the Mediterranean the 10th, 11th, and 2d battalions of Rifles, are next for relief; they went in 1826. The 78th at Ceylon, abroad since 1826, is next for home. The 99th at Mauritius, abroad since 1825, will be the first to return home from that island. Since 1826, only six regiments have embarked for India, viz.,—the 39th, 26th, 63d, 62d, 17th, and 2th. Of the six regiments only the 26th and 62d proceeded direct; the 39th, 63d, and 17th, embarked with convicts for New South Wales and thence went on to India, and the 9th was sent from the Mauritius.

The following appointments to the Staff of the Lieut.-Gen. commanding in Ireland, announced in our last, have since appeared in orders:—Maj. Greaves 34th regt., Military Secretary. Captain the Honourable R. Bruce, and Lieut. Arthur Fitzroy Somerset, of the Grenadier Guards, to be Aides-de-Camp.

Orders have been issued for the embarkation at Cork, on board (tonnage to be provided by the Admiralty), of detachments from the 14th and 89th depots, to join the service companies in the West Indies, and of detachments from the 8th and 84th depots to join the service companies in Jamaica, viz., West Indies—14th Foot, one Officer, and 21 r. and f.; 89th, two Officers, and 31 r. and f. Jamaica—8th Foot, four Officers, and 67 r. and f.; 84th, three Officers, and 56 r. and f.

At the desire of His Majesty, Lord Hill, accompanied by Lord Howick, the Secretary at War, went down to Old Oak Common a short time ago to fix on a spot most eligible upon which to erect barracks for the recruits belonging to the three regiments of Guards. Their Lordships have recommended them to be built upon that part adjoining the Paddington Canal and the Birmingham Railway. It is in contemplation to throw Wormwood Scrubs and Old Oak Common together, to form ground to exercise the troops on, and for reviews. Old Oak Common belongs to Government, and in consequence of this meditated arrangement, Government objected to the Great Western Railway passing over this property. The line of this railway is to pass between the common and the Uxbridge-road.

In the second page of the Limerick Chronicle of Wednesday there are eleven paragraphs copied without acknowledgment from our Paper of last week.

Portsmouth, Sept. 16.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Stakesby went on to Chatham on Saturday, with part of the 1st Batt. of Rifles. The Catherine Stewart Forbes has not yet arrived with the hd.-qrs., but expected every day. Inconstant was hauled out of the basin on Monday. Pique went to Spithead on Tuesday. Conway, commissioned by Capt. Drinkwater, on Wednesday. Princess Charlotte, 104, taken in the basin to be brought inward; she will go into dock after the Victory. Princess Charlotte will most probably take the place of the Britannia, as Sir P. Durham's Flag-ship and the latter go to the Mediterranean with the next Commander-In-Chief. The wind has been blowing strong all the week from N.E., and prevented arrivals from the westward. It has also prevented the Jupiter being brought into harbour, to be paid off. There is no King's steam-boat in the port; and, although application was made to the proprietors of the Eclipse Topsham vessel, they demanded so exhibitant a sum that the worthy Admiral superintendant very prudently refused it. The Firebrand Admiralty steam yacht was here a couple of days, but she was not used for the purpose, as the strain upon her would have injured her. It is reported the Messenger, as a tug-steamer, will be permanently attached to the port, as two engineers, stokers, &c. are ordered to be borne on the Victory's books. Ships in Port.—Pique and Jupiter at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Inconstant, Conway, Royal George yacht, Excellent, Seaflower, in harbour.

Milford Haven, Sept. 14th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Mary revenue cutter, Mr. Burmon Com., tender to the Swift, arrived here on Thursday last for boats and other stores. On Sunday she sailed again for her destination—the coast of Scotland. 12th, the Mulgrave was undocked at Pembroke-yard, and on the 13th was taken in tow by the Goodwill lighter and some boats belonging to the establishment, and brought down in our quarantine ground, where she is now moored in place of the Gibraltar. The anniversary of the Coronation was hailed at this port on Thursday last with every demonstration of loyalty. The Gibraltar was taken into dock on Tuesday, and the workmen of that establishment immediately began taking her to pieces. The copper fitted with the late Sir Humphry Davy's protectors is in a good state of preservation, and but little foul. Nothing has transpired yet respecting the Board's visit, which took place here last week, except that a check was put on the superannuations taking place. None now are permitted to be put on the list but those old and infirm persons who are truly unable to do a day's work. The talented Secretary remarked on this subject, that it is useless to superannuate any that are capable even of light work, because their places must be supplied by others, as the number of shipwrights, in particular, is rapidly decreasing at the different arsenals. Indeed, such inducements are held out to them in the Merchant Service, that numbers are leaving the King's yards for those employs. It is rumoured, too, that the workmen attached to Pembroke-yard will be directed to reside nearer that establishment. At present they are distributed about the country to a considerable extent. This is for the double reason of making their services available in cases of sudden emergency, and to prevent the expense of the Surgeon's attendance at great distances, which must necessarily interfere with the proper execution of his duty. We have more than once before advocated this arrangement. Besides, men living four or five miles off, and having to walk that before commencing their day's work, cannot be supposed to endure similar exertion to those who go fresh to their employ. The Corysfort and Crenial lighters are both ready for sea, and will sail to-day or to-morrow; the former for Sheerness, the latter for Plymouth. Mr. Ridout of the Post Office department, and Mr. John Bull of the Mail Coach Office, have been at Hobbs' Point this week, making arrangements for the Mail to run to that station by the first of the ensuing month.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, Sept. 14th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Mr. Hicks, the Master of the William and Mary yt., has resumed his duty from leave of absence. The Lightning st.-yt., Lieut. Shamblar, towed the Blazer to the City Canal on Friday afternight to get her boilers. The Lightning left here on Saturday for the North, to embark Mr. Bligh, Swedish Chargé d'Affaires, for Stockholm. Mr. Tinmouth, the new Master-Attendant, has entered upon his official duties. The Alban st.-v., Lieut. Tinling, went down the river on Tuesday to try her boilers. The African st.-v., Lieut. West, was paid off on Wednesday. She has had her foremast taken out, and struck her main-topmast. The Flamer st.-v. has been hauled under the Sheers to ship a new funnel, and new masts have been made for her. The Alban st.-v. also went down the river on Thursday to try her speed and boilers. The Sovereign tr., Lieut. Brady, Agent, sailed on Monday for the Westward. Two lighters, which were loading here, have sailed with deal planking and small spars for Chatham and Sheerness. The Confiance is being fitted with Morgan's patent wheels, and she has shipped a new main and topmast. A visit from the Lords of the Admiralty is shortly expected, when it is hoped their Lordships' attention will be attracted to the guard shed, occupied by the Royal Marines, such quarters being inconvenient and incompatible with the respectability of the important duties entrusted to this gallant corps. Ships in Port—William and Mary yt., Alban and Rhadamanthus st.-vs. In Dock—Unite, 46. In the Basin—Messenger, African, Flamer, Echo, Columbia and Confiance st.-vs.

Malta, 23d Aug.—Nine French line-of-battle ships have arrived off Alexandria. The French Admiral went on shore, and was well received. Asia, Magpie, and Nautilus arrived here, and the Nautilus sailed for Athens to join the fleet. Hermes st. has gone to Corfu. Asia has been on shore under the rope-walk, but received no damage.

Little doubt exists of the Purser of the Portland, Mr. H. Cooper, having met with a tragic end. H.M.S. Portland, at the close of July, went up the Gulf of Egina, and when off Callamachi, several officers, of whom the Purser was one, obtained leave to visit Corinth; after viewing the Hieropolis, the whole party came down together, but when in the suburbs of the city of Corinth, the Purser told them that he would overtake them at the inn directly; after waiting for him until late the next day, the party directed their steps to the frigate, and reported his absence, when Capt. Price landed with a considerable part of the crew, and searched in all directions to ascertain, if possible, the certainty of his fate. A despatch was sent to Admiral Canaris, who went up in a brig, and aided the crew of the frigate with his men in finding some clue to the Purser's mysterious disappearance; the search, however, of eight days' continuation, proved fruitless.

Tartarus steam-vessel, Malta, Aug. 23.—"We arrived at Scanderoom on the 30th ult., and waited there till the 9th inst., for Colonel Chesney's mail, from India. I am sorry to say, that none arrived up to that date, nor could any late intelligence of his position be obtained, therefore we were obliged to return here by way of Beirout and Alexandria, arriving here this day. We are to have 20 days' quarantine. A French squadron anchored off Alexandria, while the Tartarus was off Scanderoom, but sailed the same day. There is very little plague now in Egypt."

Letters from Callao of 15th April, mention that the French Commodore on that station had died on 6th inst. He was much respected by Commodore Mason, and all the English officers with whom circumstances had brought him into intimacy. He had been buried with funeral honours, attended by the officers of the Blonde and Sparrowhawk, and an American frigate. The American Commodore was also in a precarious state of health; Callao and Lima were sickly, and the Sparrowhawk had felt the influence of the prevailing epidemic. The Talbot, 28, was at Coquimbo on 7th April, and would probably go to Panama; the North Star, 28, was expected at Valparaiso from San Blas, with specie, about the middle of June; the Basilisk, 10, had been sent to Valdivia to apprehend some convicts who had escaped with a vessel, and had been committing some acts of piracy. Peru was perfectly quiet as to politics, and trade was consequently increasing.

The Seaflower cutter, Lieut. Roche, arrived on Sunday from Sheerness. She will sail in a few days for Jersey.

At Portsmouth Rear Adm. Sir F. Maitland mustered the Ordinary last week, on board the Prince, hulk to the Victory guard ship, and gave very general satisfaction to the officers and ship's company by his explanation of the manner in which their pay and allowances would hereafter be arranged.

Royal Marines, Woolwich.—We regret to say that two Officers of this division, Lieuts. Wood and Ballairs, have been placed in arrest, in consequence of a personal affray whilst on guard, in which Lt. Ballairs was wounded.

The Adder cutter has been removed from her old moorings, opposite the water-gate, and hauled upon the mast slips; and it is expected she will be broken up, as she is totally unserviceable. The Alban st.-v. will sail this day, Saturday, and takes out specie to the West Indies. A temporary landing-place has been rigged out at No. 5 slip, until the new works are completed in front of the old water-gate.

The number of Colonels of Marine is now reduced to three—namely, the Hon. Captains Irby, Bouverie, and Skipsey, the vacancy by the death of Capt. Sir Christopher Cole not having been filled up.

The Blazer, Echo, and Rhadamanthus steamers are awaiting orders to be commissioned at Woolwich. All steamers will be in three classes 1st, 2d, and 3d, in future, and manned, paid, and allowanced as such.

Mr. John Parker, leading officer of the Plumbers at Woolwich Dock-yard, fell down last week in giving orders, and immediately expired. He was in perfect health and spirits the moment previous thereto.

The Lightning steamer has left Woolwich for Scotland, to take the Hon. W. Bligh to Stockholm as Ambassador.

The Columbia and African steamers are paid off this week at Woolwich.

The Numa, Arab, and Sovereign, transports, are discharging and awaiting further orders at Deptford, where the Emma freight ship is loading for Malta, and the John and Norfolk, convict ships, fitting for Australia.

By a very recent regulation, all H.M. ships and vessels will be completely rigged before being put in commission; it is supposed by the crews and officers of the guard ships (late ordinaries) a most considerable saving in wages, provisions, &c. will be effected thereby.

The Deron, Plymouth lighter, by late Ordinary arrangement is transferred to the River Medway service.

Vanguard, Bellerophon, and the squadron were at Plymouth on the 14th; they expected to go to sea on the 15th and that they were to be joined by the Pique. Inconstant will go out of harbour in about a fortnight.

The Hyacinth, 18, Commander Blackwood, was at Calcutta (to which she conveyed the sum of 270,000*l.* in specie being part of the land revenues, which she had collected at Negapatam, Masulipatam, Vezagapatam, Monsouetullah and Ganjam), on the 27th March. She worked up the Hoogley from Kedgeree to Fort William in as short a time as the Jupiter was towed up to her anchorage by three steamers. The Hyacinth was, at the above date, about to proceed with money to Madras. The Andromache, 28, Capt. Chads, was at anchor in Diamond Harbour.

When the Stakesby, whose arrival we reported in our last, left Halifax, the squadron were dispersed as follows:—The Vestal, 28, Captain Jones, left Halifax on the 21st ult. for Barbadoes; the Rainbow, 28, and Racer, 16, were at Newfoundland; the latter would go to the West Indies when the frost set in. The Wanderer, 18, was in the Bay of Fundy; the Champion, 18, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Melville, 74, would go in November, with a flag to the southern portion of Sir Peter Halket's command.

The intended breaking-up of the Royal Yacht Squadron has created a powerful sensation amongst numerous classes of persons, and various reasons are assigned for its dissolution. Lord Yarborough stated, at a public dinner last season, that the Club gave employment, during a large portion of the year, to upwards of 8,000 young men, who were qualified to act, in the event of a war, at a moment's notice as petty officers in the navy. It is well known that his late as well as his present Majesty, took a deep interest in the prosperity of this Club.

We have had this week two gentlemen here (Worthing) one from the Admiralty, and the other from the Woods and Forests, surveying and measuring at the Priory, with, as we hear, the intention of making a harbour. A sea-port between Beachy Head and the Ness is so much required that we trust this long-wished for boon will soon be granted to mariners. A finer or more suitable situation cannot be selected on the coast of Sussex.—Brighton Gazette.

Purifying Sea Water.—The Company are strenuously persevering in their praiseworthy exertions for the establishment of this important desideratum to our Royal Navy and the Merchant Service. A splendid vessel has been just fitted up with the Company's improved apparatus, and proceeds immediately to the Mediterranean. A report of the result of the success of the machine we shall anxiously await, and communicate to our naval friends the moment it reaches us.

Mr. Deane, the Diver, exhibited his apparatus, and the system of using it, on Thursday, to the Gun-wharf at Portsmouth, before a large party of ladies and gentlemen, Naval and Military Officers, &c.: among them were Admirals Sir P. Durham and Sir F. Maitland, Capt. Dundas, M.P., Hon. Capt. Elliot, &c. &c. Mr. Deane selected a high tide, and went down in a part of the Wharf 18 or 20 feet deep, remained under water nearly half-an-hour, and his movements to and fro were plainly perceived by the bubbling of the water. A gun having been sunk, a rope was lowered, which Mr. D. made fast, and was hoisted on the Wharf. The spectators were highly gratified and astonished at the spectacle.

The Zenobia, free trader, for the Cape and Calcutta, expects to sail from Spithead on Saturday.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday and Wednesday:—Messrs. John Reid, Fred. A. Egerton, M. H. Rodney, M. S. Kirkes, J. A. St. Ledger, Malabar; A. J. Lindsey, Asia; Mr. S. B. Dolling, Revenge; P. J. Maitland, Madagascar; G. E. Clark, Minden; C. Taylor, late Griffon; F. Freeling, late Raleigh; J. C. Grant, late Rapid.

The Fly, fitting at Plymouth, is ordered to Rio Janeiro.

By accounts from Halifax we hear that Lieut. J. R. Sulivan of the Melville had returned in her tender from a two months' cruise off the Coast of Newfoundland; the vessel had encountered a hurricane while on a lee shore, which lasted two days, and, if it had not been for the able seamanship of Lieut. Sulivan, the tender and all hands would have been lost. Shortly after the return to Halifax, Vice-Admiral Sir P. Halket addressed a public memorandum to the Officer and his crew, highly commending their exertions.

Cambridge, bound to Ceylon and Bombay, with detachments of 58th and 61st regs., put back to get a new cross-jack yard. Some of her crew wanted to quit, upon the plea of the ship being short handed; but on hearing that seven men of the Bolton, who actually refused to go to sea in her, after signing an agreement, had been committed by the Portsmouth magistrates to the tread-mill for three weeks, in default of paying a fine of 40*s.* each, the seamen of the Cambridge thought better of it, and went to sea on Tuesday.

Plymouth, Sept. 15.—Yesterday the Fleet, under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir C. Paget, consisting of the Bellerophon, Vanguard, Pembroke, Scylla, Pantaloon br. and Emerald tender, put to sea on a cruise. The Madagascar gascar was expected to sail last evening, with her consort, the Galatea, if the latter, which is jury-rigged, could manage to work out. The Hercules, 74, is ordered into harbour to be docked. The Bellerophon, 60, was undocked on Thursday, and went out of harbour into the Sound on Monday. The br. Partridge, Lieut. Bisson, put to sea with Capt. Ericsson, to try in channel soundings and in deep water, beyond the Bay of Biscay, a new sounding machine, which Capt. E. has invented, and which, it is said, will give the soundings in the deepest water, while the ship is going 9—10 knots. The Partridge is expected afterwards to join the squadron. The Minden is the only vessel in the Sound.

East India Intelligence.

The following is an extract of the report drawn up by the Committee of the Madras Military Fund, stating the embarassments of the Fund at different periods:—"The principle of operation of the Fund now in force was adopted from its commencement, that is, receipts and payments were not calculated on any rule to show that they bore a 'proper proportion to each other, and for the first few years all appeared to be going on favourably; but in nine years from its commencement the institution was unable to meet its engagements, and in February, 1818, the then Secretary reported, that, in place of an increase, there would be a deficiency of upwards 2,000. On this occasion, the subscription of married members was increased, and a restriction of benefits to once in eight years established." By a report of a Committee of Directors in 1821, its condition was found to be such that immediate and extensive changes were necessary. The call was met by the Subscribers with alarrity: donations were increased, minimum established, additional payments for daughters required, and the annuities reduced. Under all these changes, the capital, which in 1821 was rupees 8,05,408, was, in December 1834, rupees 24,08,567; yet, even with this immense increase, the report states that the Fund is unable to meet its engagements, and that, in consequence thereof, the Committee circulated propositions, abolishing personal benefit to Subscribers, with the exception of passage-money once to Subalterns returning to this country on sick leave, except on loan on the prescribed terms, and by increasing the minimum of married subscribers to the same ratio that benefit is derived.

We are sorry to announce the death of Captain Collie, the Deputy Master Attendant, on the 3d May. This gentleman was one of the oldest European residents in India, having come out to this country about sixty years ago, when a boy of thirteen or fourteen.—Calcutta Courier, May 8.

Neemuch.—Brigadier Hampton is, we understand, to be removed from the command of the station. Some circumstances connected with a recent case dissipated, it is said, the little remaining doubt entertained at head-quarters of the ability of the gallant officer to command a station, and thus led to his removal.—Agra Ukhbar, March 26.

We have seen a letter from Vizianagram, which may make the public suspend any rash judgment on the poor Sepoys with Ensign Gibbon's detachment. It appears that the enemy would not attack them on the plain, but when engaged in a narrow pass, they were attacked in the rear and on both flanks by about 400 men, while the ground in front was barricaded. The Sepoys were men who would have fought with the utmost determination; and when we add that out of 25, the number of the detachment, 13 were killed and seven wounded, our impulse will be rather towards supposing some palliatory reason for the Jemadhar and two or three Sepoys who fled, or rather escaped from the field. The conduct of these latter is now under investigation.—Madras Herald, March 26.

A curious case occurred at the Bank of Bengal. A native presented several bank notes to be cashed, when it was discovered there was no signature attached to them, although in every other respect correct. Payment for them was of course refused, and as no suspicion could attach to the individual who presented them, minute inquiry was made within the Bank as to whether they could have been issued without signatures. Every thing there proved, however, that they had been given out in a proper manner. The individual who presented them was again referred to, when it was discovered they had been deposited for some time in a copper box, which had entirely removed the signatures, which were written with common ink, but had no effect on the other part of the notes.

It is said that an order for immediately constructing railroads from Madras to the Mount and to the Red Hills has been approved of by the Military Board, and now only waits the confirmation of Sir Frederick Adam.

Cawnpore.—Two officers of the Lancers, it is reported, have been placed under arrest, for forgetting themselves in the excitement of an argument.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 6.

(By Express) REVOLUTION IN PORTUGAL!

FROM AN EYE WITNESS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

It had been for some time generally believed, that at the meeting of the Cortes, some slight expression of discontent would show itself on the part of the people against the Ministry, and that on the landing of the Opposition Deputies from Oporto, it was the intention of their friends to sound the public mind, by giving those members, I may say, a triumphal entry into Lisbon: to stop this, Government had determined to revive an old law to prohibit fireworks in the streets, and ordered that none of the bands belonging to the National Guard should attend; this excited the minds of the people the more, and they determined to oppose the edict in every thing. At about three o'clock on the 9th, the steamer Napier was signalized, when a crowd of not more than sixteen hundred persons, of all descriptions, assembled in the square near the landing-place, and containing music, &c., boats to the amount of about thirty left the shore to meet them. As the steamer passed she was greeted with vivas and fire-works, and followed by the boats, playing the Constitutional hymn of 1820; at four, the deputies landed, and were followed by the mob, crying "Live the Opposition Deputies and Constitution of 1820!" In the Rua Augusta they were met by the Commander of the Municipal Guard, with eight soldiers: the crowd desired him to cry "viva," and upon his refusal, he was stoned and nearly torn from his horse, but fortunately escaped, only slightly hurt. The Deputies retired to the house of a gentleman of the name of Gomez to dinner, and the crowd gradually separated. Up to this moment it was not the intention, and never entered the minds of the most violent to overturn the Constitution then established; all they wished was a change of the Ministry; but at this dinner, the debate ran loud and high, being opposed by some, whether they should get the discontented of the National Guard to be to arms. This step was adopted, and emissaries sent to that effect. At nine, a few soldiers came to a house in which I was sitting, and demanded to see their captain. Having been previously instructed, we assured them he was gone out; when they declared he had been there a moment previous; and if he did not come and order the drums to beat to arms, that they would give him a knock on the head with a butt end of one of their muskets. Upon this he went to their quarters, and told them to apply to the Major and Colonel. They could not be found; and on his still refusing, the drummers were made to beat the alarm. At this time other drums were heard, and it was soon understood that the revolt was general. All the foreigners were now anxious to know if the troops of the line would oppose this arming, and if the British men-of-war would interfere. Numbers, therefore, flocked to the place of meeting in the Largo d'Rocio. At about one o'clock, the 5th Regiment of the line having arrived, was ordered to charge on the Nacional Guard. Had they done so, the revolution was at an end; but seeing themselves unsupported, they first wavered; then a few voices cried "Viva a Constitution d' 20"—"Kill or shoot the Colonel H——;" and finally marched over to the opposite party. The Colonel fled to the palace, taking his post by the Prince, he being an aide-de-camp. This conduct of the 5th was directly followed by all the rest of the troops, except one regt. of Lancers, who sent and offered to charge if the Prince wished; but finding all others had gone over, he refused. At about 12, Colonel Gil Guedes, part of whose regt. of Lancers being away, appeared with two soldiers in the square, not knowing that the mutineers had arrived there. He was hailed to stop, but his turned and fled, followed rapidly by three musquet-balls, one of which killed his horse, and another took effect in his leg, when he was surrounded and carried into a house. This was the only blood that was spilt; and it is the more extraordinary as many of the soldiers were greatly intoxicated, and most raving, crying "Death to all thieves"—"Death to strangers." About 2, a deputation having been formed, consisting of officers from all the regiments, waited on the Queen with the address I send you. Their demeanour and conduct before her Majesty, I am informed, was the most indecent and violent. She agreed to dismiss her ministers and to give an answer after she had consulted her new one, which she charged the Conde d'Himiadea to form; and she entreated them to disperse the troops, in order that it might not be said she was coerced. At daylight a salute announced to the city, that she agreed to the Constitution. The troops then marched to the palace, and her Majesty with the Prince, appeared at the window. She was in tears, and seemed deeply affected, and had fainted twice during the night. I was greatly struck with seeing some of her own household under the window—men whom she had always treated with the greatest kindness—cheering and waving their hats in the most insulting manner. The Prince had an umbrella in his hand, and seemed calm. After the troops left the palace, they marched to the Campo d'Arica, with the purpose of remaining under arms till the new Ministry were named, and the Constitution sworn to; but the troops of the line retired to their quarters by superior orders. It was soon understood that Lord Howard de Walden had proposed to the resident the diplomatic corps to retire on board the British men-of-war, till the wishes of their governments were known, armed boats were sent to receive them: the Spanish Ambassador however refused, his own Government having lately declared a similar Constitution; the French Chargé and talked about what he would do had he a fleet, but having only a small brig he shrugged his shoulders and voted to remain, consequently Lord Howard was obliged to remain also. At 3, the decree of the Queen was read to the troops in the Rocio square, which promised to invoke a Cortes according to the Constitution of 20, and swear to that Constitution they might make; the troops then dispersed, and we immediately sailed. The most of the troops that were in the square never exceeded 10,000, and there were few, very few of the officers present.

There are of course numberless reports of what did take place, both in and out of the palace, but as I was not present, I refrain from mentioning them. We anchored outside the Bar, and about 2 o'clock in the morning of Sunday, Mr. J. Zeller came on board in a boat belonging to the Hastings, charged with Lord Howard's despatches, when we again sailed. On Monday morning we communicated with Oporto, when they were all quiet and had not heard of the revolution. In Lisbon are the Hastings, Cornwallis, Malabar, Endymion, and the Pocket which was detained till Monday.

THE NATIVE ARMY OF INDIA.

BY A. JAMES, LATE MAJOR OF THE 67TH.

At a time when the high importance and value of our Asiatic possessions are so well understood and so justly appreciated, it is no wonder, connected as England and India now stand, that the history, manners, customs, religion, and habits of the inhabitants should become objects of great interest to a British public. On that history it is not my design in this paper to expatiate. But as in Parliament, and out of it, much has been said of late on the subject of the native army of India—a momentous subject, considering that by means of that army, to the astonishment of Europe, the sceptre of Britain stands triumphantly established over a dense population of one hundred millions of human beings, differing from us in religion, in manners, and in all the elements of social life. The reader may be gratified to become a spectator, whilst we bring before him, in review order,

> ——— this banner'd host,
> Under spread ensigns marching, well armed
> With horse and foot, all rank'd in close array.

It will at once be admitted by all who have served in that country, that the army of India, in everything that gives value to military character, is particularly efficient and respectable. About four-fifths of the Company's troops are Hindoos, the rest Musulmans. Generally the Sepahis of Bengal are men of high caste. They are physically powerful, straight, tall, and well set up; obedient, abstemious, and will endure great privations and fatigue. About 1804-5, when Lord Lake had to struggle against many and serious difficulties, and when, owing to the pressure on the treasury, the native troops were unavoidably kept twelve or thirteen months in arrear, not a murmur transpired, not a complaint was heard. Sepahis value themselves on their loyalty, their integrity, and are by no means insensible to a proper sense of honour. Their courage is unquestioned, and where their officers lead they will most gallantly follow. Naturally they are cool and collected, grave, sedate, not easily excited, nor soon depressed. To their employers they are devotedly attached, and, so long as they are liberally paid, their religion respected, and their castes not wantonly interfered with, there is no question but they will prove true to their colours, and ever be ready to shed their blood in defence of the British government. As to their honesty, it is proverbial. A Naick, with half-a-dozen Sepahis, will escort lacs of treasure through the country, nor have they ever been known to betray their trust.

When the efficiency, power, and numerical strength of the native army, averaging, in times of war, more than one hundred thousand men of all arms, are considered, the wisdom of encouraging that spirit of loyalty on which they pride themselves, and for which they have been long and eminently distinguished, will be sufficiently obvious. On that loyalty and attachment must eventually depend the stability of our power, and the duration of our dominion in Asia. Our power in India is based mainly on opinion, and the known fidelity of the native corps; it is therefore our interest and policy to take care that no real cause of complaint be on any account given to that brave army. Not that a mere reduction, warranted by circumstances, would at any time be construed into a just cause of discontent,—for the Sepahis are aware that reductions, as well as augmentations, are unavoidably dependent on the pacific or hostile attitude of surrounding states.

Of the Company it has been remarked, that there are not more generous masters in the world. But the local governments have not always emulated the munificence of their employers. Nor has that generosity been confined to the active-duty soldier: their invalid establishments for worn-out, wounded, and disabled soldiers, are admirable, and must ever be esteemed as standing monuments of their superior policy and enlightened munificence.

Under such circumstances, it is [no wonder that the native troops should be so sincerely devoted to the "Great Company Bahaudhur." An attachment thus rationally grounded on long usage, habits of service, gratitude, and a thousand fond reminiscences and associations, and even on the recollections of the battles they have fought, seems to bid defiance to all common causes of dissolution. Nor will the Sepahi ever abandon his colours, or forsake his officer, so long as the Company's conduct towards him is based on justice and becoming liberality.

And though many well-disposed persons, not very conversant with the localities, the prejudices, and peculiar position of the native, may be extremely zealous for the conversion of our eastern population, a population amounting to nearly one-seventh of the whole human race—zealous to break down their altars, and purge the land from the murky gloom of Hindooism, and all the dismal horrors of superstition and idolatry; yet this zeal, laudable as it may seem, must be rigidly kept under the curb of human prudence. Nothing should induce the Government to interfere with the religion of Asia—that is a chord, the striking of which might be fatal to our power. Nor should any undue anxiety after ill-judged retrenchment, or grinding economy, be ever permitted to mulct the Sepahi of his accustomed allowances. As things are, he is satisfied—his pay is ample—his means are equal to his wants, for his wants are few. Subject him to retrenchments, and you abridge his comforts, and he will become sour and dissatisfied. And, indeed, with a revenue of 18,000,000*l.*, it would be singular if the military establishment could not be liberally supported.

As to British officers in India, they are the soul of the army. The Sepahis love their officers, and are faithfully attached to them—to them they look up immediately under all their difficulties or grievances, and consider them the link which unites them to the British government. And yet British officers in India, under the rank of Field Officers, are actually the worst paid men in the Company's service: they are subject to so many unavoidable expenses, that the moment they are ordered from the Presidencies, as formerly, they should invariably be put on full batta. Deprived of this allowance, no Subaltern can keep his ground without getting in debt; his life is one of unceasing privation; and even the Captain is considerably worse off than at home. The Company's military officer cannot be too favourably considered; without him the native army could not exist. Then he is a banished man: for twenty years (from his youth up to the close of middle life) he quits his country and his friends—all the ties that bind him to his home—and in the course of his service, if he survive the time prescribed, how comes he back to the land of his birth?—a mere invalid, emaciated, broken down, an Asiatic in habit, a stranger to those he left behind, unknowing and unknown, shivering at every breeze, completely out of his element—a walking skeleton!

In such an army, and so constituted, no wonder the Company have felt themselves authorised to abrogate corporal infliction: not that the necessity of summary punishment is superseded, as many erroneously imagine, because promotion has been thrown open to the Sepahi. In regard to promotion, there has been no change whatever introduced—it is now precisely what it was forty years ago, and what it has ever been. The Company's regiments are officered, strictly and accurately speaking, exclusively by Europeans. Colonels, Majors, Captains, Lieutenants, Ensigns, all are Europeans—to none of these grades is the native eligible. According to the custom of the country, they have naicks, havildhars, jemutdhars, and jumadhars—and beyond the rank of jubadhar no Sepahi can ever rise. There his promotion stops. The nature of that rank will be sufficiently understood when it is stated that the youngest Ensign in the corps commands all these grades. But the Company can dispense with corporal infliction, because their army is peculiarly constructed. Between the eleven and twelve years that I served in the East, I never saw a Sepahi intoxicated. The Hindoo soldiers, especially in Bengal, are generally men of high caste; they deem it an honour and a privilege to be enrolled in the Company's regiments—their pay is nearly double that allowed to their troops by native princes—and after certain periods of service and good conduct, they are invalided on half-pay and a jagheer. To a Sepahi, therefore, under the above circumstances, nothing can be esteemed a greater misfortune than to be discharged for misconduct, for then all his hopes and prospects are ruined. The only irregularity to which Sepahis are particularly prone, is marauding on the line of march—they spare neither friend nor foe—nor can they comprehend how the practice can be accounted improper, much less criminal—c'est la coutume du pays.—In other respects, they are orderly, obedient, and well-behaved.

The dress of the native army is extremely becoming—In the cold season red jackets with pointed caps, without crowns, worn smartly on the top of the head; in summer, they are dressed in white, with a sort of cumberband or trousers of white calico, reaching half-way down the thigh, the rest of the thigh and leg naked, with the pointed heavy shoe of the country. Their arms are precisely like ours. They are well disciplined, steady under arms, fire admirably, and, under their officers, they will boldly come to the charge.—Court Magazine.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.—THE ATLAS AND CAPT. GRINDLAY.

Sir,—It appears the question of communication with India, by means of steam via the Red Sea, so long and earnestly sought for by all classes of the Indian community has at last been brought to the serious notice of His Majesty's Government. Great credit is due to the gentlemen who with much judgment and perseverance have wrought this undertaking so far on its way to the desired end. We Indians are too apt to jump at conclusions upon false premises, and thus it is so much importance is given to the petitions, and that strenuous exertions have been made at all the Presidencies, that they should come home very numerously signed; whereas, the first step towards clearing the road of the heavy obstructions which lay in the way, should have been to disabuse His Majesty's Government and the public mind of the false impressions that received by the evidence given to the point of expense in 1834. Happily for my old comrades and friends this much has been done for them, with great labour and assiduity, by persons competent to the task. I speak advisedly, Sir; for a very eminent engineer has assured me that he has examined them, and that in the main they have been correctly made. This attained, it enabled those gentlemen to make so reasonable a proposition to His Majesty's Government that it met with ready and serious attention; and if on examination it should prove to be substantially correct, there can be but little doubt that a satisfactory arrangement will be made; thus, these few gentlemen (for I hear it began with two only) have, by assiduity and perseverance in search of truth, done more towards the accomplishment of "steam to India" in a few months than years have effected before and simply because they began at the right end.

The authorities and the public having been thus prepared, the demonstrations of feeling from India have arrived very opportunely, and will be great helps, of which I have no doubt the highly respectable and influential gentlemen members now negociating this matter will avail themselves.

I perceive the Atlas of last Sunday notifies the arrival of these said petitions, and the appointment of Capt. Grindlay by the petitioners to very "onerous" duties. I have no intention, Sir, to disclaim his merits, but I am at a loss to know how that gentleman's services can now be made use of, and I shall be sorry indeed to learn that any portion of the merit due to the parties by whom this undertaking has been so particularly well managed hitherto, should be shared by a person who, until this moment, notwithstanding the great interest he takes in the affairs of India, has been passed, at least, his name, for a wonder, has not appeared in print with those at any of the deputations, or have I observed it in the list of the Provisional Committee which has been above to me; his services, I dare say, would have been "eminently useful," but they have not been used. I do love fair play, Mr. Editor.

It is a very singular coincidence, the exertions of these gentlemen were simultaneous with those of the Presidency of India; they have moved slowly but steadily, and it is straight-forwardness of purpose they owe their success. They appear to think an under-current has been working against them; but it is a difficult thing to find unanimity in a large circle of merchants; those of London are not our brethren in the East,—they have much occupation both of mind and body, this should be taken into account, and if there has been any difference of opinion or appearance slackness in some, the greater merit due to those who have brought this project to its present position. I rejoice to hear all minor differences are to be sunk in the one great object, that of guiding the stream of human intercourse in a direct and steady channel, through which, under God's providence, will flow more blessings to India than any Tory Government has conferred upon it for a very long period of years.

MILITARY PROMOTION.—HALF-PAY OFFICERS.

Sir,—As a subscriber and warm admirer of your independent paper, I take the liberty of addressing you on a subject of the greatest importance to the junior branches of the British Army, including Captains. You are well aware, Sir, that when a regiment is disbanded, and officers placed upon half-pay (which differs materially from an officer going on half-pay to suit his own convenience), they are precluded from enjoying those advantages which, from their length of service, they naturally anticipated to derive when they received their commissions, and who being without interest or family connexions are allowed, much against their inclination, to wear away the best part of their lives in inactive and hopeless prospects. How many are at present thus situated? And those more fortunate officers brethren in arms who, being re-instated through me terest at the Horse Guards, are still labouring under the ıdship of having to serve so many years (which, under isting regulations, they are obliged to do) before they ecame entitled to promotion. I will leave you to judge, . Editor, what must be the feelings of old Captains and ıbalterns (who would, had not their adverse fortune orined it otherwise, have been Field Officers of some standg) to see those officers who entered the service with themves, but who were never placed on half-pay, now figuring ay with epaulettes, having stars and crowns affixed reto. To do away with this as much as possible, and to monise the feelings of junior branches of the Army, I uld, with all due deference, suggest for your consideran, under the above circumstances, that the Captains and ıbalterns of the British forces should be granted a boon, ich would be more beneficial to them and their families o a trifling increase of monthly pay, namely,—to be owed to reckon for every three years on half-pay two rs towards promotion; for at present, although a Capn has been in the service for 20 years or a quarter of a ntury, still having been 10 or 12 years on half-pay, it ll avail him nothing towards his majority; and in like nner with respect to a Lieutenant obtaining his company. w, Mr. Editor, as I am of opinion this extreme hardship, ich at present rests upon the great body of the junior nches of the British Army, only requires to be brought he notice of the Commander-in-Chief, I trust you will pport my weak efforts in this cause by your powerful ns, whereby you will greatly increase the many obligas the military service are already under to you, for what ld be more gratifying to your feelings than to carry a nt of such vital importance to such a number of officers, o are now suffering so much by loss of rank, and that from any fault of their own, but from the unfortunate rse of their service, having remained so long on half-pay, who are, consequently, from not having any prospect promotion, not only depressed in spirit but distressed in umstances; and many of whom, I can well believe, k a distant land in hopes of procuring a higher rank ich they have little prospect of obtaining in England) the fall of their brother officers in the field,—a melanly expedient I will own, but hard fortune and the diss of their families compel them to such a resource? I ll now leave the subject in your hands, trusting you will cuse this address, and that you will kindly give it a place your columns.

London, Sept 13, 1836. SENEX MILES.

[The subject shall not be lost sight of; but in the mean e we court further communications from this intelligent rrespondent. The suggestions merit the consideration of rd Howick, in his proposed amendment of the condition Officers of the Army, and we will take care to submit m to his Lordship, who, we believe, has every disposition promote the welfare of the service.—ED.]

WRONGS OF THE NAVY.—MR HUME AND MR. BANNERMAN.

"Quod honestum, id utile est."

SIR,—Integrity and justice are the pillars upon which ional dignity and prosperity are supported; by adence to these great virtues the nation is respected by ngners. At home its institutions are honoured, its laws obeyed with alacrity, and when exposed to the miseries war both courage and a true spirit of devotion are ed to oppose the invader, or rather the very knowledge such a spirit, agreeable to what the Jewish law-giver rted in persuading his countrymen to a willing obedience ust laws and cultivating virtue, would raise them above surrounding nations, and, by impressing upon them the timent of superiority, would render them diffident of fure, and, as Moses observed, "it would be then said they were a wise and understanding people." The otenance of such principles fosters national gratitude, ch will flow to its defenders. No pitiful and contemptt economy will then be suffered to operate at the exse of the just rights of others, nor will the veteran be wed to descend the vale of years without a staff to rest n to bear up the burden of a wasted and exhausted conition. The full confidence of national gratitude urges s his talents and physical powers into the sphere of ac. In exercising the greatest self-denial for his country, beacon of hope renders him elastic; with this impression full will and vigour of the man are excited to the good se. It is thus that true economy exists, by enlisting most talented and best of spirits into the service of an nourable and grateful country.

is melancholy to reflect that political connexions have too en proved fatal to the unsophisticated and straightforward racter by which Naval men are distinguished, who, lost the proper sentiment of esprit du corps, have ignominiously deserted their post in the House, at which the better d higher feeling of the man ought to have restrained, to rifice at the shrine of the altar of their own hateful fishness, thereby giving no apparent cause of triumph to r enemies, and neutralising the efforts of the liberal and lightened members, who must rationally conclude that as profession appears out to seek redress on grievance , and more especially when we find such men as Hume uncontradicted in his assertion that Naval and Military men are better paid than others. In putting the most liberal construction upon such an iniquitous, at least, most absurd, observation, it must be attributed to his indulgence in error for a series of years, which has miserably blinded him to the truth. And, as if in contradiction to his assertion, we find, shortly after, in assigning salaries to the servants of the House, one is particularly struck with the following:—to Robert Collet for hanging up hats and attending to the members' cloaks, 200*l.* per annum. The half-pay of a Lieut.-Colonel is about that of Junior Captain in the Navy, and yet these officers are, according to Hume, better paid than Robert Collet, a menial servant. It is high time that the Navy should awake to remove prejudices so injurious to their just rights, and to urge for them as well as for civil servants the quid pro quo.

I am aware that higher motives than mere pecuniary considerations should attract men into the service, but still there ought to be provided sufficient to meet permanent expenses as well as the peculiar contingences of the sea service, and also a suitable provision for the decline of life. Naval men do not ask to luxuriate, they merely request sufficient to meet the demands which both the respectability of the service and good of the country require.

It is invidious to make comparisons with the sister service, suffice it to say, that ample proof has been adduced of the totally inadequate pay, both as relates to grade and the absolute expense to which the officer is exposed, and also that a more suitable distinction is required. It is difficult to convince people in general, that a Captain, Royal Navy, has the precedence of rank of Colonel, and also the Lieutenant that of a Captain, in the Army. The combined professional intelligence and responsibility of the Naval man, the constant call upon both the energies of his body and mind, demand a more suitable distinction and remuneration. It is to be hoped in the proposed amelioration of the services, that the opinion of very old officers be not referred to, as they too often turn their minds upon the pivot of their early impressions, and appear almost to forget that all in this transitory state is mutatis mutandis, but that our claims be referred to superior officers in their vigour, with some of the liberal members of the House. And, though Mr. Bannerman has made a favourable impression, let us not be upon our oars, nor, on the other hand, despise the doing of little things. The traveller, who often passes unmoved the incessant bubbles of the mountain stream, has his attention awfully fixed in their concentration to a torrent, when he observes every thing swept away with irresistible force. It is in vain to hope to move the hearts or excite the sympathies of men by ordinary reasonings who are surrounded by wealth and nursed in the lap of luxury; hence, the virtue of perseverance must be cultivated, like the great ocean, which appears to make the distant shores re-echo with its indignant voice at the obstacles opposed to its progress, and though repulsed, not discouraged, but as it were only retreating to recruit its energies until it makes an impression upon the adamantine rocks of our almost inaccessible coasts.

A SUBSCRIBER.

UNITED SERVICE CLUBS.

SIR,—The great object of a United Service Club is to enable those who belong to the same profession to meet and dine together; unless, however, some arrangement can be made with the new Military Club this object will be completely defeated.

There are now about 2400 candidates on the books of the Junior United Service Club, a great proportion of whom will go to the new Club as soon as it is placed on a secure establishment; friends and acquaintances even belonging to the same regiment will thus be separated, to the great annoyance and inconvenience of many who, from long residence in the colonies, have but a small circle of other acquaintances.

I beg, therefore, to suggest to the Committee of the Junior Club, the propriety of reducing the numbers of our Club to 1000, instead of 1500, and of proposing to the members of the new Club that they should be honorary members of ours on condition of their returning the compliment to us. We should then have two Clubs containing 1000 members each, managed upon the same plan, and consisting of the same class of persons, instead of one containing 1500, for which in the season there is not sufficient accomodation, and as it is calculated that 200 vacancies occur annually in the Junior Club, the reduction would be made without difficulty or annoyance to any one. The insertion of the above in your valuable paper will much oblige

A MEMBER OF THE J.U.S.C.

THE WAR-OFFICE LATE PAY AND PENSION WARRANT.

SIR,—A knowledge that your invaluable journal is universally read in military circles, and a conviction that, as it has always advocated the interests of the higher classes of the profession, so it will also look favourably on those of the inferior, load me to request the insertion of the following observations:

From a late warrant, it is obviously the intention of the ruling powers to confer on deserving soldiers all advantages which may accord with consistency. I venture to suggest one, which would be hailed by many a worthy veteran with delight, and which would rather diminish from, than add to the public expense. It is, to permit a cavalry soldier, having completed twenty-eight years service; and an infantry soldier, having completed twenty-five, to obtain his discharge, with pension, without delay, and without personal appearance at Chatham and Chelsea, or Kilmainham, as the case may be. The advantages to the man are obvious; the avoiding of a journey, in many cases long and unpleasant, and the facility which it would in most cases confer of procuring an honest means of adding to his pension, by enabling him to obtain some situation on the very spot of his discharge, without delay or uncertainty. To those may be added the emulation which would be excited in the minds of those serving, from seeing such a one receive his discharge on public parade, with the expression of such commendation as his commanding officer might deem him entitled to. If to this benefit were added the sculpt of a medal (the gratuity being limited as at present), in all deserving cases, the expense would be more than covered by the saving of marching allowance. I say the gratuity being limited as at present, because it is my firm conviction that there does not exist a man in the service, of conduct such as to entitle him to that honourable distinction, who would condescend to bestow one mercenary thought upon the gratuity, if the option of choice between the two were conferred on him.

I beg, Sir, that what I have written may not be supposed to arise from any feelings of dissatisfaction. From inclination, as well as from practice, I am no upholder of the powers that be; my only intention has been to call the notice of my superiors to the good old soldier.

AN OLD SERJEANT.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.

SIR,—The subject respecting the pay of Lieutenants in the Coast Guard Service being stopped, when on leave of absence, has been already ably pointed out by Numa; but, if I recollect right, he omitted to state that such was not the case with the Inspecting Commanders, when absent from their districts the particulars of which are as follow.

The Inspecting Commander, when going on leave, of course leave the Senior Lieutenant in charge of the same, who, by a recent general memorandum, is not allowed to make any visits until the Inspecting Commander has been absent fourteen days; but he must carry on all other duties, which keeps him constantly employed, without any remuneration. Now, Sir, I must tell you that every journal in the district is directed to be filled up by the Inspecting Commander with four visits during the month, viz.:—two day and two night visits. The said officer, when going on leave, contrives (as a matter of right) to fill up one or two of these prior to his going, and also contrives (if practicable to return in time) to fill up the remainder before the end of the month; hence leaving no chance to the Senior Lieutenant to benefit for having done the Inspecting Commander's duty, and generally his own also. And, admitting that the latter officer does not return in time to fill up the said visits, the specified number of "seventy" are made up by the end of the quarter, at which time he receives the whole of his pay and emoluments, the same as if he had not been absent at all. I beg to observe, Sir, that I have no intention of being at all personal to the Inspecting Commanders; but is it an unfair question to ask—Why the Lieutenants, and others in this peculiar service, should not be allowed the same indulgence as their Commanding Officers? There is no hesitation in saying the Inspecting Commanders get no more than their due (on the system as when serving on board any of His Majesty's ships); but surely the Lieutenants are correct in anticipating their rights equal with others.

No. II.—LOP-ENDIANS.—THE NAVAL SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE.

SIR,—The observations made by you in your Gazette of the 10th inst. relative to a communication of mine, read at the meeting of the British Association at Bristol, being calculated to convey an erroneous impression to the minds of your readers, by attributing that to others which does not belong to them, I trust you will allow me to inform the readers of the Naval and Military Gazette, that the "School of Naval Architecture" did not, as you have stated they did, "depute one of their body to make the announcement of a secret, upon which they have long acted in designing their ships"; that no individual except the writer knew of the paper being sent to the Association; and that I alone am responsible for the character of the communication in question. Fair play and justice, Sir, require that this should be made known to your readers, that, whatever of ridicule or of discredit may be deservedly cast on my communication, I alone should bear the imputation. But, Sir, your ement thet my paper was the "announcement of a se- upon which they have long ected, in designing their s," althor implieates me lo the dishnoourable act of ng sent to the British Association a somathing "lung d upon" by others, as a new and origioal communica- ; or it involves you, Mr. Editor, in the predicament of ng deliberately made a statement which is absolotely artanoe with truth. Again, your statemeot, Mr. Editor, reye another equelly erroneous impression. It would every one, uninformed of the facts of the case, unhesi- gly to suppose, that the members of the School of al Architecture (some, if not all of them,) had actually entrusted with the construction of ships of the Royal y. I am free, Sir, to confess, that, with the knowledge ired at the School of Naval Architecture, I did feel elf—about five or six years since, and eight or nine s after I left that Institution—unprepared to construct ip to a manner satisfactory to myself. It was at that od, and not "twenty years and more," that I was first to consider, that as some ships, when at sea, pitch much e heavily than others, the axis of rotation or the centre ravity cannot be equally well placed in all vessels. The al position of the centre of gravity in twenty modern s of the Royal Navy, may be seen in an article in the ted Service Journal for November last; and it is upon facts, that the best place for the centre of gravity has er been found by naval constructors, and that the stow- of ships has always been performed in a purely arbi- y manner, that I have unequivocally asserted, "That, ng to the mode in which they have been formed and ipped, all ships, although not lop-sided, (which they ld be, if both sides were not made exactly alike,) are rtheless lop-sided." Of the truth of this assertion I lessly challenge contradiction.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

WM. HANWOON.

III.—LOP-ENDIANS—THE NAVAL SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE.

Sir,—Admiring as I do the well-merited castigation you n time to time apply to the members of that self-elected unal, which so pertinaciously sets itself up to judge and deem (in opposition to both reason and facts), the vast rovements in the Navy introduced by our Sailor Sur- or, I cannot refrain from pointing out to you a case in ch you have (although I believe inadvertently) applied lash too extensively; I refer to your observations in your number on the absurd paper read before the British sociation at Bristol, on the lop-endedness of all our poor ay, in which you include all the late School of Naval Ar- hitecture as coadjutors in the getting up of that folly. is wonderful discovery was not thus made public, as you pear to think, for the first time, but came forth many nths ago in the United Service Journal, and was not owed to pass unnoticed, but was answered and refuted in lear and able manner in Nos. 47 and 49 of the Nautical gazine, by a Mr. Allan, a member of the same school, he lop-endian philosopher, but evidently no participator the conspiracy which you have done so much to put an. Allow me, also, to call your attention to another e in which you may do an act of justice to this gentle- n: you have in your journal attributed at different times introduction of diagrams into the reports of experi- ntal sailing to two different captains of the Navy, one of om has disclaimed it; if you will refer to the Nautical gazine for December 1835, you will find a letter from Allen (written in the previous September), which, ides a very excellent comparative statement of the Ver- and Portland's qualities as men-of-war, suggests and ommends the use of diagrams in reports as the best ans of elucidating them. I am not led thus to address from any personal interest in any of the parties con- ued, for I know none of them, but merely from a wish t justice (whether of censure or commendation) should mated to all. I am a subscriber to your journal, and old C. B.

[We have elsewhere noticed the subject of this letter. ED.]

PASSED MATES.

Sir,—In your paper of the 3d inst. I perceived the names fifty-one passed Mates, recommended by you for com- issions; but, on reading them over, I did not perceive name of my brother, Mr. W. E. Triscott, who passed in ruary, 1827, and is now Senior Mate of His Majesty's p Royal Adelaide, in Plymouth harbour. He will there- , in February next, have passed ten years, and has been ictedly afloat. As you are continually advocating the se of those who have very few advocates in a quarter re they are most wanted, I have ventured to point out you the omission, which would be gratifying to him to noticed in your next. H. F. TRISCOTT.

own Life Assurance Company, 33, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars. 16th Sept. 1836.

[We have heard that some difficulty was experienced in ing the return in question, which we are not surprised at, when it is considered that changes are continually occurring. As Mr. Triscott appears to have been constantly employed, however, it is strange that his name should be omitted.—ED.]

THE SURVIVORS OF THE ROYAL GEORGE.

Sir,—In your paper of September 3d, wherein you give an interesting notice of Admiral Sir P. C. H. Durham, you have stated your belief that he is the only surviving person who was on board the Royal George at the time of her melancholy loss. I deem it right to inform you that there is another officer, Captain John Crispo, R.N., now residing at Caen, who was one of the four fortunate Midshipmen saved from that ship. He was signal Midshipman of her at the time, and on this trying occasion, when the ship was sinking jumped overboard, from one of the ports, and after being an hour in the water was picked up by one of the boat's crew and conveyed on board the Britannia, then bearing the flag of Admiral Barrington. A similar mistake to your own, in Mr. Deane's pamphlet of his Diving Experiments, has been already corrected on Captain Crispo's authority.

REPLY FROM CINCINNATUS TO PHILO-NUMA.

Sir,—While anything was calculated to throw light, or otherwise, on my first letter, it became my study to observe silence, because the shafts of malice and detraction were aimed at a truly just, honourable, and exalted character—I mean the present head of the Coast Guard Service in this country (Ireland); and I feel hereby witnessed, in common with every reader of your valuable Journal, a satisfactory and publicly triumphant vindication of this high officer, I again beg to resume the subject of the Coast Guard Service, as I am incited thereto particularly by the remarks of Philo-Numa.

Allow me to premise, that favour and affection I want not, and if I had the least suspicion of error being connected with my system, I should be the first to expose it. Fears I give to the wind, for the positive certainty of the goodness of my cause forbids the existence of fears; and as to threats, I utterly despise them. Truth, powerful truth, shall found the basis of my arguments, and truth must ultimately be victorious; from the ordeal Numa and Philo-Numa have subjected her, she will come forth surpassingly lovely, wax stronger and stronger, shine brighter and brighter, till all remaining attempts at calumny and falsity, and all the vituperations of interested motives and sinister designs, shall be entirely destroyed.

Philo-Numa commences by stating, that my letter is anything but a reply in the opinion of Naval Chief Officers. I answer, to a few it may be so; but, Sir, does your correspondent not exhibit great symptoms of weakness in inferring public sentiment from that of an interested party? Passing by in what light these few may look on my letters, let me be answered in what light a disinterested and discriminating community consider them?

But again P. N. states I wish to prop up a system created by borough corruption in the worst of borough-mongering times. Now, without discussing in what times the present well-organised plan of the Coast Guard establishment was formed, or to what that establishment was indebted for its origin, I reply P. N. has unluckily mistaken my desire. It is not to "prop up" a system, for the system appears to need no props—it stands quite secure, and seems altogether regardless, and most provokingly reckless, of all attempts at undermining it, or knocking it down; but my wish is to defend merit in the Coast Guard Service, when it appears either in a Civilian or a Naval Chief Officer, and would I not be a bad man if, conscious of existing merit, I should endeavour to conceal it, especially when such gross and unfounded mis-statements are made by the opponents of such officers? Can this be propping up a corrupt system? Can preserving from the rude attack of unthinking opponents be corrupt conduct? Can sheltering characters from the blasts of falsity be with propriety called a corrupt system? Nay, is it not laying the axe to the root of corruption? And is not the endeavour to obtain equal indulgence and encouragement to all classes of H. M.'s subjects, the very best calculated to eradicate corruption!

Further, P. N. asks, "who are the persons this writer comes forward to defend? Will he tell us their names, or must I do it?" And then follows a threat that if I persevere commenting on Numa, nine cases out of ten, with every point and particular relating to each names, will be published.

I answer, the persons I defend are the most aggrieved, the most hardly dealt with, and the most severely treated of any of H. M.'s subjects. The Civilian Chief Officers of the Coast Guard throughout the United Kingdom are the men whose cases I advocate, their names are to be found in the Directories of this and the sister country; and their privations, I beg leave to define more particularly than I did in my last; and let their names be published—their characters be pried into with the most hawk-eyed attention—let their conduct be examined by the closest criticism, and my statement will be strengthened by the assertion.

First—Too many years the Civilian Chief Officer has seen yearly promotion extended to the Naval Chief Officer, but none to himself, and why?—merely because he is a Civilian!

The Civilian may urge youth spent, blood shed, and constitution shattered, in defence of his country; yet, with all such recommendations, there is no promotion, because he is styled Civilian!

He may plead smuggling suppressed at the various stations he has served at, services rendered in the Coast Guard, and protection afforded to the mercantile community; yet such potent persuasion is of no avail. He may state that the sabbath-day, a day of rest to all others is the Customs or Excise for the last sixteen years, has been none to him, and that all others are eligible, and obtain promotion among the meritorious.

He may go forth in the forlorn hope to succour and to save the drowning mariner; if he perish in the magnanimous attempt, both his name and memory alike fade and are forgotten; if he succeed, a medal, or vote of thanks, speak the heroic daring,—but, alas! the performance of these things brings no promotion.

Humble as I am, and by no means equal to many of my brother Civilian Chief Officers, yet have I twice merited the medal; and after a period of above 20 years in the Navy and Coast Guard, still the only distinction between me and the humblest boatman I command is, that I receive elevenpence per day more them them?—the Civilian Chief Officer receives per day, 3s. 8½d.; the Boatman do. do. 2s. 9½d. The Chief Officer receives yearly, as salary, 13*l.* odd, the Boatman, 4*l.* odd, in either case; but house-rent is the same. The Naval Chief Officer, agreeable to standing in the Navy, receives compensation-money from 7s. to 5s. per day. Now, if we take the medium, the Lieutenant's pay per diem will be, from Customs—

|---|---|---|
| Compensation, per day | 6 | 0 |
| Coast Guard, per day | 4 | 0 |
| From the Customs, Naval Chief Officer's pay daily | 10 | 0 |

Here we see one class of officers invested with the same command, having precisely the same duty to perform, equally responsible for all matters under their immediate superintendence, but one party receiving 10s. a-day, the other something more than a third; yet those in receipt of the greater sum calling for more, yea, an increase almost double their present competency, and (oh, shame! O tempora! O mores!") calling on government to put away the latter from the service. How forcibly am I reminded of the dissatisfied expression of Haman, with all his grandeur and opulence—"All this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate." Yes, it appears, with all the income of the Naval Chief Officers, he wants more, and he wants also—what? Why, a district! Does he want nothing else? Yes; their respected and valuable superiors, the Inspecting Commanders, are not to their view; they would like to serve under Post Captains as well as under them. Perhaps, if the truth were known, the "Centurion" thinks as little of his Inspecting Commander on one hand, as he does of the Civilian on the other hand; and, in fact, he attacks those that are quietly pursuing their way, and "living and letting live."

A retired Naval Officer, resident in this town, was during the week recognised and accosted by a fisherman, belonging to one of the French fishing-boats at present in our bay. An important occurrence in the early part of the Frenchman's life, in which the officer referred to was a party, had so deeply impressed his appearance on the mind of the Frenchman, that he at once recognised him. The circumstance referred to is, that during the war between the two countries, a French privateer was about to attack a British vessel, which was at the time unprepared for the assault, and which, as the only resource, run the Frenchman down. This having been done, humanity prompted the rescue of the crew from a watery grave. One of them was the Frenchman alluded to, then a boy; and having received some indulgences from our sailor, retained a faithful recollection of him. Their present meeting has been one of mutual gratification, and over their cups they have fought their battles over again.—Berwick Advertiser.

Admiral Duncan.—Admiral Duncan's address to the officers who came on board his ship for instructions, previous to the engagement with Admiral de Winter, was both laconic and humourous:—"Gentlemen, you see a severe Winter approaching, I have only to advise you to keep up a good fire."

A recruit, on his passage to Quebec on board a ship of war, was complaining bitterly to an Irish sailor during a storm of the danger they were in of foundering and being lost. "Never fear, my hearty," said the tar, "we will have our revenge, for if the ship founders, the Captain will be tried for it by Court-Martial when we arrive at Quebec.

We have received the second series of the papers of " Lycurgus," and will take them into consideration.—It is impossible for us to answer the question of " Navy Blue," whether Captain —— is a retreated claimant of the Guelphic Order; and, in respect to the other inquiry, we can only say that we have not had time to read attentively the Naval Novels, &c., he refers to. Other measures are in preparation to defeat the Pirate.—" Miles" has our thanks, though at present we refrain from publishing his letter, as we know Mr. C. has repeatedly denied any knowledge of the party; but we will inquire at the Horse Guards.—We shall attend to the suggestions of " Inquirer " from Deptford.—A Subscriber, who asks "whether a vessel at sea can be steered by the working of the sails only, the rudder being lost," is informed that it may be partially, but not wholly so; there is always a danger of brouching to, as was the case with the Pique, *when it was obliged to be resorted to after the loss of two temporary rudders.—Will "*Corineus" send us the receipt; the re-payment being disputed.—We have every wish to oblige the writer at Castlewellan, and the great length of his letter has alone delayed its insertion.—We have repeatedly stated by letter that we cannot assist a " Post Captain" *in his "family dilemma;" he must act according to his own judgment. # Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17 1836.

As we were going to Press, we received by Express an account of the Revolution in Portugal, which will be found in another column.

The most gratifying return for our arduous labours is to find that they have influence with the United Service; and it is, therefore, with particular satisfaction that we insert a letter from an esteemed correspondent, one of our earliest subscribers, Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin, presenting one hundred pounds in aid of the funds for building the Naval School. This noble example to the profession, so promptly made, and in answer, as the gallant old Officer states, to our appeal of the 27th ultimo, will, we trust, have its effect upon all those members who have the means of contributing to so praiseworthy an object as securing for the children of their less fortunate brother officers that inestimable gift, a good education. The system adopted at this School, the high reputation of the Master, and the proficiency which many of the Pupils have already shown, warrant us in ranking this establishment second to none in the kingdom for affording a first-rate, sound, and useful education; and it is folly to assert that other Schools, where board and tuition are charged at twenty pounds a-year, are at all comparable with this:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

"Cheltenham, 7th Sept., 1836.

"Mr. Editor,—I should sooner have replied to your call for a subscription to the intended building for a Naval School, but that my pocket has been empty. The moment my half-pay is received you shall have a remittance for 100*l.* on Messrs. Coutts and Co.*

* By a subsequent communication we have received from the gallant Admiral £100, and handed it over to the Committee of the Royal Naval School. We understand this to be the second hundred pounds subscribed by Sir Isaac Coffin to this Institution.—Ed.

"When Vice-President of the Institution, thinking the nobility of this country held in grateful remembrance the aid afforded them last war in retaining their titles and estates by the Naval force, I addressed a letter to all the Dukes in England and Scotland, soliciting their kind attention to the Institution. Not one of these potent nobles condescended to notice my application except the Duke of Bedford, who sent me fifty guineas. Being personally acquainted with the Dukes of Norfolk, Cleveland, and Northumberland, I applied a second time, asking relief for the orphans of us poor mariners. No answer followed, and I gave up the plan of obtaining assistance from those who, while imminent danger was staring them in the face, were incessantly thanking in Parliament the Navy for their heroic deeds, and seem now to have forgot altogether that we were nearly invaded by one of the ablest Generals of the age, who, had he once landed his Army, would have been in London and Westminster in a week, plundering both; and though he might have been eventually subdued, yet, in the mean time, every man acquainted with military affairs knows what would have happened. Now, who prevented this disaster? The Navy alone, under Nelson, Sir Sydney Smith, and the immortal Owen,—an called by the seamen from commanding L'Immortalité. The Channel force once subdued, England would soon have been a prey to the invaders; but we had then a fine Board of Admiralty under Earl Spencer and the heroic Earl St. Vincent, who singled out officers adequate to the performance of the most arduous duties. And here I would advise the nobility and gentry of the United Kingdom to follow the example of our benevolent King; he is a father to the Navy, and knows its value well. He has never blasted our fair fame by calling us a dead weight, as a certain chattering Scot has done in the House of Commons, whose origin is as obscure as Shem who came out of Noah's Ark.

"It may be asked why I stand forth as the champion of the British Navy, when there are so many others, who have superior claims, silent. I humbly add, having 63 years been in the service, (10 of which, from 1773 to 1783, I was constantly employed,) having served under the following Admirals:—John Montagu, Edwards, Arbuthnot, Lord Graves, Digby, Rodney, Hood, Rowley, Roddam, Cosby, Sir P. Parker, H. Cotton, Sir T. Wallace, Sawyer, and Hughes, and being nearly at the head of the list of Admirals, give me a right to advocate the interest of the service in which I have had such good fortune. Exploits I have none to boast of. My associates, Nelson, Exmouth, and Collingwood, would testify my unabated zeal for the service were they now living. Those who remember me at Lisbon, Corsica, Minorca, Halifax, and Sheerness, will, I trust, give me credit for unabated activity. When my flag was up at Portsmouth for four years, I did my best under my invaluable friend, the late Sir George Montagu, whose father brought me into the service. I have endeavoured to follow the example they set me. Finally, before I am placed under the sod, I shall endeavour to do all in my power to advance the interests of the Naval School.

"I am, Sir, your humble Servant

"Isaac Coffin, Admiral."

We are not surprised to find that the praiseworthy exertions of the gallant Admiral, and his appeal to the nobility, have been unsuccessful. Did ever the hearts of Englishmen respond to the rights or wrongs of the Navy, except when the enemy was at the door! This is an odium under which the people of these realms have laboured time out of mind. They are ready enough to admire and extol the daring skill and undaunted courage which serve to guard their shores unpolluted by the tread of an enemy; but all this is forgotten in Peace, and then the claims of those who in perilled life and limb for their security—who toiled whilst they slept, are treated as a dead weight upon the nation, and the miserable pittance, barely sufficient to keep life and soul together, is scrutinized and doled out ungraciously from year to year. Were it not that the wisdom of our ancestors, and the munificence of a Prince who knew the value of the British sailor, and appropriated Greenwich Hospital for his use, we doubt whether the wounded Tar would have had an asylum; and even then he was maintained by the extorted contributions of the Mariners of England, whilst the princely revenue (that of the Rebel Lords), with which the establishment was endowed, was appropriated by thousands per annum upon a host of Civilians, in the shape of Commissioners, Treasurers, Auditors, &c., who, whatever their claims might have been upon the nation for services performed, had none whatever upon the fund of the seamen.

Nearly a century ago, when the fear of invasion was strong upon the people of England, and the awkward circumstance of a French Fleet riding in the Channel too frequently occurred, they landsmen and encouraged the sailors; but when Hawke had gained his memorable victory in Quiberon Bay in 1759, the French Fleet being now put hors de combat or annihilated for a time, and all fear of invasion at an end, it was then a Sailor of the Fleet addressed this pithy distich to his countrymen on shore—

"Ere we did bang Monsieur Conflans
You sent us beef and beer,
But now the Fleet have nought to eat,
Since you have nought to fear;"

by which we learn that the indulgences of free beef and beer were withdrawn as soon as our Tars had demolished the French Fleet.

We trust, however, that we shall arrive at a better era. The Government has lately displayed an intention of doing justice to British Seamen and the British Navy, spite of the economists; and, if we mistake not, a storm is gradually brewing around us, when it will once more become incumbent upon this country to put forth its greatest energies, if we would not succumb to powers more jealous of our prosperity than the present age has witnessed. It is to our Army and Navy that all eyes will then be turned: upon their courage and fidelity must the hopes and security of the nation rely.

"Then don't neglect the hardy Tar, be mindful of his merit,
And when again you're plunged in war, he'll show his darling spirit."

But at least assist him in his praiseworthy endeavour to provide for the education of his children. We trust this appeal, backed by the munificent donation of Sir Isaac Coffin, will not be made in vain, and that those who are blessed with unbounded wealth may be induced to appropriate some portion of their overflowings for the benefit of those who, whenever the call is made to face the foes of old England, at home or abroad, will never be called on in vain.

Some of our friends in the Cavalry have been surprised at our not advocating their relief from India, as the 11th and 13th Light Dragoons have been abroad since 1819. We have merely to remark, that in former numbers of this paper we stated the claim to an early relief which those regiments had; but, we must also observe, that of four Cavalry regiments serve abroad, and those four are in India, that when relieved there is not the slightest chance of their being sent to India again during the present century, and that after their Indian tour is up they bid farewell to foreign service, except in the event of a war. The case is very different with the Infantry. For instance, the 17th regiment, which served full twenty years in India, was sent back after being five years only at home, and that by the disagreeable and often dangerous route of New South Wales. It is much feared that part of that corps has been lost on the passage to Bombay through Torres Straits.

In confirmation of the statements we have made during the last six months, regarding the great length of service assigned to the Regiments of His Majesty in India, and the inequality of numbers composing the Depots of those regiments and the Depots for Corps serving out of India, we heve only helf as loeg a period of foreign service to perform, we would earnestly entreat attention to the following Comparative Table of the Length of Service and Numbers serving Abroad of the Regiments in India and in other Foreign Stations. By tbo admission of the Quartermaster-General, the service of a regiment in India is about twenty years, more or less, and the service of regiments abroad, oot in India, ten years, more or less.

W. are not separately accounted for, as they have only 1 Company at home, and proceed to India.The 10 Years' Service is only nominal, as two-fifths of the whole are at home during that period. |

By the foregoing table it is obvious how hard is the lot of 20,000, soldiers now serving in Iedia, eompared with that of tbeir eomrades serving elsewhere. It meet strika the leest observant, thet the system hithorto pursued is inconsisteot with justica, and wo may perhaps add humanity. Let us examine tho table. We observo in tha first placo, that the regiments io India serva twenty yeers, ie the other foreign stations ten years, and at home five years. We cae not but ha struck with tha vast advaetage of half length of servico enjoyed by the regiment out of India, and the double length of servico suffered by tha regiment in India. We also uotice tho very brief period of home service. But the disadvantage ueder wbicb tbe regimonts in Iodia labour does not end with merely double foreign service; wa soe that 833 soldiers perform this long service of twenty years, and that only ten remain at home as a depot. On the other hand we observe, that of the regiments serving elsewhere ten years, 581 soldiers are abroad and 254 at home! In fact, the regiments in India have, it may be said, all the effectivrs in that country, while the regiments out of India have, it may be said, a second battalion, of two-fifths of the regiment, always at home.

We wish to make this comparative view clear to our non-military readers, or we should feel it insulting to the Army to dwell thus minutely on a tabular statement. He thut runs may read it, and as readily comprehend as read it. We have been urged by countless correspondents to lay the case of the Indian regiments temperately and most respectfully before the proper authorities. We have endeavoured to meet the wishes of our friends in India, and of their relatives and connexions in this country; and in advocating an early relief for tho 45th, 54th, and 16th Regiments, which have been in the baleful climate of India since 1819, we have endeavoured to draw the attention of the Head of the Army to the subject without venturing, except on ona occasion inadvertently, to point out the regiments by which their relief may be effected. We are well aware that these arrangements must depend on matters unknowa to any jouroalist, and we therefore leave them to Lord Hill and His Most Gracious Majesty.

There is a report current among the Military concerned, that the depots of regiments at Ceylon, the Cape, and the Mauritius are to join the service companies abroad. We confess that a more judicious arrangement could not be made, as it would enable Governaent to withdraw an entire regiment from Ceylon, aad another from Mauritius, while the increase of forco at the Cape would be effected without inconvenience or interruption to the other reliefs. It has at all times struck us as a bad arrangement to leave four coompany depots at home for regiments at the Cape and eastward of it, particularly at Ceylon, which is only a few miles distant from the Continent of India, where complete regiments serve. It has led to great discontent among the suldiers in India, that the advantages of ten years' less service, and four companies constantly at home, should be enjoyed by the regiments in Ceylon, while those in India served ten years longer and had only one skeleton company at home recruiting. We shall be truly glad to learn that the report is as true as it is general. In the event of the depots going abroad, the 78th from Ceylon and the 99th from the Mauritius will probably be tbo regiments recalled to Eeglaed.

We hava received several communications upon the subject of the Return, published in our Gazette of the 27th ultimo, of all Mates and Midshipmen who had passed their examination for Lieutenants previoes to the 1st of January, 1835, and also adverting to tho observations which we made relativo to thut Roturn in the succeeding number.

It eppears that many of the gentlemen, whose names are stated as actually serving at the date when this document was ordered, have, from various causes, bean out of the service for a considerable period, and our correspondent Vigil particularly eotices the case of Mr. Coppioger, who, although set down as having passed nearly tweety years ago, has not actually served full two years in the Navy since 1817, when he passed his ex amination. We recollect offering some observa tions on this same case some time since, and w then remarked that those who have continued i the service should (as they doubtless will) hav the preference when their claims for promotio are brought under the consideration of the Fir Lord, for it may, and often does, happen, as in th case under review, that the longest passed Ma has not the longest service, and therefore his clai can only be admitted in proportion to his term actual service performed, which is readily asco tained at the Admiralty, where every officer service is noted.

One of our correspondents suggests that th names of all passed Midshipmen should be pu lished in the Navy List, distinguishing those a tually serving by the number of their ship, in t same manner as other officers. This has been fr quently proposed, but as Mates have unfortunate no half-pay, and when unemployed are not in fu recognised as belonging to the service, we fe there are difficulties in the way of accomplishi it not easily overcome. As, however, the produ tion of the Return is now annually called for, w would suggest that, on the next occasion, th motion may be shaped so as to show the length service, as well as the length of time, since the of passing, by which means the public may arri at something like the merits of each case; althou even then, good conduct and high testimonials, gether with skill in the profession, or gall acts, should always take precedence of long s vice alone. As the Return is now framed, cannot, after very mature consideration, attach it any great value, as there are doubtless ma scores of names comprehended in it under same circumstances as Mr. Coppinger's and oth pointed out by our correspondents.

We are always ready to do justice to any pa aggrieved, and we therefore insert a communi tion from Mr. Henwood just as we received lettiag the facts speak for themselves. We ha no quarrel with the gentlemen of the Naval Sch of Architecture: our only reason for showing the pretensions of the few who have taken pro nent parts in writing and speaking against an i provement which every one else admits, is, th we firmly belie ve they cannot be blind to the su riority of the new system, and therefore they liable to the charge of disingenuousness, and vainly endeavouring, by misrepresentations other unfair means, to bring into disreputa an i provement they had not the talent or genius deviso; or else they are open to the charge of waot of sufficient knowledge of the art they p fess to perceive and appreciate such improveme They are, in fact, either prejudiced or incapa judges, and therefore legitimate objects animadversioa, more particularly when they o their schemes and suggestions to the public, court notoriety for their opinions aad stateme by every means in their power.

As Mr. Henwood undertakes the sole respo bility of the discovery he haa announced, it n not be fair to father the term "Lop-Eudian" u the School, more particularly as thare seems t a strong doubt respecting tha soundness of proposition which is denied by another mem and was questioned, we are informed, at the Bri meeting. In this doubt, we must confess, we cur, for it appears to us that as often as the face of the sea shifts its form, so often must Henwood's theory require modification. But after all it amounts to nothing; and we are sorry that gentleman suffers any annoyance by idle persons calling out "Lop" after him in the Dock-yard. As he has made use of such a ridiculous word to exemplify his meaning, in a paper addressed to a meeting of Philosophers, capable of comprehending the most abstruse of those terms so prodigally used by the School heretofore in demonstrating their propositions, he must be patient for a while and it will probably be forgotten.

Whilst upon this subject we shall take occasion to make a few observations respecting another Lecture delivered at the meeting by a member of the School, upon the necessity of securing certain preliminaries and observances with ships destined to compete in sailing, &c. So fully do we admit the truth of Mr. Chatfield's observations, that we have many times reiterated the same thing, and pointed out, that in this respect Captain Symonds's ships are always under disadvantage in their trials, being of greater weight, and, in most cases, having less spread of canvas. He is in error, however, in asserting that no means are taken to measure the inclination of each ship, and that the reports of that and other matters are vague and indefinite; and he was not justified in making such a statement, and throwing odium upon the officers who order or conduct these experiments. The best means available are always used; the inclination is noted by the pendulum, and the distance carefully measured by subtending angles. It is very easy to talk about noting the oscillations, &c.; but if Mr. Chatfield will produce an instrument capable of ascertaining these, or an anemometer or wind-gauge that will specify the force of the wind upon a given surface, in situations where it is probable, owing to the sails being set to catch every breeze, no space with a free current of air can be appropriated; if this gentleman or any other will show means of effecting these things, which every one admits are necessary to secure correct results, he will be more profitably employed than taking a journey to Bristol to enlighten a scientific meeting by repeating admitted truths which they were probably better informed of than himself. Let this gentleman devote his talents to devising something new; for retailing second-hand ideas, or adopting palpable plagiaries, of which he has been frequently accused, will bring him no credit. Neither is it good taste in a subordinate to canvas the conduct of the Admiralty in ordering, or Sir Charles Paget in conducting, the operations of the squadron, and more particularly in making the statement we have alluded to above (which is not warranted by the fact) in a public Lecture. We hold it our duty to discourage all such acts of insubordination, whether in the Navy itself, or in any department connected therewith. Things will come to a pretty pass when Midshipmen hold forth upon the conduct of the Captain in the management or discipline of his ship; and it is a novelty to see such things permitted or tolerated in any public department under the Crown.

In the New Constitution of Spain there is one article, we think it is the 10th, which we deem to be particularly entitled to commendation, and which, could it but be adopted by our Government, would materially tend to secure for the old and really meritorious Officers of our Army and Navy that justice and due consideration for long and gallant services which we are grieved to know they have heretofore, with too much reason, complained of being denied to them.

The article of which we speak declares, that "no Member of the Cortes shall accept nor solicit, either directly or indirectly, for himself or for any other person, any place or appointment of profit or honour, of any kind or sort whatsoever, upon pain of instantly forfeiting his situation as a Member."

Were this salutary regulation established with us, even in some modified form, as regards the Members of both our Houses of Parliament, we are confident that the Ministers would rejoice equally with ourselves, as it would at once free them of those pressing demands upon their patronage which they cannot get rid of, and which in too many instances compel them to bestow the appointments, that may be at their disposal, upon men without any sort of claims or pretensions to their country's protection, to the exclusion of those whose merits have been acknowledged, and who, but for this improper influence, they would have delighted to have rewarded. To every honourable and high-minded statesman it must afford tenfold satisfaction to bestow the patronage of his office upon really deserving individuals than upon men whose only claim to consideration arises from being recommended to some Minister's notice by political influence.

Although we have not an acknowledged rule, similar to this excellent article in the Spanish Constitution, yet it would appear that there is a statute on record, but now unhappily by the corruption of latter ages grown obsolete, which declares expressly, not only that offices shall not be given away by favour, but also "that every candidate seeking an appointment through PRIVATE INFLUENCE shall, for that reason ALONE be held incompetent to fill it." This statute, Lord Coke has said, "ought to be written in letters of gold, and ever rigidly executed;" and though it has been departed from in too many instances in times past, yet, in those which are to come, under a liberal, just, and reforming Administration, we will hope and believe that it will be most duly regarded.

The letter of Qui Hi, which appears in our paper of this day, deserves attention. With every good will towards Captain Grindlay, we are at a loss to understand how he, at the eleventh hour, can pretend to have lent any assistance to the important measure of Steam Communication with India. Great praise is due to the Provisional Committee for perseverance and ability; Mr. Waghorn is also entitled to public commendation; and as we are in possession of most of the facts in this business, and intend to publish some, we shall take care that none but the right parties have credit for real and good services.

We have frequently reflected on the anomaly of members of the United Service disregarding the many occasions where improvements are practicable in their own profession, and devoting the whole force of their talents to effect some amendment in another. Thus we find a Naval officer for many years occupied in bringing to perfection a safety carriage, or an apparatus by which a runaway horse may be turned adrift from a gig; whilst an Artillery officer is fully engaged in devising means for concentrating a ship's broadside; or a barrister exhausting his ingenuity upon patent fids for topmasts. It would doubtless be more beneficial to the three professions to which these individuals belong, if they devoted their talents to improvements therein; but there seems to be an indigenous impression in the human breast, that the members of a particular profession overlook the amendments which are palpable, or grow used to things as they are from habit, and therefore that others are the first to perceive what is faulty, and to suggest improvements.

To us it has always appeared, that if every officer, possessed of a mechanical turn, would in the first place take a survey of the state of his own profession, so that the proverb of the "cobler to his last" was verified; if the soldier would consider the various matters connected with the branches of the Army, horse, foot, and artillery, pontoons and fortifications, there might be found plenty of room for the most active mind, in devising better and cheaper means of effecting desired purposes. The seaman, on the other hand, has larger scope for his talents; for we hold, that instead of wasting his genius on other pursuits, there is almost an unlimited pace for action, when we take a ship, and consider her construction, equipment, steering, navigating, disciplining, and manœuvring, all which are, from first to last, fair and legitimate objects for the seaman's pursuit, and infinitely better performed by him than others, when the skill and genius necessary for its accomplishment is possessed by such and properly directed, of which we have a living example in the case of the present Surveyor of the Navy. As regards the pursuits of the counsellor we shall say nothing, the law we presume is perfect, and therefore its professors may follow what course they think proper for what we care.

We have been led into this train of thinking by reading some observations of Mercator, the indefatigable contributor to the Nautical Magazine (whom we take to be Mr. Ballingall), in the last number of that periodical. This gentleman, who professes to be a merchant sailor, brings forward a proposal for appointing an officer, to be called the "Superintendent of Improvements," unto whose cognisance the designs and models of projectors are in the first place to be brought, in order to judge whether they be worthy of consideration or trial. We may hereafter give some opinion on this point, but at present shall observe, that the selection, which Mercator has made in exemplification of his argument, completely verifies our preceding remarks, for it is evident he knows nothing of the merits or demerits of the late Capt. Marshall's gun-carriage. We believe the reason that the carriage was not more generally adopted was, first, that being only suited to those guns whose chase (that is the length from the trunnions to the muzzle ring) afforded space for recoils, it was not available for short guns, and therefore for general purposes; and secondly, that it was expensive in the construction, whilst vast numbers of the old kind were in store in the arsenals.

We consider Marshall's carriage to be the best for long guns, that is guns of 9 feet or 9 feet 6 inches, affording greater facility for training, elevating, or depressing, and embracing a larger angle in all these operations,—whilst that invented by Sir Thomas Hardy, and called after that gallant officer's name, is undoubtedly the best adapted to short guns and carronades. Now, if this be admitted, the whole reasoning about Marshall's carriage with which Mercator has exemplified his subject, falls to the ground, and shows us that, whilst labouring to improve others, on a point unconnected with his immediate pursuits, he is misinformed himself. The fact is, a gun-carriage for general purposes is still a desideratum, and when the various sorts of cannon in use are considered, perhaps impossible to accomplish. At all events it has for many years engaged the attention of some of the most distinguished officers in the service. We would advise Mercator, therefore, to "stick to his last;" he has made some very excellent suggestions for the improvement of our mercantile marine, and every one will admit there is scope enough to employ him, and many more, upon that interesting subject.

The Duke of Bedford and the Marquis of Abercorn have subscribed 100l. each for the erection of a monument in Scotland to the memory of the late Duke of Gordon. The Earl of Kintore and the Earl of Dalhousie have subscribed 50l. each for the same object.

On Wednesday week died at his house, in Greenwich, Mr. John Pond, F. R. S., a Corresponding Member of the French Institute, and an Honorary Member of most of the Astronomical Societies in Europe. During a period of nearly twenty-five years Mr. P. filled the important office of Astronomer-Royal, from which a hopeless state of ill health obliged him last autumn to retire.

The Persian Princes arrived at Brussels on the 9th, en route to Constantinople. They were accompanied by an interpreter, Mr. J. B. Fraser, and his lady, who intend to proceed with them to Persia.

Sir W. Molesworth has declared his intention to retire from the representation of East Cornwall, in the event of a dissolution of Parliament; and Mr. R. Currie, the backer, has come forward on radical principles for the representation of Northampton when a vacancy occurs. The Hon. Randall Plunkett will, it is alleged, come forward for Dublin city.

The Duke of Brunswick, in consideration of the situation of the family of Mrs. Graham under the circumstances of the late calamity, has munificently presented her with 100l.

According to the Messager, King Otho of Greece is about to visit Paris with his father the King of Bavaria.

After spending a fortnight in the French capital he is to come to London, and embark from England on his return to Athens. His Bavarian Majesty is to pass a part of the winter in Italy.

The sinecure place in the Post Office, given by the Journals to Mr. Duncombe, has long since been abolished. Mr. Stanhope, recently dead, who last held it, retired some years ago on a pension.

A few days ago Sir John Nicholl, his daughter, and grand-daughter, were taking an airing on horseback at Merthyr-mawr, when the pony, on which the younger lady rode suddenly took fright. The child lost her seat, and was thrown forward, but her riding-habit caught the horns of the saddle, and she was suspended with her head nearly touching the ground. The animal proceeded at its utmost speed, kicking at her most fearfully, three times round a field of about ten acres, when the habit gave way, and she was hurled to the ground. She was picked up insensible, but hopes are entertained of her recovery. At the time the pony was running away with the child, the horse upon which Miss Nicholl rode got unmanageable, and succeeded in throwing her off. She fell and dislocated her shoulder.

An elopement took place some days since from Southsea. The lady, who is of English birth, is the wife of Major Massow, an officer in the Hanoverian service: and the companion of her flight, Lieut. F. Campbell, R. M., a widower. The husband traced Madame Massow to a lodging in Regent-street, where he discovered her in company with Lieut. Campbell, with whom she was there residing. The nature of the interview may be well imagined; it ended with Major Massow calling upon Lieut. Campbell to meet him in the field; it was agreed that they should meet at Dover, which they did accordingly on Saturday last. Mr. White, of Newbury, was the second of Major M., and Lieut. March, a brother officer, the second of Lieut. Campbell. Upon the signal to fire Lieut. C. discharged his pistol in the air; upon which Major Massow, dropping that which he held, advanced towards Lieut. C., and told him that the respect he bore his father induced him to refrain from firing at him; adding, that neither his (Lieut. C.'s) death, nor filty such, could atone for the deep injury he had sustained, or restore his lost peace of mind. Madame M. is 24, Major M. about 45, years of age.

In consequence of the hill for the regulation of the Post Office having been thrown out last session, it is in contemplation to remove Colonel Maberly from the Board of Customs to the Secretaryship of the Post Office, vacant by the death of Sir Francis Freeling. The vacant seat in the Customs has been offered to Sir H. Freeling.

It is in contemplation to erect a statue in honour of the Duke of Wellington, on the Surrey side of London Bridge. The site named for this new metropolitan ornament is the junction of Duke and Wellington-streets.

Ole Bull, Badiali, Curioni, and Miss Bruce, have just returned from a most successful tour in the Western counties; during their journey their average receipts have been 450*l.* a week.

General Sebastiani is expected on the 1st of next month to resume his duties in London. Lord Granville returns to Paris about the same time.

The Earl of Kenmare is, on his return from Switzerland, to be invested with the Order of St. Patrick, vacant by the decease of the Earl of Fingal.

Lord and Lady Frederick Fitzclarence and family left Eaton Square on Monday for his Lordship's sporting seat on the borders, thence they will pay a visit to the Earl of Glasgow, in Renfrewshire. It is still expected that his Lordship will have the command of the Dublin district, with the rank of Brigadier-General.

Sir Robert Peel, accompanied by his Lady, left Norris Castle in the Isle of Wight, on Tuesday, for Southampton; and in the afternoon they embarked for the Continent.

Miss Zouch, whose case excited so much attention some time since, applied to the Board of Guardians of St. George's parish, Hanover Square, to be passed home to Ireland. It appears that she has latterly been reduced to the utmost distress, all her noble relatives having refused to do anything further for her. The Board said that they could only treat the case in the ordinary manner, and directed the regular order of removal to be made out. Miss Zouch, who at one time kept her carriage and lived in great splendour, will now be taken back to Ireland in the vessel allotted for the use of paupers under the new system.

Clubs.—The Carlton has taken Wright's Hotel in Dover-st. until the necessary repairs in their house are completed. The Athenæum occupy the St. James's Hotel, for a similar purpose. The repairs of the Junior United Service are nearly finished. The Alliance are in treaty for Mr. Blicke's splendid mansion, Waterloo Place. Brookes's is undergoing considerable embellishment. The Wyndham remove into its new house (late the Duke of Athol's) before Christmas. The Windsor is defunct.

Suicides.—The numerous suicides which have taken place in the different garrisons in Paris, have caused meetings to be held among the officers in order to inquire into the cause. In the prosecution of these inquiries it has been proved, that the greater number of these voluntary victims have been young men of good character, some even having been proposed for the Legion of Honour, and their pecuniary circumstances perfectly satisfactory.

It is with deep regret we notice the death of Dr. Henry, of Manchester, whose many and important chemical discoveries had raised his name high among his fellow-townsmen. The excitement and hurry of the Bristol Meeting, acting upon a feeble frame, appear to have over-wasted his mental powers, and to have hurried him to the melancholy act by which his life was terminated.

British Auxiliary Legion.—San Sebastian, Sept. 8.—Col. Kinlock, 1st Lancers, is appointed Brigadier-General, by general order dated yesterday; but as the strength of the cavalry is reduced to little more than three squadrons, the services of the Brigadier-General are, by the same order, dispensed with; and that officer is recommended for the gratuity of one-half of the amount of his pay from the time he served as Colonel, according to the 4th and 8th articles of the conditions of service. By general order of the above date Col. Fitzgerald, commanding the 2nd Brigade, is appointed a Brigadier-General. The Diligent transport will sail this afternoon for England. Col. Considine, late Military Secretary to General Evans, will take his passage in her. That officer will be a very great loss to the Legion, both in his public and private capacity. He is succeeded by Major Herman, who performed most efficiently the duties of Military Secretary during Col. Coosidine's absence in England on account of his wounds received on the glorious 5th of May, and who is also an excellent officer.

The Court.

The King will go to St. James's on Wednesday, for the purpose of holding a Privy Council.

Prince George of Cumberland.—Should the eye-sight of the Prince be restored before the end of the year, of which the most sanguine expectations are entertained, he will return to England with the Duke and Duchess. Prince George of Cambridge is expected at Windsor previously to the departure of the King and Queen for Brighton.

The Duke of Sussex's recent visit to their Majesties has been for the purpose of finally arranging the approaching marriage between Prince Ernest of Hesse Philipsthal and Mademoiselle Augusta d'Este, daughter of the Duke, by Lady Augusta de Ameland, daughter of the Earl of Dunmore. The nuptials will be celebrated at Windsor Castle, in the presence of their Majesties, the Duke of Sussex, and the different branches of the Royal Family at present in England.

The King of the Belgians landed at Dover from Calais, from the Crusader, Capt. Lyne, at four o'clock on Wednesday, under a salute from the battery, and immediately left for London, from whence he proceeded to Clermont. His Majesty will return to Ostend on the 19th, and it is supposed that the Court will remain at that place until the 21st, to be present at the fête of Sept. His Majesty is expected at Windsor Castle this day.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The French ministry is not yet completed. Viscount de Caux has declined the post of Minister at War, on the ground of his advanced age. It was supposed that M. Martin (du Nord) would have accepted the Department of Commerce, but there appears to be considerable uncertainty upon the subject.

The following regiments are in garrison in the neighbourhood of Paris, within a radius of from twenty to twenty-five leagues:—Versailles, two regts. of Infantry of the line, 2d Cuirassiers and 11th Dragoons; Rambouillet, 6th Chasseurs. Chartres, 1st Chasseurs; Vendome, 1st Hussars; Orleans, 38th of the Line; Fontainebleau, 4th Hussars; Melun, 1st Dragoons; Provins, 7th Chasseurs; Meaux, 5th Chasseurs; Beauvais, 8th Chasseurs; St. Germain, 1st Chasseurs. Total, 14 Regiments.

The King has given up his projected excursion to the Compeigne Camp, which, in consequence of the unfavourable state of the weather, is not likely to last so long as was at first contemplated.

RUSSIA.—The levy throughout the Empire, recently ordered, will amount to about 125,000 men. The population of Russia, excluding the provinces, bring about fifty millions, five in every 1000 males will give this number. The expense falls upon the landed proprietors, who are not merely bound to forward the recruit properly equipped to the place of rendezvous, but are deprived of the profit of his labour during the period of his service. It is estimated to amount to 250 millions of rubles in bank assignats. The levy is justified upon the ground of the necessity which exists of preserving a large force upon the frontiers, especially the Caucasian frontier; the warlike tribes of that region constantly infesting the Russian territories.

SPAIN.—Madrid, Sept. 5.—We are at length relieved from the embarrassment of the too near neighbourhood of Don Basilio Garcia and Gomez, who for upwards of 20 days have stumped up the road from Arragon. The first has gone across the Ebro with an immense booty. On the 26th he surprised the small town of Aldea, at the moment when the people were assembled at a bull fight. He slut the principal inhabitants, and completely pillaged the town. He has under his command upwards of 3,000 men, and made at Siguenza more than a thousand voluntary recruits. Gomez, having a more powerful and better disciplined force, is not afraid of meeting the Queen's best troops. He has proved this in the affair at Villarrayo, against Tello's division, which was completely beaten; and more recently against General Lopez, who was taken prisoner near Jadraque, after a most sanguinary battle, sustained with equal courage on both sides, but Lopez, with his brave men, were obliged to yield to superior numbers. It is feared that the Carlist General will order Lopez to be shot, in revenge for the death of Torres, who, with two of his officers, suffered the same fate in Upper Arragon. Lopez is the first general officer taken by the Carlists since the commencement of the war. It is difficult to say what has become of Gomez's division; for since its entrance into the Asturias it has run over several provinces with incredible velocity.

We have this moment learned that 1,000 men, detached by Gomez, are at Villa Reyna, a village near Aranda, only seven leagues from Madrid.

Queen Christina, on the 3d, ventured out to the Prado in an open carriage. Her countenance betrayed the anguish of her heart. Her altered looks denoted the violent shock that her mind and frame have sustained from the insurrection of her drunken Guards at La Granja. One of her trusty confidants, M. Grimaldi, has departed for Paris, with an autograph letter to Louis Philippe, describing the suffering which she has endured and the perils that menace her and her infant daughter. Exhausted by a ruinous war and the extortions of the local Juntas, the people are deaf to the appeal made to their patriotism and purses. Voluntary contributions are becoming more and more scarce. In the army insubordination is making fearful progress.

SWEDEN.—A Paris paper asserts that the obvious coolness of the Courts of St. Petersburgh and Stockholm had its origin in the desire of King Charles John to unite Norway to Sweden, in defiance of the treaties of 1814 and 1815, but for which his Majesty finds a precedent in the recent incorporation of Poland with Russia. The same paper states that active intercourse between Count Pahlen and the two Swedish Ministers now at Paris had commenced with a view to the arrangement of the affair.

TURKEY.—Accounts from Belgrade of 20th Aug. represent that place as being threatened with plague from the south and cholera from the north. In some places the former is raging with extraordinary intensity, where the deaths average thirty to forty daily. Above 3,000 Turks and 600 Christians have already fallen victims.

ALGIERS.—Letters from Toulon state that the arrival of Marshal Clausel at Algiers on the 29th ult. had been the signal for resuming preparations for the long-contemplated expedition against Constantine, and assert that the French Government had determined upon the occupation of the entire of the ancient Regency of Algiers.

Theatres.

QUEEN'S.—The farce of High Life below Stairs has been admirably acted at this theatre during the week, and on the evening we were present we were glad to observe a crowded and fashionable audience. Novelty is greatly wanted at this house, and one or two more good actors. We are glad to observe that Kate Kearney, or the Fairy of the Lakes, is announced for Thursday; we expect some good scenery, and several beautiful Irish melodies by the queen of song (Mrs. Waylett), who is to sustain the part of Kate Kearney.

STRAND.—This theatre closes for the season to-night, and we have great gratification in being able to state that it has been adequate to the expectations of the praiseworthy and enterprising proprietors. We hear that next season Messrs. Jerrold and Hammond will be able to receive their friends in a more spacious theatre, as we understand it is their intention to increase the size of this house previous to opening in March next. They have had many difficulties to contend with, owing to the smallness of their stage. We are indebted to them for many a pleasant evening, and hope soon to see the Bill Sticker at work again.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL AND MR. BUCKINGHAM.

[We have not room for the Political Correspondence rising out of Mr. Buckingham's speech at Sheffield, t we think the following may be more amusing to our aders:—]

POLITICAL CORRESPONDENCE ON A DELICATE POINT.

Lord John Russell to J. S. Buckingham, Esq.

SIR,

Seeing a speech addressed by you
To the people of Sheffield, I feel it due
To my honour, et cetera, just to hint
That there's something wrong in the speech or print.
You aver, with less of truth than wit,
That my conduct has been as opposite,
At different times, as dark and light,
As winter and summer, as noon and night;
As Grote and Goulburn; eagle and dove;
As Lords and Commons; hate and love;
As truth and falsehood, Shakspeare's plays
And the mode they act 'em in, now-a-days;
As what men say and what they mean;
As Whigs and Radicals; King and Queen;
O'Connell and Cumberland; friend and foe;
As Justice and Sir Frederick Roe;
As churchmen's acts and what they preach;
As measures passed, and a minister's speech;
In short as opposite, or a lie
Is told by the press, as you and I.
Oblige me, therefore, without delay,
With what you said, or meant to say;
And whether you did design or not
To cast on my personal honour a blot.
If so, why then we must have a tussle
In Kensington Gravelpits.

Yours, JOHN RUSSELL.

J. S. Buckingham, Esq. to Lord John Russell.

MY LORD,

I hasten to set you right;
I vow'd you differed like black and white;
And proved your conduct with change of time,
As opposite quite as reason and rhyme;
Or the past and present state of the fleet,
Or Durham-terrace and Downing-street;
Or Mr. Speaker and Ellen Tree;
A counsel's opinion and his fee;
Or brandy and water; or duels fought,
And the finer courage by morals taught,
Far more unlike than a duellist's lead
And many a duellist's foolish head.
But, saying this, I beg to assure
Your Lordship, your honour was perfectly pure;
As all your character!—Heaven forbid!
As I value my own, I never did.
And so I must beg that you will not send
A challenge!—Shan't fight—won't see your friend;
If people insult me, I'm for ducking 'em.

Your obedient servant, J. S. BUCKINGHAM.

Lord John Russell to J. S. Buckingham, Esq.

SIR,

Truly happy am I to believe
The frank admissions I now receive,— Quite delighted to find you meant
Nothing at all, by the incident,
That what you said was not applied
To me, but the minister—mere outside.
Your kind politeness will see no bar
To printing our letters. Yours, J. R.

Constitutional.

Literary Notices.

dventures during a Journey overland to India, by way of Egypt, Syria, the Holy Land, and Mesopotamia. By Major Skinner, 31st regiment, author of "Excursions in the Himalaya Mountains." Two volumes. R. Bentley.

R like this work of Major Skinner. It is written in at we conceive to be the most satisfactory style for a ok of travels, that is to say, it is lively, full of adven-re, graphic, and, above all, unpretending. The author es not weary his readers with crude theories, but mi-tely describes what he saw, and leaves the inferences others. His anxiety to investigate every note-worthy ject in his route seems to have defied personal labour d even personal hazard; and if this enterprising spirit abled him to accumulate a rich store of materials for s narrative, it cannot be denied that he obtained them ten in danger of captivity among the wild Arabs, who equently beset his path. This imparts to his volumes air of absorbing interest, though, we repeat, that no-ing can be more modest and unaffected than his manner relating his story. Major Skinner embarked at Mar-illes for Alexandria, in a vessel commanded by a French agabond, miscalled "un bon enfant," who, after sundry isadventures, landed him at the destined port. In gypt he hires for his guide and attendant a young man amed Hassan, who maintains a prominent figure roughout the whole narrative. This man's singular haracter, and his unflinching fidelity to his master in the ost critical situations, are delineated with a dramatic ower, which reminds us of Sterne's La Fleur in the "Sen-imental Journey," and the "Strap" of "Roderick Ran-om." The vivacity, courage, and comic humour of Hassan are perpetually alive, whether in the toilsome march across the desert, or in the wretched privations of the ruined khans, wherein it was the fate of our travellers to seek shelter for the night. Having traversed parts of Egypt and Syria, Major Skinner entered the Holy Land by Nazareth, and here his enthusiasm, tempered always by good sense, was awakened. Near the ruins of Cæsarea he passed two nights in an encampment of Arabs, and was thus enabled to give a curious account of the manners of that wild and singular people. At length, after many adventures, he reached the city of Jerusalem, in which and in its sacred vicinity his researches will be found to possess the most absorbing interest for every denomination of Christians. Resuming his journey, he travelled to Damascus, and here again his descriptive powers and his untiring spirit of investigation are called into active use. Nothing can be more striking than his pictures of this renowned city. On leaving Damascus he started for Bagdad, across the great desert, and, if for no other reason, Major Skinner's book would be invaluable on account of his description of this remarkable part of his journey to the East. The mirage and other phenomena—the endurance of the patient camels—the picturesque bivouacs of the caravan—the mad approach of men and beasts to the wells, and the curious method of steering over the long and level sands—are all delineated with an effect which nothing but a mind extremely susceptible to impression could accomplish. After his arrival at Bagdad, Major Skinner made an excursion to Babylon, his picture of which we feel confident will often be resorted to, as affording most valuable illustrations of the inspired writings of the Prophets.

A History of the Life of Edward the Black Prince, and of various Events connected therewith, which occurred during the Reign of Edward the Third, King of England. By G. P. R. James, Esq. 2 vols. Longman and Co.

If long and laborious research, patient investigation, diligent collation of contradictory authorities, and the calm, reasoning, philosophical spirit, which, upon mature reflection, judiciously admits one opinion or statement, rejects the other, or ingeniously reconciles both; if these, we say, conduce to the composition of a good history, then is "the Life of Edward the Black Prince," which unites all these desirable concomitants, the best, if not the very best, which has appeared since the classic days of Hume and Gibbon. Mr. James, we believe, "comes of gentle blood," and he shows it, not less by the princely themes which usually engross his fertile unwearying pen than by the beautiful observations and noble sentiments with which he embellishes them. We could have paneled this present work written con amore by one of the lamented Black Prince's knightly companions in arms, so has its popular author come to his task, with all the fine chivalrous ardour of the old Chroniclers whom he consults, with the intense interest they took in their spirit-stirring subjects, and, with their honest zeal, faithfully to record all that they saw, heard, and sincerely believed, concerning extraordinary deeds and extraordinary men; but Mr. James has this advantage over them, and a great one it is, on the side of truth, from the mass of valuable materials with which these early historians have supplied him, and which he has sought out with singular zeal and industry, and at a very considerable expense he has composed a really faithful* veracious history. Now (with laudable care, diligence, taste, and judgment) selecting, compiling, collating, and planing away difficulties; now ingenuously confessing his inability to reconcile conflicting statements by authors equally worthy of credit; and, now acknowledging where he is at fault on a few inconsiderable points, from a paucity of information or a total silence on the part of Chroniclers, and which must necessarily render the chain of history imperfect in a few links. To supply a hiatus of the latter sort, Mr. James has indulged but little in conjecture, but where he has allowed himself to do so, it is with judgment, remembering that the imagination which originates and embellishes fiction must be banished from the page that records plain matters of fact—history now, than the "sad, sober realities" of the day in which they occurred. In alluding to the uncommon and little known sources (principally French and Flemish) from which Mr. James has drawn materials for his volumes, we must observe, that to them he has given his readers ample reference; indeed the notes, frequently recurring, and in which curious passages and documents have been at large transcribed, form, we think, an equal portion of the work with the text; and in them will be found, too, strong evidence of the careful, considerate manner in which Mr. James has proceeded in his laborious undertaking. He has corrected numerous historical errors; but, with becoming modesty, never contemning the labours of his predecessors who wrote "in good faith," rather showing cause how they might have become mistaken, and yet not shrinking from a proper exposure of fraud and wilful ignorance (as in the Chronicle of Flanders), where it appears to him evident. We refer our readers to Mr. James's preface on this point (as well as on others), and we refer them with pride, for the views he there gives of the spirit in which he has endeavoured to write his history, his diffidence, and his grateful acknowledgment of the assistance afforded him by several literary and official friends, are equally creditable to him as a writer and a man. More than half the first volume of "the Life of Edward the Black Prince" is occupied by a narrative of the politics and wars of Edward III., "the gentlest of heroes and the noblest of conquerors," as Mr. James happily styles his hero, who is but incidentally mentioned until "his entrance upon public life," which commences Chap. XV.; but the previous details, so greatly were the conduct, character, and actions of the Sire connected with those of the son, are essential to the history, though sometimes from the involved and crooked political intrigues of parties concerned, rather uninteresting. We had intended to have given extracts from this excellent performance: the space occupied by our remarks precludes us from doing so, but we shall probably return to its instructive pages hereafter, and enrich our columns with a few anecdotical excerpts. In conclusion, we congratulate Mr. James upon the happy accomplishment of a task, which has for five years occupied his attention (the difficulties of which, to be appreciated, must be seen in the volumes themselves), and sincerely trust that his standard history, under the favouring smile of the young accomplished Princess, to whom it is appropriately dedicated, will command that attention and success which the talents and industry lavished in its composition so eminently deserve. We commend specially to our military readers volumes replete with martial adventure, and imbued with the fine soldierly spirit of the times they chronicle.

Travels in Greece and Turkey; being the second part of Excursions in the Mediterranean. By Major Sir Grenville Temple, Bart. Two vols. Saunders and Otley.

As sketches of a traveller these are light and very pleasing volumes, and Sir Grenville does not pretend further than to interest his readers with his views of passing events and scenes of which he was an eye witness. There have been so many publications of travellers in the Mediterranean Islands, Greece, and Turkey, that there are few spots and few events without a host of historians; but, notwithstanding the multitude, Sir Grenville has contrived, as we intend to show by some specimens, to present us with a work well meriting perusal. From his account of Malta we shall extract his notice on the order of St. John of Jerusalem.

"The Governor's house at Valetta contains a few good pictures, chiefly portraits; one of Vignacourt by Caravaggio is very fine, and there is also a good one of Catherine of Russia; but the most interesting paintings are a series in fresco by pupils of D'Arpino, representing the different warlike achievements of the knights, from the time they first took possession of Rhodes. There is also another series commemorating their naval victories. I am no great admirer of these Knights of St. John, for though they were unquestionably most gallant and daring soldiers, and, at first, men of honour, piety, and principle, yet they soon became one of the most bigoted, unprincipled, cruel, and blood-thirsty set of fanatics that ever congregated together: the barbarities committed by the Turks and Barbaresques which were by no means trifling, yielded far in atrocity to those ordered and performed by these men; yet standing here, and beholding the records of their former high deeds, you cannot but feel respect for them. . . In the armoury are great quantities of their cuirasses, shields, helmets, sabres, battle-axes, maces, and other weapons, and some mountain artillery made of wood, lined inside with iron, and bound round with cord. There are also thirteen thousand modern stand of arms, very tastefully arranged. The most curious specimens of the ancient armour, including those taken from the Moslems, have lately been sent to Windsor Castle. . . In the tapestry room of the palace is a curious model of an old Maltese galley of the second class. These galleys measured one hundred and sixty-nine feet one inch in length, and thirty-seven feet six inches in breadth; they had three masts with latine sails, and were propelled by forty-three oars, each forty-four feet five inches long; their armament consisted of one thirty-six pounder, two of twenty-four, and four six-pounders, all on the forecastle, which in those days had in reality some appearance of a castle. On each side of the vessel, aft of the forecastle, were four six-pounders. The crew consisted of one Captain, one second Captain, one Commander of the Troops, nine Pilots, one Purser, two Priests, sixteen Knights in their noviciate, seventy-five soldiers, one hundred seamen, and three hundred and forty-three galley slaves—making a total of five hundred and forty-nine persons. . . Adjoining the palace is the government library, containing sixty-five thousand volumes, some objects of antiquity, and a few coins. . . The church of St. John, built in 1580 by the grand master, John de Cassiere, is not remarkable for any exterior beauty of architecture; but the interior is very fine, and richly decorated with paintings, chiefly by Preti, surnamed Il Calabrese, and the floor represents, in all the rich variety of different coloured marbles, the armorial bearings he knights*. Some of the paintings are very good, and eral of the tombs are worthy of notice, especially that of Grand Master, Nicholas Cottoner, to which are attached figures of very good workmanship—the one a captive k or Moor, the other a Negro. In a small vault below the sarcophagi of L'Isle Adam, La Velette, and some ers of the Grand Masters. L'Isle Adam was first buried he chapel on the summit of Fort St. Angelo, where his h still exists, but when the new town of Valetta was shed, his body was removed to St. John's."

Our next extract will more especially interest our itary readers.

Turkish Army.—"The guard consists of three regi. nts of cavalry, and three of infantry. Its corps still re. the name of Bostanjis. The line comprises nine regi. nts of cavalry, and sixteen of infantry. The regiments cavalry are composed of six squadrons, each of ninety-six ses, forming a total of six thousand nine hundred and lve horses. Three other regiments were raising, which, en complete, would increase the force to eight thousand hundred and forty horses. The flank squadrons of each iment were organised as Lancers. The men are armed h sabres, made according to the old English Light Dra. n model, a carbine slung from the belt, and not fixed in bucket, and a pair of pistols; the Lancer squadrons e no carbines. The horses are small but active; they chiefly taken from Moldavia and Bosnia, and have es cost the Sultan very little, being mostly presents from ient Pashas and wealthy individuals. Very great at. tion is not paid to grooming them; but the forage issued is sufficient. The saddles and bridles are English, and made on the Hussar principle; but, instead of using a led blanket as we do, they employ several layers of felt ed together, which material, they say, experience has ght them to be best adapted for preventing sore backs. . I did not observe much uniformity of system in the nner of riding, nor can this as yet be expected, consider. how much the new mode differs from the old and national ; besides which, the Sultan was much too anxious to his cavalry embodied for work to allow the necessary e for a regular course of riding lessons. The officers, vever, and many of the men, take great pains to acquire the r seat, and much pride in showing it off when obtained; principal objection entertained by the men, appeared to to consist of being obliged to wear straps to their over. ; for I observed that most of them, whenever favourable portunities presented themselves for doing so without being n, letnt down and unbuttoned them, so that in a short e many naked legs became visible, the overalls flying up. . The dress of the officers of the guard, when in full form, consists of blue jackets and overalls; the former covered with gold chain lace, and exactly resemble the dress of our 7th Hussars. In undress they wear a blue k coat, with red collar and cuffs. The men are also re e, with the red facing and three large red stars, or suns, rked on each side of the centre row of the buttons, and ir overalls have double red stripes. Both officers and o wear the simple red fez. . . The exercising ground the Seraglio lies between the deer park and the Theo. riao column. The Sultan does not, at present, devote so ch of his time to drilling his cavalry as formerly; his ere hours being chiefly taken up with literary pursuits, ecially the study of Arabic poetry; he himself is said to ite with considerable grace, and the Hatti Shereafs, which generally remarkable for force and elegance, are of his n composition. . . Rustam Bey put the troops, for bours a-day, through a great variety of manœuvres, ne of which were very complicated; they were all per. med on the move, and not from the halt, and generally a canter, or accelerated trot. I was quite astonished to d with what general precision they were all executed; the charges, however, owing to the great variety and ality of the horses, there was not quite the ensemble that ght be desired, but the pace was good. It was, on these casions, rather nervous for the spectators, who were ged with their horses' croup close to the wall; for the t was never made till the mirakiua (Lancers) touched said well with the point of their lances. I often could help dreading that some of these spear-heads might be de to go through my body instead of being directed to right or left of it. Some wild, lively boy, disposed to tify his desire of sticking an infidel, might afterwards re excused himself by saying that the dust prevented his ing; however, I never felt more than the flags wiping dust off my moustaches. . . Their code of manœuvres copied from the one introduced about eighteen months o in France. On the whole, their state of discipline, and ir manner of working, reflect the highest credit on Col. lesso, especially when the numerous and vindict preju. es he had, on commencing, to contend against, and his norance at first of the Turkish language, are fairly con. dered. He now speaks the language fluently, and, what more important, is a great favourite with both officers and n. . . Some of the regiments, during the late war, atly distinguished themselves, and, on several occasions, mpletely annihilated whole corps of Russians, cavalry as well as infantry. On one occasion, one of the cavalry regiments, commanded by a Colonel with whom I was acquainted, (but who was not the person who related the affair to me,) was marching along a raised causeway of great length, when it came upon three Russian battalions—it immediately charged, cut the first to pieces, broke through the second, and drove the third before it. This is no contemptible fait d'armes for any cavalry. . . . The Cavalry Barracks in the Seraglio are just behind the Balyk kioshk, and form a hollow square; one room runs round the whole, which allows a free circulation of air; down the centre is a row of wooden pillars supporting a beam and shelf, on which are placed and suspended the kit and arms; four rows of inclined planes like our guard-room beds, and raised about nine inches from the floor, run round both sides; and in double rows down the middle of them, are the mats which compose the soldiers' beds. . . . In the officers' mess-room, I used to smoke and drink caravan tea, which, in many instances, has taken the place of coffee. I also used to frequent the odas of the pages, situated in the great palace of the seraglio. Most, if not all the officers, are taken from the corps of these pages. . . . Regimental tailors, boot-makers, &c., had just been established. . . . The pay of the officers and men is, for the country, liberal; for example, a colonel receives one thousand two hundred piastres (16*l.*) a month; besides which he is furnished, at the expense of government, with horses, uniform, appointments, rations,—in fact, with every thing. The infantry consists of three regiments of the guard, and sixteen of the line, each of which is composed of five tabors or battalions, four of which are for service; the others form the depot. A battalion has eight companies or ortaluks, of one hundred men each; the company is divided into twelve behluks, subdivisions, or pelotons, the eighth ortaluk of each battalion is organised as voltigeurs; and the fourth battalion of each regiment is drilled to act as sharpshooters or skirmishers. The war-strength of each company is one hundred and seventy men. This gives, therefore, exclusive of officers, non-commissioned officers, and the depots, an effective force in peace of sixty thousand eight hundred bayonets. . . . Each regiment is commanded by a miralai; a battalion by a bim bashi; and a company by a yuz bashi, having under him two melazems or lieutenants. Each battalion has a sagh aghasi and a sol aghasi, ranks which the French call adjutants de la droite et de la gauche. The names of the inferior ranks are bairakdar, or standard-bearer; chaoosh bashi, serjeant-major; chaoush, serjeant; nu bashi, corporal; trompetji bashi, drum major; chialghiji bashi, band master; baltaji bashi, serjeant of pioneers. One of the regiments forms a corps of marines, called Terskhaeeh tabnor. Eight regiments are quartered in Constantinople or its immediate vicinity. . . . The men are steddy under arms, manœuvre with tolerable precision, and their lines and coverings are correct; their arms are kept clean and in good order, and the barrels of their muskets burnished. In their dress and appointments, however, they look dirty and slovenly; and, wearing no stock round the neck, have an undress appearance. The privates are all very young men, and many are mere boys of twelve years old, who can hardly carry their firelocks; but it is not for want of grown-up men that we find these boys in the ranks,—it is purposely done, and on a sound principle; for these boys never having possessed any of the power and consequence of the Janizaries, and never having known any other system of discipline and instruction than the new existing one, will form, in a few years, a fine steady army, on which the Sultan may rely with confidence, which could not be the case if its component parts consisted wholly, or in part, of the turbulent spirits of the old school. . . . The military bands perform very well, and are under the instruction of Donizetti, brother of the famous Neapolitan composer. The young Turks show a great disposition for music. The barracks are fine spacious buildings, placed in airy and healthy situations. . . The pay in the line is five hundred piastres a month for a bim bashi; three hundred for a yuz bashi; and one hundred and fifty for a melazem. . . I several times witnessed their artillery practice, which was tolerable. The topjis (artillerymen), the khumbarsjis (bombardiers), the baltajis (sappers), and the laghumjis (miners), are divided into regiments. Each battery is composed of four field pieces and two howitzers. Four batteries form a regiment of twenty-four bouches à feu, and as many caissons. The old pieces of one and a half, three, and five pounders, have been replaced by new ones of seven, nine, and eleven. . . . The direction quartered at Dolmabaghcheh, used to assemble twice a week on the downs by the road to Therapia, not far from the Yildiz kioshk, when the Sultan himself used to attend, and on several occasions pointed the guns, and was far from making the worst shots. The commander of the artillery is Tahir Pasha, who commanded the Turkish fleet at Navarin. He was shortly going to Varna to re-establish the fortifications of that place. The second in command is Kara Jehennem, or Black-Hell. He is the officer who distinguished himself so much in quieting the Janizaries in the Et Meidan, and who also behaved with so much gallantry against the Russians near Shumla."

We shall conclude with the system of promotion which our author very justly considers to be well worthy of being imitated.

"Promotion in the army is given for merit, and not by interest or seniority, as the following extract from one of their Military Gazettes will show:—"Muhammed Bey, colonel of the 1st regiment of the 1st brigade, and his lieutenant-colonel, Hassan Bey, having shown but little capacity and zeal in the military service, and in the execution of the functions attached to their respective ranks, have been dismissed. An examination having been held among the officers next in rank for the purpose of replacing them, Aly Bey, lieutenant-colonel of the 2d regiment of the 2d brigade, and Kavakli Emin Bey, major in the 3d regiment of the 1st brigade, having shown the greatest knowledge in the theory of war and in the details of discipline, have been promoted to the vacancies. Their places also, after a strict examination, have been filled up by Asmi Efendi, commanding the 2d battalion of the 2d regiment of the 2d brigade, and by Eumer Bey, major in the same corps. This latter officer has been succeeded by Mustafa, son of Yusuf, Pasha of Seres."

The Angler's Rambles. By Edward Jesse, Esq., F.L.S. John Van Voorst.

We cannot do better than begin with Mr. Jesse's own account of his work. He tells us it was written at various times, and consists chiefly of recollections of scenes and circumstances which took place in his younger days, and that those who admire the secluded and tranquil scenes which are so frequently to be met with on the banks of many of our pretty streams and rivers, will find some of them faithfully described.

The volume, although it contains some very useful hints, has no pretensions to be considered as a regular "Angler's Guide;" but in every page there is amusement and information, an abundance of anecdote and chit-chat, all agreeably told by this most pleasant and cheerful writer, and moreover true angler. An extract or two will gratify our readers.

Rodney and the Duke of Sussex.—"Persons of every class seem to participate in the amusement of Thames angling, from the Duke of Sussex to the little fat cobbler of Hampton. His Royal Highness was at one time a determined angler, and kept a punt at Shepperton for the purpose. Here he was attended by the famous Peter Parley, (poor Peter! a better fisherman never poached the Thames,) and who invariably answered "Yes," or "No, your Royal Rodney," to any questions which the Duke asked. Peter, on being reminded of the great mistake he thus committed, said that for the life of him he could not help it. He had heard so much of Lord Rodney from his father, who was one of his crew, that he protested he could think of no other name whenever he spoke to a great man. As for myself, I confess that the quiet amusement of angling has great charms for me. It combines also another pleasure with it,—that of studying nature. The song of a sedge bird, the cry of a water-hen, the peculiar flight of a king-fisher—even the very insects which flit around me, all add to the interest I take in fishing on a fine summer's evening. Let me here give two stanzas of an old song for the benefit of my associates of the Walton and Cotton Fishing Club.

> Come, lay by all cares, and hang up all sorrow,
> Let's angle to day, and ne'er think of to-morrow;
> And by the brook-side as we angle along,
> We'll cheer up ourselves with our sport and a song.
> There, void of all care, we're more happy than they
> That sit upon thrones, and kingdoms do sway;
> For sceptres and crowns disquiet still bring;
> But the man that's content is more blest than a king."

From a visit to Oxford we take an amusing paper:—

"While I was sauntering along the High Street the next day, I was accosted by two young gownsmen, whom I had formerly known and pouched at Eton. They pressed me so much to join their wine party in the evening, that I was obliged to consent, although I endeavoured duly to impress upon them how much an old fellow like myself would be out of his element in the society of a number of jolly youngsters. All my arguments, however, were of no avail, and at the appointed hour I repaired to ——— College. I found a large party assembled, and a table covered with wine, glasses, and an expensive dessert. My companions were gay and joyous, and amused me much with college anecdotes and Oxford puns. Some of the latter I had heard before, though I took especial care duly to express my approbation, as if in total ignorance of their antiquity. Indeed I have observed that a genuine Oxford pun is handed down from year to year for the benefit of all new comers, and probably many of the freshmen, on hearing one of these for the first time, repeat it as if it had just been uttered by one of the reigning wits of the day. I heard, however, two or three which were new to me, and trust they will prove so to my readers. At all events, they will serve to remind me of the joyous reception they met with from my young companions. . . A wealthy and well-known London brewer thought proper to join a pack of fox-hounds one day, and on the occasion appeared with moustaches. He was well mounted, and dressed in a very conspicuous manner. A French nobleman who was present, and who was struck by his appearance, asked Lord A. if he was not un grand militaire. 'No,' replied his Lordship, 'il n'est qu'un Chevalier de Malte.' . . A well-known poet sacrificed too liberally to Bacchus one evening at the Athenæum, and was led home by an acquaintance of his who was in a more sober state. The day had been wet, and the kennels were full of water. The poet fell into one of them, and pulled his companion after him, who exclaimed, in allusion to one of the poet's lines—'It is not I-ser rolling rapidly, but re-sir.' . . An old gentleman, while handing his snuff-box round a table, boasted much of its antiquity, and said that it had been a hundred years in his family. 'Has it?' retorted a wit, 'then it is only a sentry (century) box after all.' . . Coleman being asked what he thought of John Kemble in Don Felix, answered, that 'there was too much of the Don, and too little of the Felix.' . . . A race-horse, named Dawn-of-Day, won several stakes, and his owner, thinking he should get a large sum for him, determined to sell him, and told a friend of his intention. 'You will never get anything for him,' replied he, 'his name will damn him.' 'How so?' said the other, 'he has always won in the name he now has.' 'No such thing,' replied the other; 'I again say his name will damn him, for every one will take him for a roarer (Amma).' . . A celebrated architect was speaking of the difficulty there would be in destroying the old London bridge. 'None at all,' said his friend, 'shoot it.' . . To these, and many other jokes and puns, were added stories of hair-breadth escapes from proctors, accounts of examinations, and of being plucked at the little goes, and various details of the habits of college life. In short, my young companions amused me exceedingly, and I quitted them with a sincere hope that it would be long ere the frowns of the world would deprive them of their happy laces and exuberant spirits."

* "Each language had a separate chapel, decorated by the emblematic distinctions of their respective countries."

"The next day I dined at the fellows' table of M—— College, and I shall not soon forget the scene. Most of the fellows I met were a little advanced in life, and one of them was between eighty and ninety years of age. He had resided at his favourite college upwards of sixty years, and thought there was no place equal to it. If good eating and drinking, and a warm, snug fellows' room, constituted happiness, he certainly had them in perfection. After an excellent dinner, we adjourned to this room. A sort of kidney-shaped table was placed before the fire, round which the party sat, the two senior fellows ensconcing themselves in comfortable arm-chairs on each side of the fire-place. A bottle of port wine, such as is seldom met with, and which did great credit to the Bursar, was placed on the table, and protected from the heat of the fire by a little triangular mahogany screen. It circulated, however, with considerable rapidity, and was as rapidly renewed. Indeed the attendant, who appeared to have exercised the duties of his office for a great many years, and was a solemn and respectable-looking man, seemed to be perfectly aware when a fresh bottle would be wanted, and he always made his appearance with it to a moment. Its brightness was then duly examined, and it made its rounds like its predecessors. It was, however, the old stagers who paid the greatest devotion to their favourite beverage; and notwithstanding their frequent libations, it appeared to produce no effect upon them until late in the evening. The first symptom which was evinced of exhilaration was a proposal from the senior fellow for a catch, by way of enlivening the company. This was opposed by some of the juniors, who were probably aware of what was coming, and were fearful of some breach of decorum in the presence of a stranger. It was, however, carried against them, with a little assistance I leant to the proposal, as I felt curious to hear what sort of a catch would be sung by the venerable seniors of the college. After a short consultation, the thing was settled, the juniors declining to join in and to the performance; but retaining their seats in dignified silence, looking, however, with some degree of contempt on their more aged brethren. The patriarch of the room acted as leader of the band, and made his arrangements accordingly. As I had expressed my readiness to lend any assistance in my power in the proposed catch, he turned to me, and to my infinite surprise and dismay, desired me to sing 'the cur.' On requesting to have my part more fully explained to me, that I might do it all due justice, I was informed that when it came to my turn I was to chaunt out lustily, 'I sing cur,' and afterwards join the chorus, plenâ voce. The old fellow then began his part by shouting out, 'I sing Cub'—; the next performer followed him by speaking out, 'I sing ter;' a third, with stentorian lungs, exclaimed, 'I sing Tin'—; and then I had to add, 'I sing ker.' The chorus was then vociferated, the last having been given by a loud rap on the table, 'A Cobler and a Tinker.' The catch, however, did not end here, for it went on ad libitum, getting louder and louder every instant, till the venerable old walls echoed with the shouts and laughter of its jolly old fellows, and they were at last obliged to stop from mere exhaustion. Never shall I forget the scene. Their sides shook, while they wiped their eyes, which twinkled with glee and joviality, and it was some time before they recovered from the efforts of the exertions their bodies and lungs had undergone. Some other catches were sung, which I do not now recollect, and late in the evening, toasted bones, and other stimulants were introduced, followed by a huge silver tankard of mighty ale—

'With toast embrown'd, and fragrant nutmeg fraught.'

I must say that Oxford ale deserves all the panegyric which Warton has bestowed upon it, when he exclaimed—

'Balm of my cares, sweet solace of my toils,
Hail, juice benignant.'

The old fellows showed themselves to be true disciples of the poet laureate, and all due justice was done to the foaming tankard. When it had been properly discussed, a large tumbler of punch was placed before each person who chose to partake of it, and at a late hour we separated, after I had received many hearty shakes of the hand, and many pressing invitations to renew my visit. Alas! most, if not all of these fine old specimens of college bachelors are now reposing in the vaults of their venerable and splendid chapel. They were probably some of the last of a set of men, who, like the Dutch professor in the Vicar of Wakefield, could eat, drink, and sleep well, without understanding a word of Greek."

MAXIMS IN PURCHASING A HORSE.

"Never purchase a horse from a friend; nor from a litigious man; nor from a petty lawyer; nor from one who cannot pay the expenses of a law-suit. Never, before purchase, show that you are exceedingly well pleased with the horse. Hear all that the seller and his grooms say about a horse; but be certain of nothing till you have ocular demonstration. Never appear to know any of the tricks of dealers, unless they be attended with cruelty, when it may be proper to discourage and punish them by expressing disapprobation, and refusing to have any transactions with such men. But never be so rude as to betray any suspicion of want of faith in the dealer. It is always very offensive, quite useless, impolitic, and it may be erroneous. If you discover an unsoundness, or vice, before purchase, it is needless to point it out. To say that the horse is too good for your purpose may serve as well. You need not offend the owner; and you have no right to give the horse a bad character, even when you are quite sure that he deserves it. Seldom give the price first asked. Twenty or thirty, or even forty per cent. is no great abatement in horse-dealing. Be cautious when a seller warrants a horse, and at the same time candidly tells you of some defect. A little tenderness, produced by a bad shoe, may mean incurable lameness; a slight cough, of no consequence, may signify broken wind, or chronic cough; and when it is said the horse is a little troublesome to go about, it may often be concluded that he is notoriously vicious. When an auctioneer says that the horse is not warranted, but that he will warrant him for a guinea, his offer may sometimes be taken, but upon condition that a fair trial be allowed before payment. Always, when possible, delay payment until the horse has been minutely examined and tried. Be suspicious when delivery is refused until the price is paid, or a certain portion of it deposited—that is, when you are known to be credit-worthy. When a horse has many faults, object only to that for which he can be returned. To object first to the price, then to wind galls, and last of all to spavin, is to say that, right or wrong, you are determined to break the contract. To a person of doubtful character never, and to a dealer seldom, return a paid horse until the price is refunded. There are men who manage to keep both the horse and the money."—Stewart's Advice to Purchasers of Horses.

The vast importance and valuable utility of chemistry, in connexion with its sister science pharmacy, have been, as it has been stated, most satisfactorily illustrated in the compound of Franks' Specific. The successful result of his labours and experiments may justly entitle him to the thanks of his profession, and, it may be added, the gratitude of the afflicted. The high recommendations in favour of this medicine, induced by an experience of its efficacy in their public and private practice, of such eminent surgeons as Mr. Green, one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Mr. Bransby Cooper, and others of high and deserved repute, warrant the observation, that Mr. Franks has done honour to his profession, and conferred a lasting benefit upon the public.

A Lawyer on his Last Legs.—Our friend Park is probably one of the most ingenious advocates that ever stood between a rogue and the law. He was counsel for Dyer at the examination before the police court yesterday, and being driven by the evidence to desperate measures, put it to the Judge with most ingenious sophistry and imperturbable gravity, that the fact of Dyer having attempted to throw away the counterfeit bills found in his possession was proof positive that he wished to get rid of them without passing them.—Boston Trans.

The Proper Quantum.—I heard an Indian one day ax a tavern keeper for some rum. "Why, Joe Spawdeck, I reckon you have got too much already." "Too much of any thing," said Joe, "is not good, but too much rum is just enough."—American Paper.

Wonderful Child.—Galignani's Messenger states, that a child, just born with a proboscis like an elephant instead of a nose, has been brought to Paris. It is thought to be the first infant that ever came into the world with its own trunk.

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE.

—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Sick Head-ache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, and Gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefited by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes, and exceed credibility; in fact, there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 56, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the Kingdom.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND

BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sir,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them by on way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this time I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. EMMAN, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1835."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 35, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s, 1s½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Venders.

THE VEGETABLE SYRUP of

DE VELNOS.—At this period of the year, when, from the increased heat in the atmosphere, inflammation of the blood is of more frequent occurrence, the use of a medicine which cools it, without debilitating the system, must be evident and advantageous, if not indispensable. Of such a nature and property the experience of more than half a century has proved that the Vegetable Syrup is unquestionably possessed. It is of peculiar efficacy in correcting, purifying, and sweetening the blood; and those who are afflicted with Scrofula, Scurvy, Scorbutic Eruptions, and many of those melancholy diseases arising from the impurity of the blood and juices, should, especially at this season, enter without delay upon a regular course of the Vegetable Syrup. The effect of this medicine in promoting insensible perspiration, is such as not to interrupt either business or pleasure, it operates on the animal juices, and requires only the common restraint of moderation in diet. It is dissolved in the chyle of the stomach, is conveyed by the circulating fluids, and corrects their tendencies to all those diseases which originate in vitiated blood. It is a safe, though a powerful, substitute for mercury, and removes those evils which an unsuccessful use of that mineral occasions.

The Syrup is prepared by Mrs. Canham, No. 59, Berners'-street, Oxford street, and sold by her, and, with her authority, by all respectable Medicine Venders in town and country.—See Mrs. Canham's recently published Treatise on Scrofula, Scurvy, Consumption, and Diseases of the Blood and Liver. Sold by Ridgway and Sons, 169, Piccadilly.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose heir would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives in the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable, it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Odoriferi, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; as the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby. Thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this sickly pipe and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE

for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 15, 1835."

From WILLIAM HANTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of. The generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICA

PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible, they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell in the breath, as is the case with all other medicines to use for these complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will never experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scurbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in Curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations in our defence of the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S.,
Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR CHARLES,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed: but what I consider their most valuable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that haunt the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those mercurial remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale on them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co's General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute, with an allowance on taking a dozen (of one kind) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

IMPROVED PATENT WATE

CLOSETS.—J. OLIY begs to inform Architects, Surveyors, Builders, and Gentlemen repairing their houses, that he has received His Majesty's Royal LETTERS PATENT for an Improved Construction of Water-closet, which has two very important advantages over all others, viz. simplicity and economy. The whole apparatus only occupies a space of two feet square, perfectly free from any offensive effluvia, has an ample supply of water always standing in the basin, and is not liable to be out of order.

Urinary Closets on the same principle, admirably adapted for public buildings, hotels, &c.

The following apparatus is the usual valve closet in disuse with—the service-box and valve, the spring lever and pipe to conduct the wire, the air or D trap, the cranks and wire to open the valve in the service-box; all of which are liable to be out of order.—Premises surveyed, and an accurate estimate given of the expense.

Orders received at SALMON, ODY, and Co.'s Patent Truss Manufactory, 393, Strand, London.

FAMILY MEDICAL MACHINE.—T

Manufacturers of Dr. SCOTT'S newly-invented GLYSTER PUMP respectfully invite public attention to this desirable domestic apparatus, the action of which, by a curious mechanical contrivance, keeps the pump unvaringly full, propels the fluid by ascent as well as descent, and consequently totally excludes air, and discharges an uniform stream. No part of the apparatus is perishable; there is no fixing necessary, nor basin, nor any other article required. In short, it has been so contrived by a professional inventor, that the most infirm or timid female may apply it with facility. Persons in the habit of using lavements will duly appreciate this incomparable apparatus, which cannot be too strongly recommended to individuals who are constantly requiring opening medicines, or those who suffer from indigestion, bilious attacks, spasms, flatulence, and complaints connected with a disordered state of the stomach, or an irritable weakened, or sluggish action of the bowels.—Supplied, wholesale and retail, by SAVORY and Co., 369, Strand (three doors from Exeter Hall), and may be procured of all respectable Druggists in the kingdom. Purchasers in the country will please to obtain the Inventor's stamp.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material w which decayed teeth can be filled with any per nently beneficial result: the various cements to which so m impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgam mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the a of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, w out inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progres decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much n than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental S gery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most proved principles, combined with the utmost moderatio terms.

Nelson, when young, was piqued at not being noticed in a certain paragraph of the newspapers, which described an action wherein he had assisted. "But, never mind," said he, "I will one day have a Gazette of my own."

MILFORD HAVEN, Sept. 21st.—(From our own Correspondent.)—On the 14th inst. the Caryafort, under charge of Mr. Walker, sailed for Sheerness with a light breeze from the N.E. The same day the Creniel, a victualling boy, built at Pembroke-yard for the service of the Plymouth Victualling Establishment, sailed for Plymouth. On Sunday last the Madagascar, Commodore Sir J. Peyton, with the Galatea fitted as a coal depot for the West Indies, arrived here. The former sailed the next day for Dublin, where she is to remain a few days to give the Irish pea view of a man-of-war in that bay. The Galatea re here to take in coal (600 tons) for the use of the s vessels in the West Indies. She is likely to be here days, for yesterday intelligence arrived that the coal tracted for by the Admiralty from the port of Li cannot be supplied just yet, owing to the pleasure of ness there. The Galatea, when loaded, is also to proc Dublin. The Goodwill lighter came down here Pembroke-yard on Monday, with a ballast lighter in to remove some of the ballast from the Galatea. Mr. Blessley, from Portsmouth, has been pointed Inspector of Shipwrights at Pembroke-yard. She left Pa on the 10th inst., at which time the Tweed and Vipe were lying there, as were a French frigate and brig the following men-of-war at St. Sebastian, viz. the Royalist, Comet, Pluto, and Salamander; besides steamers belonging to the Queen of Spain. Cols. Co and O'Meere, of the British Legion, came passengers Diligence; as did Lieut. Langley, and three privat longing to the Royal Marines, who are gone to the pital. We learn by the above vessel that the Carlis continually harassing the Legion, by which they lost men; and, were it not for the support which the men-of-war afforded them, their position would not nable. The Alban steamer, Lieut. C. B. Tinling, arrived here on the 18th, sailed again for Falmouth 21st, from whence she will proceed to the West Ind relieve the Dee steamer, ordered home. ROYAL MARINES, WOOLWICH.—By the recommen of a Court of Inquiry, 1st Lt. Wood, R.M., has been r from arrest, and ordered to attend a Court-martial as ecutor against 2d Lieut. Bellairs, on the following cha For highly unofficer-like and ungentlemanly cond having, on the 17th instant, between the hours of eig nine in the evening, whilst on guard at the Dock-ya plied the words to Lieut. Wood, his superior officer, are a liar, a d——d liar, and I can prove you so b own servants; you are a d——d blackguard and a co The Court-martial assembled at the mess-room on W day last, at 10 o'clock, a. m.; Lieut.-Col. Beatty, Chatham Division of Marines, President, and wa posed of six Royal Artillery Officers, and six Mari cers, belonging to Chatham Division and Woolwich. Varlo acting as Deputy Judge-Advocate. The p admitted having used the words "liar and black but denied having added the epithet "coward," whi of the charge the prosecutor did not seem to sustai Lieut. Wood having been sworn, proceeded to give dence, during which, he stated that Lieut. Bellairs h in the habit of absenting himself from his guard; and, previous to his (Lieut. Wood) leaving the guard, to go home to dress for dinner, he had requested Lieut. Bellairs to stay with the guard during his absence; and that, on his return, an altercation ensued between them, during which the prisoner made use of the offensive words in question. Lieut. Wood admitted there had been a difference between Lieut. Bellairs and himself for some time, and that on the day in question he had spoken at the mess of the repetition of absence from guard, of which Lieut. Bellairs had been guilty; which Lieut. B., at a cross-examination, sought to prove was not any point of Lieut. Wood's duty to do; that if the Captain of the guard (Peebles) were satisfied, Lieutenant Wood had no right to interfere on the subject. Lt. Wood solemnly assured the Court that his not being on terms with the prisoner had not operated with him on this occasion; so far therefrom, that, subsequent to the language which had been made use of towards him, Lieut. B. had observed, he should "lose his commission in consequence, which he could not afford, as he was the eldest of a family of twelve children." But an amicable offer was not accepted by the prisoner, from what cause did not appear. The sentry at the guard-room door deposed to having heard the words "liar," and "a d——d blackguard," as he supposed, from his knowledge of the voices, as applied by Lieut. Bellairs to Lieut. Wood; and to having called the drummer, who twice sent in the Serjeant of the guard (Colour-Serjeant Forrest, of the 44th Company). This witness stated that he twice waited on the above-mentioned Officers, and that both times, about five minutes apart, Lieut. Wood said, "Now, Sir, repeat the words you have made use of," When Lieut. B. said "not a word." That he did not see any other persons in the room; but, as there was an adjoining apartment, he would not be positive. That he had not overheard (from a question put by a member of the Court) very high words take place, though only from eight to ten paces distant from the Officers' rooms. This closed the case for the prosecution, and Lieut. Bellairs applied to the Court to grant him until Friday to prepare his defence, and the Court was accordingly adjourned for that purpose. Lieut. Bellairs was assisted by Mr. Colquhoun, a Solicitor, of Woolwich, and brother to Capt. Colquhoun, of the Royal Artillery; also by his father, the Rev. Mr. Bellairs.

The first half-yearly examination of the 25 shipwrights' apprentices, in Portsmouth Dock-yard, under the instruction in naval architecture of Mr. Blessley, draughtsman, took place on Saturday last, before R. Blake, T. Aylen, and W. Edye, Esqrs., the principal officers in that department, when the first prize, awarded by the Admiralty for the best drawing, was presented by the Rt.-Adm. Superintendent, Sir F. Maitland, to James Wardl, and the second to Richard Dawson. The prizes were cases of shipwrights' drawing instruments, each of the value of 45s. To stimulate those youths in the prosecution of their studies, one similar prize will be granted by the Admiralty quarterly.

Naval Cutlass Exercise.—Mr. Angelo exercised the Officers and seamen, on board H.M.S. Excellent, lately, before the Lords Com. of the Admiralty, &c., and has restored the system of instruction to nearly the same mode as that which he formed for the service of H. M.'s Navy in 1813.

The Gulnare, Plymouth and Jersey packet, was lost on 8th inst. This vessel was formerly a gentleman's yacht.

We have refrained from noticing the ridiculous paragraphs which have appeared respecting an expected visit by the Dublin folks of the Experimental Squadron. Knowing there is not sufficient water at Kingstown for line-of-battle ships, the reports bore upon the face the marks of fabrication. We stated a fortnight since the fleet would put into Cove.

It is generally believed in the naval circles here, that Capt. Gray will be appointed to the new frigate Inconstant, 36, after her trial with the Pique shall have terminated.—Portsmouth Correspondent of Morning Chronicle. In noticing, in our Gazette of 5th Sept., 1835, Capt. the Hon. Frederick Grey's appointment to the command of the Jupiter, fitted for the purpose of conveying the Governor General to India, we expressed a hope that the acceptance of a temporary command, which, as we then surmised, would not occupy more than twelve months, would not prejudice this officer's claim for a ship, which for time out of mind has been the practice to grant to the Private Secretary (if a naval officer) on the First Lord's quitting office. We do not think there is a single case existing, for the last century, where this rule has been departed from, and we hope that a precedent will not now be made, either to the prejudice of this or any other officer, who has satisfactorily performed the arduous and ill-requited duties of Private Secretary, besides possessing high professional reputation.

The Menelaus frigate is just taken out of dock at Chatham, having had a thorough repair. The Hawke, 74, at same place, is untigged, being no longer required as a demonstration ship.

The Dolphin has sailed from Sheerness with 20,000*l.*, for Cape of Good Hope, and the Alban st. from Woolwich, with same sum, for Barbadoes. Lieut. Waugh, late Confiance, is daily expected to commission the Blazer steamer. Mr. Carrington will be Clerk in charge.

The Sovereign and Prince Regent transports remain at Deptford for orders; and the Arab, Numa, and the Stokesby also.

The Lady Nugent freight-ship is discharging a cargo of rum at Deptford Victualling-yard, from Liverpool.

Sailed the John convict-ship for New South Wales, leaving the Norfolk fitting at Deptford for same destination.

The Warrant Officers of ship buildings and residing on shore, are paid in money in lieu of drawing their provisions and taking them on shore.

The Prince Regent, Imaum of Muscat's yacht, is further detained at Deptford, it is reported to take out Lord Elphinstone, to present it to the above Sovereign.

There is no truth in the report respecting the dissolution of the Royal Yacht Squadron. It was never in a more flourishing condition than at present, its funds having doubled within the last two years.

Royal Marines, Woolwich Division.—On Tuesday last the men were marched to the Common, to exercise and drill, by the Adjutant, Lieut. M'Arthur.

The Firebrand st.-yt., Master Allen, has arrived at Woolwich, and brought up alongside the Charger depot, to take in a fresh supply of fuel.

We cannot believe that it was ever seriously contemplated to break up the Victory, associated as this ship is with so many proud and gratifying recollections. The report that such was the intention has been propagated more than once, but we trust without foundation; and we hope the vessel which bore the flag of the immortal Nelson, and led the Fleet to victory, will be preserved as long as her planks shall hold together. Although, perhaps, not in a condition for sea service, and, from the increased size of three-deckers adopted by this and other countries, of too small a comparative force to take her station in the line as such, she is well-qualified for the duty in which she is now fitting, to bear the flag of the Admiral Superintendent, and the officers and men of the Ordinary upon the new establishment. The inspection of this ship, and the spot where the Hero received his death-wound, as well as the Midshipmen's Berth where he breathed his last at the moment of victory, are never neglected by the numerous persons who are attracted annually to visit Portsmouth, being our principal Naval Arsenal.

A fire was discovered in Portsmouth Dock-yard about 11 o'clock at noon on Wednesday, in a room used by the Inspectors of Work to make up their books, but how it occurred no one can give the slightest information. The Admiral Superintendent, Sir F. L. Maitland, was one of the first on the spot; and, through his directions and example, aided by seven or eight engines, and a large body of police, and Dock-yard parties, the flames were soon subdued, without any serious damage. The room is opposite a building used for steeping hemp in tar, and, if it had communicated, the consequences would have been dreadful. Sir Fred. Maitland was foremost in climbing a ladder, and entering the room, to direct operations.

We have letters from the squadron in the Mediterranean, dated 25th Aug. Off Syra:—Caledonia (flag), Thunderer, Revenge, Canopus, Edinburgh, Favourite, & Medea, were at anchor. They had been cruising, and, off Piræus, met with a French squadron, consisting of St. Jean, 92 guns (flag); Triton, 92 (Commodore's pendant); Montbello, 120; Sainte Peter, 80; Ville de Marseilles, 80; Diligente (bark); and four brigs. On the 7th Aug. the two squadrons put to sea, and proceeded to Calemaki Bay, near Corinth, to endeavour to gain tidings of Mr. Cooper, late Purser of the Portland, and make search for his body; but, although aided by some of the natives, the French Officers, and a guard of Bavarian soldiers, their object was not successful; and it is now thought he must have fallen into one of the numerous wells in that neighbourhood, covered with long grass and rushes. The two squadrons remained there three days, and then proceeded to Paros, to complete water, and on the 15th August sailed for Syra. Barham had gone to Tripoli, Vernon to Vourla, Asia had not joined.

Lieut. Chambers, of the Racer, came passenger to the Skylark packet, at Falmouth, in charge of the Master and a seaman of a slaver which the Racer has captured.

Capt. the Honourable George Elliot has paid two or three official visits on board the Excellent, to inspect the gun-practice, in which he takes great interest, being one of the first Officers who devised improvements in Naval gunnery.

H.M.S. Winchester has gone down the Malabar coast to collect treasure, with which she returns to Bombay.—Madras Gazette, April 13.

Coleridge tells a story of meeting a stranger, whose silence during dinner time, and his attention to what others said, without interrupting them, gave him a favourable impression of his understanding, till, unfortunately, on the appearance of some apple dumplings towards the close of the repast, the delusion was dissipated by the stranger suddenly exclaiming, "Them's the jockies for me!"

In 1599, Queen Elizabeth appointed Sir Henry Palmer Comptroller of the Navy, with a salary of 50l. per annum; for his two Clerks an allowance was made of 8d. a-day; and for his travelling expenses he received 4s. a-day.

Lieut. Dickeson, 17th, Ens. Christie, 80th, and a Serjeant and 26 men, have embarked on board the John convict ship, at Deptford, as a guard for New South Wales.

The Lord William Bentinck.—Great and unnecessary alarm has been occasioned by the publicity given to various rumours affirming the loss of this fine ship. These have had their origin in the first very vague report which reached Lloyd's on Sept. 8, in a letter dated Scrabay, May 5, which we now quote verbatim:—"The James Pattison and Susan have arrived at Point Panca from Sydney. Capt. Cromarty, of the former vessel, reports the probable loss of the Lord William Bentinck, that left Sydney with them. When off the Barrier Reef, they encountered a very severe gale, which lasted 48 hours. These two ships succeeded in weathering the gale, with the loss of three anchors, but the Lord William Bentinck they have seen nothing of since, although they waited in Torres' Straits five days. She had on board four hundred troops, and was bound to Bombay." In this vague report there is nothing to excite any great feeling of alarm for the safety of this ship, as other vessels which left Sydney subsequently to those ships, going the same passage, and bound for Batavia, had arrived there without the 21st of May, and report no accidents to shipping. The next report of the loss of the Lord William Bentinck appears in The Salisbury Herald, upon the authority of a Portsmouth correspondent, who very feelingly adds so, "and all on board." The fact of there being no later arrivals from this quarter than this received on the 8th Sept. disposes of this second report as an unfeeling falsehood. Next comes a splendid Irish report in The Newry Telegraph, and copied into The Times and Herald of Wednesday:—"We have been favoured with the sight of an extract of a letter from Mrs. Bonvere, the wife of Major Bonverie, who was on board the Lord William Bentinck with his regiment, confirming the loss of this ship, and stating that all on board had been saved except five, and that all the officers had been saved." We have examined the Sydney newspapers, and find the passengers on board the Lord William Bentinck to be Captains Church, Peeles, Lord Cecil Gordon, and Miller; Lieuts. Hackett, Thomas, Bonrchier, and De Burgh; Dr. Donnhoe, 13 sergeants, 11 corporals, 4 drummers, 193 privates, 23 women, 31 children, in all 313, being the second division of the 17th regt. (the first division having sailed from Sydney eight days before in the ship John Barry). In vain did we look for Major Bouverie and his lady; and, on inquiry at the head-office, we find that in 1835 he was removed from the 17th to the 86th Regt.; and, continuing our search further, we find that the said Major Bonverie and his lady are amongst the passengers in the ship Hercules, Capt. Daniel, which ship sailed from Sydney for London in December last, and off the Falkland Islands had half of her poop carried away, with the mate, both mates, and two passengers, five in all. In thus taking the pains to relieve the fears of the relatives of those who are on board the ship Lord William Bentinck from unnecessary apprehension, we have only further to express our confident hope that in due time we shall have accounts of the safe arrival of the John Barry and the Lord William Bentinck at Bombay. —Morning Chronicle. [This is the fact which has so erroneously been connected with the loss of the Lord William Bentinck, respecting the fate of which there is still the most sanguine hope that she will be soon reported as safely arrived at Bombay.—Ed.]

Major-General Lluce does not succeed General Ross in the Lieut.-Governorship of this Island (Guernsey), having been appointed Com.-in-Chief of the Western District, in the place of Sir W. Cotton, who takes the command at Bombay. General Ross's functions cease on the 26th of this month.—Channel Islands' Gazette.

Maj.-Gen. Sir Willoughby Cotton, K.C.H., has been placed upon the staff of the army serving in the East Indies, instead of Maj.-Gen. Sir Wm. M'Bean, K.C.B., who has declined the appointment.

The Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, wore by the late Duke of Gordon, has been bestowed on Lieut.-General Lord Aylmer.

Orders have been issued for the embarkation at Cork on board, tonnage to be provided by the Admiralty, of the following regiments from Ireland, viz. the service cos. of the 18th to proceed to Ceylon, to relieve the 78th regt. The service cos. of the 35th to proceed to the Mauritius, to relieve the 90th. The service cos. of the 82d to proceed to Gibraltar, to replace the 47th, to go on to Malta, to replace the 5th, to be moved to the Ionian Islands, to replace the 2nd batt. of the Rifle Brigade.

The Royal Castle of Chester.—The new and commodious barracks which are now being prepared for the reception of several hundreds of soldiers are in a state proceeding rapidly towards completion. The building is situate in the Higher Wards, and commands extensive views of rich and variegated scenery. When finished, it is admitted by competent judges that this military station will be equalled by few, and surpassed by none, in England, possessing the essential requisites so desirable for the health, comfort, and accommodation of congregated numbers. The apartments for the officers, occupied by the Judges during the assizes, are now completed.

A SEA BALLAD.

The cold night wind is shrieking
Across a waste of foam,
A lone one's heart is breaking
With thoughts of land and home.
"Ah me!—that I must roam
From the valley rich and fair,
My father's happy dwelling—
No angry surges swelling,
No bitter storms are there!

He warned me (sadly weeping)
O' th' perils of the sea,
And now, perchance, he's sleeping,
Nor dreams how great they be;
Alas! I cannot flee,
And when I tell my fear,
My husband's boisterous smiling,
His ship-mates' rough derisling,
Is all the hope I hear!

I know that this repining
Is all too late,—too late!
There never was lamenting
Could turn the wheel of Fate;
The long dim day I hate,
And midnight mocks mine eye
With flower-embroidered meadows,
And trees with peaceful shadows:
O let me—let me die!"

Personal Security.—Sir Frederick Felix O'Brien Flask was an Irish baronet of the best blood, with more tenants than acres, and more bags than both. Sir Frederick had his horses, his servants, his tilbury, his subscription at the opera, and the usual necessary et ceteras for a man of fashion. In addition to these, Sir Frederick had the unusual and unnecessary appendage of a love affair. Sir Frederick wished to get married—the lady had a fortune and settlements were required. Sir Fredrick settled his Irish property upon his fair intended, but Ireland was in an unsettled state itself, and some little additional provision was required by the lady's friends. Sir Frederick was determined to raise money; and having inquired from a friend the name of his banker, in Nicholes-lane, he stepped into the house with a free, jaunty, dashing air, and asked for one of the partners. It happened to be Mr. Rogers' day for business, and to Mr. Rogers Sir Frederick was ushered. His fine aristocratical air bespoke Mr. Rogers' attention immediately, and with his most winning smile, the Poet of Memory requested to know Sir Frederick's business. "I want two or three thousand pounds, can your house accommodate me?" "Without doubt, Sir; we shall have great pleasure in doing so—may I ask on what security?" "Oh, personal security, personal security," replied Sir Frederick, adjusting his cravat. Mr. Rogers smiled—"Will you walk this way, Sir?" he then opened a small door and led the way through various apartments and passages until they arrived at a small room fitted up with fire-proof deed cases, and other places of security—when taking a small gold Bramah's key from his waistcoat pocket, and opening a large safe or closet—holding the door in his hand, with a small sly look of the eye—Mr. Rogers turned to Sir Frederick and said, "I must trouble you to walk in here, Sir Frederick." "Walk in there? walk in there? what for, Sir? what for, Sir?" "Oh, my dear Sir, we always keep our securities in that closet." Sir Frederick was flabbergasted, and never again offered to raise money on his personal security.

TRISTRAM'S LAST ON THE MASTING OF THE RAZEES AND THE VANGUARD.

Sir,—Pray present my compliments to your correspondent Nauticus, and inform him that, with all due deference and respect to his superior and unerring judgment and great experience, gained in "beating up three times to Barbadoes from Jamaica, and, besides bring once at Halifax crossed and re-crossed the Atlantic," yet I am far, very far, from being convinced that "I have fallen into a great error in recommending to Sir William Symonds a reduction in the masts of the Alfred, Barham, and Dublin."*

If your correspondent be the same who wrote under that signature in your Gazette in 1834, supporting our Sailor-Surveyor's perfect system of Naval Architecture, I am somewhat surprised that he should not recollect that I wrote, in No. 86 of that year, a letter upon the masting of ships of war; and again, in other colloquies with that officer, in Numbers 169 and 149, wherein I fully explained by fair argufication, my reasons in support of my suggestions, and also in No. 185, which, with a few other remarks upon that Arx, capsizing subject, I most humbly submit to the opinion of the Naval community, leaving the "chapter of accidents" which may again turn up to prove whether I am in error or not.*

Nauticus, from three years' experience in one of those ships, is induced to recommend the masts of the Barham razée to be increased to her proper size!!! by which by means, her original masts, 74's; consequently, deeper courses and heavier rigging, although her draught of water is two feet less than when a 74! In any breeze, it has been proved, the Barham is outcarried by the Vernon, although the stiffest of the three razées; and the Cleopatra, 26, now carries the Dublin, 50! Can it then be considered an error in Tristram's judgment to suggest that the Alfred, on being commissioned, should be masted like one of the old double-decked 50's, and the weight between a 50's and a 74's equipment added to her ballast? Has not the Magicienne had her masts reduced, and a reduction of ballast of 160 tons? Is she not in consequence a superior ship, carrying her guns higher, and being more lively and nimble in a sea way? Have I not in my several letters animadverted upon the inappropriate masting of our ships of war, and have not disastrous consequences from that inappropriate masting, within these last few months, in three cases out of four, been most unhappily realized: the Barham springing her masts; an 18-gun brig in the East Indies, thrown on her beam-ends, saving herself by the sacrifice of her masts; the Star, ship-rigged packet, on her beam-ends and dismasted in the Atlantic; the Quail cutter, in the Bay of Biscay, also on her beam-ends and dismasted. How many human souls paid the forfeit of overmasting!! Has not the Columbine corvette been surprisingly improved since her transmogrification into a brig; the Star into a brig or brigantine; the Basilisk cutter into a ketch; the ten-gun brig packets by the reduction of their yards and sails; and the Magicienne of her general equipment? Then why should not the Barham, Alfred, and Dublin be as likely to be improved by my suggestion to rig them as the double-decked 50's, keeping them on their present line of flotation by extra ballast? Whilst the Barham is evidently overmasted, which solely occasions her uneasiness, spar-springing, crankness, and leeway; and whilst the Vernon is LAGGED, with her heavy bowsprit, foremast, and mizen-mast, the superior sailing qualities of either of those splendid ships will remain as unknown to the world as the amorous glances exchanged between "My eye and Betty Martin's."

As Nauticus positively and publicly asserts that "I have fallen into a great error respecting the masting of the razées," I think he should have supported his assertion by some better reasons than "as the Barham has sprung a mainmast and a foremast, there cannot be a greater proof than that the reduction of her masts has made her uneasy!" Brother sailors, his letter stands in the columns of the Naval and Military, for those who choose to read, believe, and learn from his experience, gained "in beating up three times to Barbadoes from Jamaica, &c."

But about all you say—about all you saw,
Monsieur Nauticus, je ne vous entends pas.

It is very seldom I presume to differ in opinion with my dear friend Mr. Editor, especially in this instance, backed as you see by "a moderate man," and both recommending

* [It is not the same,—and it would avoid much confusion if new correspondents did not assume the signatures of old ones when addressing us.—Ed.]

that "the Vanguard should be masted up to her stability," viz. with the masts, yards, and sails of the St. Vincent's class. If so, and the TITANS were in existence, they could borrow her mainmast to envelope the sky!!! I have formed my opinion of masting in overhauling, with "my pair of blue eyes," the beautiful models of our Sailor-Surveyor's ships in Somerset House. In No. 140, December last year, I remarked that the "Rodney," although 2600 tons only, yet her mainmast is 41 yards long, eight yards longer than the American Leviathan, the Pennsylvania, of 3306 tons. The Vanguard has the same masts, yet A Moderate Man will have her masted up to her stability, at least, in an equal degree to the French ships of war, that outmasting the Americans, whose ships and clippers "keep their sea-legs on board" under their "walking-sticks;" but when they captured the English 18-gun brig Eperrier, she foundered the first cruise under the star-spangled flag, but English masts, which carried about a dozen others I have named down to the ocean's fathomless pit!!! Do we hear of their ships of war springing their lower masts—their clippers, brigs, or packets, being thrown on their beam-ends—green seas sweeping the decks of both masts and crews? In the same letter I further remarked to friend Symonds—"The Vanguard is also to be so masted, although, by the old admeasurement of tonnage, she is 300 tons less than the Rodney; but I see thy drift—in that determination thou will prove that the Vanguard can carry as much sail, with less ballast, as the Rodney, * * * * * * and having so exhibited her superior qualities, in all weathers, as to stability, ease, and sailing, then wilt then give her 98's masts, yards, &c. (the old Boyne's for instance) when the Vanguard will lead the van of any Fleet in the world." Although the Rodney has not yet been placed in the line of competition with the Vanguard, yet I am borne out by the Vanguard's every action, that she requires less ballast, as she has already been relieved of 40 tons. I am aware that I cannot stand against the over-masting mania, I must (though much against my opinion) yield a little to the popular cry of "mast up to stability;" I would, therefore, give her the St. Vincent's mainmast, but dock her bowsprit, fore-mast, and mizen-mast to the length of the old 98's, and land 40 tons more ballast, which she will be enabled to do, as her hull is 207 tons heavier, than the Rodney, being built principally of African oak, and 300 tons less to burthen by the old tonnage. The Vanguard is shorter than the Rodney, broader beamed, consequently, finer, under the water-line, at the bow and stern; under such appropriate masts she will feel light in her heel and forefoot, will more nimbly still, but majestically, march to lead the van. Behold her, then, what a British man-of-war should be,—capable of carrying a belly-full of water, provisions, and grog, to feed and cheer the hearts of her crew, besides a regiment of 800 strong, stowing away the camp, equipage, drums, and ALL, and surplus stores to refit—of overhauling an enemy on any point of sailing—of braving the storm—of sustaining the contact of strand or cork—of mounting a battery to maintain the honour of her country's vision, dominions, laws, and faith, in the pride and majesty of a British man-of-war," to do her duty as England expects."

"She'll range the main in stately motion,
Sometimes high, and sometimes low,
To act her part upon the ocean,
Whatsoever winds may blow."

Could I but persuade our Sailor-Surveyor to mast the rasées, Vernon and Vanguard, after my suggestions, his most gracious Majesty would then, in the pages of Chivalry, rate him a BARONET, as sure as I have the honour and pleasure of being acknowledged and rated in the pages of the Naval and Military Gazette, his most faithful and thy everlasting friend, THISTLEMAN.

PRACTICE AND FORMS OF COURTS-MARTIAL.

SIR,—The insertion of the enclosed in your valuable Journal will oblige

United Service Club. SIMPLAX.

To Colonel D'Aguilar.—On Courts-Martial.

SIR,—There is, perhaps, no one to whom the Army is more generally indebted than to you for the assistance afforded them by your able "observations on the practice and forms of Courts-Martial," and to you, therefore, I venture to address the following remarks, hoping that, should they meet your approbation, you will use your influence with the highest powers for their adoption.

I shall begin then by assuming, without fear of contradiction, that Courts-Martial being Courts of Equity, and not of Law, the less they are encumbered with forms and technicalities the more likely they will be to fulfil the ends of justice; every form beyond that necessary for a clear statement of the facts of a case weakens it, by leaving a loop-hole in case of omission, through which the guilty may more readily escape. If this be admitted, I shall ask, first —Why is the prisoner called upon to plead, when his pleading is, most properly, not allowed to have any effect upon the proceedings of the Court, and when such a demand can only be an unnecessary encouragement to falsehood? Secondly—When the prisoner has been found guilty by a District Court-Martial, the Adjutant is obliged to appear, and swear to character and former convictions, neither of which he can swear to (particularly in the case of a Depot Adjutant) from personal knowledge. Now, if a man is tried at a distance from his regiment, the personal attendance of the Adjutant with the Court-Martial books is often extremely inconvenient, and (what is important at head-quarters) sometimes expensive; it has, therefore occurred to me that a certificate, signed by the Commanding Officer of the corps to which the prisoner belongs, stating that he has been warned, giving an extract of his former convictions, his character and services, would be more in accordance with the late Act of Parliament which abolishes oaths when they can in any way be dispensed with, and by no means less binding than an oath from the Adjutant; indeed, the wilful or negligent breach of the one or the other would be respectively attended with the same punishment. If such a certificate were enclosed in a sealed cover to the President, it need not be opened until after the finding, and the original might then be attached to the proceedings, as in the case of the Surgeon's certificate.

Extreme simplicity and uniformity in the proceedings of Courts-Martial, particularly where a Judge Advocate is not allowed, are the most likely means of ensuring the ends of justice, and I cannot but think that the writing the number of the regiment to which the members, &c. belong, in letters instead of numerals, and various other minute technicalities exacted from Courts-Martial in India, must tend rather to subvert than assist them. General Officers have been known to return the proceedings of Courts-Martial for trifling clerical errors; but were they to consider for a moment, they would admit that the most learned clerk is not always the most honest man, and we doubt whether they themselves would not prefer being tried by a Court composed of their brother officers, to any other which could be formed even by the first lawyers in the country.

Perhaps, through your mediation, some simple and concise form might be established for the guidance of Courts-Martial, and enforced, not only in Great Britain, but throughout the British Army.

Should my observations not meet with your approbation, they may perhaps induce you to turn your attention to the subject, in which case my object will be fully attained, and I shall hope to participate in the results of your experience.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

United Service Club, 20th Sept. SIMPLAX.

PATRONAGE AND DISCIPLINE OF THE NAVY, &c.

SIR,—I beg to return you my best thanks for your insertion of my letter of the 18th ult., and at the same time to express my cordial approbation of the sentiments prefixed to your leading article of last week, "that free discussion upon all points connected with the Service is the certain mode of eliciting truth." In an editorial note to the first paragraph of that letter, you suggest the propriety of adducing some authenticated instances of oppression being exercised towards Naval Lieutenants. I am sorry to say such might be too readily supplied—they are almost as numerous as the officers of which that rank is composed; but why have recourse to individual cases, when we find that hundreds of those officers have been turned over by the Admiralty to services where no law existed but the will or caprice of the officer in command—where the regulations of the Navy have been admitted when it was desired to oppress an officer, but, when appealed to in his defence, the reply has been—the peculiarity of the Service required a departure from the general rules of the Navy! I allude, Mr. Editor, to the late Blockade Service on the Coast of Kent and Sussex, and to the present Coast Guard Service, which is, if possible, worse and more oppressive; where, so far from the Admiralty interfering (although officers are appointed by the Board) to prevent any act of injustice, however flagrant, that a Lieutenant of the Navy in that service has not the right of communicating with the Comptroller or Inspector-General. Look at the position in which officers in command of revenue cruisers are placed. They are expected at once to possess a knowledge of cutter-sailing—to be acquainted with the Coast upon which they are stationed—to administer the revenue laws—to keep the most complicated accounts and maintain an extensive correspondence, at the same time to preserve a proper degree of discipline on board their vessels, and all this at the risk of their character as officers, and maybe of their commissions, while no power is confided to them at all adequate to such great responsibility. Their appointment lasts but for three years—that of their Mates and crew are permanent, by which they are acquainted with all the minutiæ of the Service, and therefore can thwart and oppose the Commander whenever they please to make common cause against him. In short, the Chief Mates are the real Commanders of these vessels, while the duty is performed at the responsibility of the Lieutenant.

Nor are the Lieutenants in command of King's vessels cutters, steamers, &c. better off, who, instead of being allowed some steady respectable officer, upon whom dependence could be placed during the absence of the Commander, these officers have no one interposed between them and the crew but a parcel of young men as Midshipmen and Second Masters, who are constantly on shore, and require more looking after than the men. If a Surgeon be appointed to a Lieutenant's command, he, in truth, must mess with the Commander, who is in that case at all times liable to have his privacy broken in upon, notwithstanding the various and onerous duties which devolve upon him. But all these evils, Mr. Editor, are but the results of a cause, which, if not remedied in time, threatens the most disastrous consequences to the Navy of this country. It is manifest to every person at all conversant with the subject, that the entire Naval Service is suffered to remain without any general system of discipline among the men, or promotion among the officers, and that the whole government of the Fleet consists of a number of contrivances and expedients, without harmony or connexion with each other; and the Navy of England, instead of being fostered and cherished with the most anxious attention, has been converted into a field upon which a political scramble takes place upon every change of administration; and the Board of Admiralty, instead of being enabled to devote the extensive patronage at their disposal to the general welfare of the Service, are obliged in consequence to confer it upon political adherents, to maintain themselves in office. I do believe, had the most inveterate enemy to the British Navy devised a system to render that Service as inefficient as possible, he could not have proposed one more calculated to effect his object than by making the Admiralty a political board, rendering the promotion of officers altogether dependent upon favour, and paying off the crews at the end of each three years. In the latter case no provision whatever is made to accumulate the results of experience, not to establish any principle of Naval discipline; but at the expiration of the allotted period, new ships are commissioned by fresh officers, different crews, and probably under the control of a new Board of Admiralty; all, therefore, is hurry, ignorance, and confusion until the succeeding three years have nearly expired, when the same scene is to be again enacted, until every trace of Naval discipline is at length obliterated. What would any man think, Mr. Editor, if each regiment of the Line were disbanded every three years? What state of discipline—what degree of professional knowledge would an army exhibit? The writer of this letter put that query a short time since to a distinguished Military officer;—the emphatic reply was, "Our men would be always recruits."

It is by no means meant to be inferred that the present or any former Board of Admiralty are chargeable with the above evils; but that they are evils of great magnitude, calling loudly for redress, no man acquainted with the Naval Service will deny, and their injurious effects are becoming every day more apparent in the relaxed discipline and progressive deterioration of the Fleet.

It is not by a relaxed state of discipline that the prejudices of the country are to be conciliated and reconciled to the Naval Service; those who think so are but little acquainted with the feelings and opinions of that valuable class of men. The memorable statement of Sir Edward Codrington, when the subject of corporal punishment was under consideration, ought never to be forgotten—"That it was one of the especial grievances brought forward by the seamen of the ship to which he belonged at the time of the Mutiny, that from the absence of punishment the best men had to perform the duty of the worst."

Discipline, Mr. Editor, is not so much the effect of power as the result of habit and experience; it is of slow growth and requires time, attention, and intelligence upon the part of the several officers of a ship to produce it. There appears to have been a moral dry-rot crept into the Naval Service which will require some more effectual antidote to counteract than the principle patented by Mr. Kyan, valuable as it is. Should you, Sir, deem these remarks worthy of a place in your excellent publication, I purpose in my next to offer some suggestions for the correction of those evils in the administration of Naval affairs, which every well-wisher to that important service must deplore.

A CONSERVATIVE.

[We have elsewhere noticed this communication; but in expressing our opinions we have no wish to discourage Conservative in publishing his sentiments. What we require is, the production of facts in support of argument; and, as he is evidently no novice, we do expect his future correspondence will tend to benefit the service.—ED.]

EARLY AND IMPROVIDENT MARRIAGES IN THE ROYAL NAVY.

SIR,—Among all your valuable and interesting Correspondents, I have not observed one who has touched on the cause of Poverty and Distress incident to our service, namely, early and improvident Marriages. Our services one of universal suffrage. Men of the most obscure origin have and may yet arrive at the highest situations in the Navy. We are composed of nobility, gentry, and the hardy sons of Neptune; the latter, after passing ten or twelve years, obtaining a commission, immediately think of settling on shore and taking a wife, frequently choosing one from his early associates, without a shilling to keep off poverty. Love being the plea, for a time Cupid plays the fiddle, but on an increase of Family he escapes, and Poverty enters. He then seeks employment, is hardly able to pay his mess, and should his ship clear for action, instead of being fired with manly ardour, his heart falls into his breeches, and he thinks of the deplorable state his family may be left in should his head be knocked off—namely, a parish workhouse: there is an old song that says, "what cannot be cured must be endured." All those poor and meritorious officers should have every possible assistance from their more wealthy brethren; my advice goes to the rising generation. Any Officer of the Navy, from a lieutenant upwards, has fair pretensions to look for fortune, provided his character stands high; and numberless are the women possessing wealth who would rejoice at being allied to true Blue, as they generally make good husbands. No officer in future should marry unless his intended has enough to pay her Mess and support the Bairns: soon we should hear no more of the Naval Charitable Fund, or schools for the support of orphan children; only let our young officers respect themselves, having once obtained rank, not lose caste, and bring disgrace on themselves and the profession, by voluntarily descending to poverty. The pay and half-pay of an officer is given for his personal support, and not to maintain a family; therefore any man who forgets this eventually suffers and loses his independance. I would recommend to all our officers carefully to avoid contracting alliances beneath them, for, as certain as any problem in Euclid, misery will ensue, and then the Member for Middlesex may with some propriety call them a dead weight; besides, no man can fight courageously who is diseased in body or mind. I make no apology to the juniors for trespassing on their attention, having passed the best part of my life in the naval service of my country.

AN OLD ADMIRAL.

ROYAL NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

SIR,—We in this distant part of the kingdom have read with surprise the statements laid before the members of the "Royal Naval Charitable Society" by Nauticus and other praiseworthy contributors to your widely circulated paper; not having the slightest conception that there was such extravagant waste of the funds of so noble an institution. There appears such inconsistency in the fact of the Secretary being allowed (independent of his salary of 60*l.*) a 5 per cent. commission on all money he receives, that we wish to know upon what just grounds he has a per-centage. I know well that my agent always sends the annual subscriptions of his clients to the Secretary, and very naturally conclude all others are similarly paid. When I resided in London and had no agent, the Secretary neither personally or otherwise informed me of my contribution having become due, always being obliged to take or send it to him. In consequence of absence from London some years since it fell into arrear; no notice to that effect did I receive. This, and many similar instances, is a convincing proof of the great necessity of a "managing committee," as recommended by your correspondent, Old Member. It would, no doubt, be the means of reducing our present "expenses," and by their gratuitous services increase the annual receipts,—two very desirable objects. There is another item I wish to be clearly explained, that is, the charge of 8*l.* 8*s.* (as stated by Nauticus) made by the Secretary for personal inquiries relative to parties applying for relief that are residing in London; is this consistent with the management of a Charitable Institution, where "economy" ought to be the leading feature? Then connected with several benevolent societies, and no charge of this description is allowed. Look at the "advertisement expenses;" contrast them with the "Royal Naval Asylum Society," as alluded to by Old Member; in fact, the whole of the arrangements much require the sweeping broom of "reform." On my visit to London last year I had some difficulty in finding our office (not having been in the metropolis since the Secretary's retirement from Somerset House, which period he performed those duties there), naturally supposing, as in the case of public societies generally, that their name would appear in some conspicuous place, instead of (as is the case) only the name of the Secretary on a very small brass plate. A Member, just returned from London, informs me he had similar difficulty, not immediately knowing the Secretary's name. We certainly ought not to be subjected to this inconvenience, though it might militate against the Secretary's other occupations; still the convenience of the members ought to be the primary consideration, and I trust the London Members will cause the Society's name to appear boldly; by so doing it no doubt would give more publicity to the existence of so laudable a charity, and consequently increase our list of donors, instead of its being almost unseen and unknown. In short, without the slightest particle of invidious feeling towards the Secretary, but in justice to the profession of which I have the honour to be an old member, the office of Secretary ought to be filled by a Naval member, more particularly in this time of peace, when so many half-pay officers with large families are striving hard to exist. It is no "charity" in permitting the present Secretary to hold the appointment, in addition to his hundreds a-year retirement. I, in conjunction with many other members in this part of the world, decidedly am of opinion that the Secretaryship should be enlisted for immediately, more particularly if such reports as have reached us here be true—that is to say, "a want of courtesy" on the part of the present Secretary to ladies and the junior officers that call upon him at the office.

Our sincere acknowledgments are due, and we most willingly respond to the call of an Old Member, in writing our thanks to those gentlemen who have shown up the incongruities in the management of the Society; and I sincerely hope our brother members, more particularly the London residents, will persevere to improve the present impoverished state of our funds, and revise the existing laws of our Society. "Reform and Retrenchment" should be our motto. For your attention to our several interests, we request your acceptance of our heartfelt thanks.

REPLY FROM CINCINNATUS TO PHILO-NUMA.

Still further, P. N., speaking of the Coast Guard Service, calls it "a system created by borough corruption, in the worst times of borough jobbing:" and again, "it has been only an establishment for patronage, as I can prove." Now, in opposition to this statement, let us look to Numa on the formation of the Coast Guard Service. He states, the Civil Inspecting Commanders recommended themselves to be appointed, and their subordinates became Civilian Chief Officers, or Sitters; and that these officers acted under the orders of the Commissioners of Customs, to suppress smuggling, or to create the service. Here, now, Mr. Editor, we discover Philo-Numa with new light confuting his beloved father, Numa. He comes forth to laud him, and to praise him, yet at the same time saps the foundation of his structure, and in the end undermines his arguments, although, in the same breath, he passes an encomium on the very argument he destroys by such an all-communicating, and wholesale-defying epithet as IRREFUTABLE! But, in reply to me, he confutes no statement I have made, but merely uses invective threatenings; and but for want of meaning in the number of interrogatories, one would suppose he had assumed the function of bill-filer in the Court of Chancery! But, to be serious, which are we to believe? Numa, that the Coast Guard Service was framed by the Commissioners to put down smuggling, or Philo-Numa, "That it was created for patronage." Now the Hon. the Commissioners of Customs, agreeable to Numa, called the service into being, and we all know it was called the preventive service to prevent contraband goods from being run or landed. It is well known, also, it most admirably answered the expectation of the Government and the Commissioners in the suppression of contraband traffic. I think many can state they understood the Coast Guard Service as a revenue service to protect the Coast, but, before this, I doubt if they ever dreamt of it being "created for patronage." I fear, Sir, P. N. has overshot the mark in his zeal to assist Numa; but Numa must give him absolution, for he had good intentions, though he has unseated him at the starting-post.

Let us now observe P. N. narrowly. He states that he can prove this—"that hitherto it has been only an establishment for patronage." He knows, also, the service costs Government and the country half-a-million annually, yet is under the impression that such service is for corrupt ends. Well, truly, this is rather a charitable sentiment to entertain of the Government, that they squander away 500,000*l.* sterling each year in corruption and supporting corruption; but passing this, let us examine the remedy P. N. advances or proposes.

Does he, like a true patriot, come forth to show that the money expended on the Coast Guard Establishment is misapplied? Is he prepared, or does he propose, through his patriotic friends, the members of the Legislature (I presume he alludes to J. Hume, Esq. M.P.), to show the inutility of the service, and have it abolished? No such thing; but corrupt as it is—bad as it is—make it purely Naval, and in doing so make a monopoly of it: exclude the working men (the Civilians); raise the pay of the Naval Chief Officers; give them districts and Post Captains; and then P. N. is content. No more faults—no more corruption—no more borough-jobbing—no more scandal!

Well, but P. N. will get patriotic Members to call for returns, and find out—what? Why, where the Civilians came from! Oh, worthy Philo! Well, my friend, this discovery will not so easily ascertain our longitude; but one thing I venture to assert, that the case of Civilian Chief Officers coming before the Legislature, will call forth the sympathy and feeling of every generous mind, and procure for them that justice which a generous community is ever willing to obtain for the deserving and the meritorious.

But let P. N. take high ground, an exalted position, and in confident strength come forward armed with proof that the Coast Guard service is uncalled for and should be abolished, to the saving of half a million to the country. If it be found, as he states, that the Coast Guard service cannot stand on its own merits, why let it perish a deserved death, but if it stand unshaken—if after the most sedulous examination and nervous search the service as at present efficiently wrought be found beneficial to the sea coast, the mercantile community, providential to the revenue, and effecting all manner of good, as I maintain it has done since its formation,—then I say continue it, and deal out even-handed justice and encouragement to all classes of his Majesty's subjects embodied in that noble service.

In all Ireland there are but two Civilian Inspecting Commanders, how they obtained their situation is no matter of any moment to me or to the public. How, why, or where they were appointed, or who may or may not get knowledge of it, must be a matter of pure indifference.

"By merit we ascend to fame."

The rank of Lieutenant or Commander will neither fit nor unfit any man for a certain duty in a civil service.

"Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow,
All else is nought but leather and prunella."

And if the necessary ingredient in every efficient servant of the crown, be absent, I care not what may be the rank or station, there is an unfitness for service, and if this be in the possession of the Chief Inspecting Commander or Chief Civilian Officer, they are perfectly adapted for their respective situations; but P. N. assents not to such a proposition, but because he cannot disprove it, has recourse to personal invective and slanderous statements. "He who uttereth a slander," says the proverb, "is a fool;" and he who for lack of argument descends to personalities, shows by his own weakness an important defeat, and the characteristic of a bad misguided heart.

Philo-Numa has condescended to ask me among other questions, "Is it to be borne" says he, "by right or usage, that Naval officers, having the rank of Commanders, should continue under the command of a Civilian?" To this I refer Philo-Numa to my last for a reply, at the same time I cannot help remarking, that as this is a civil service all rank ceases, or merges during the time of an officer's sojourn in the service; and the service beholds with equal respect the Inspecting Commander, whether a Post Captain or a Civilian. In like manner the service admits of no distinction between Chief officers, Naval or Civil, all are on terms of equality.

But I beg to observe, if all officers of the Army could not bear to act under Civilian Magistrates or Governors, and if the officers of the Navy refused to act except under a Military or Naval mode of government, why then we might fairly expect to see re-acted the days of Cromwell, and all order, discipline, and subordination banished from both services. Could the Duke of Wellington bear to serve under a Civilian, called Robert Peel, Esq., M. P.? One thing I am certain, the Inspecting Commanders bear their services remarkably well, as appears by the letter of Prefectus; but this far I will go and maintain, that the King's officer who would moot a question so dangerous, or a precedent so revolutionary, is a very fit person for the consideration of His Majesty's Government, to dismiss from all employment or situation.

But Philo-Numa states, "the service should be wholly Naval."

Valuable as the Naval force is, high and meritorious as the Naval officers are, and successful as they have ever been on duties connected with their sphere of action, yet, on the coast of Kent, as a Naval force, how have they acted, when fulfilling their duty in guarding the coast? The Naval force, I assert, as Coast Guards, were completely foiled, and their failure is admirably calculated to demonstrate, that

"like causes will produce like effects."

The Naval power of Great Britain, I trust, will ever be triumphant, ever maintain its proud position, and ever stand unrivalled in the universe; and so, I trust, it will ever appear in its native element, led on to glory by the Nelson, the Exmouth, or the Codrington of the age. But let not the Royal Navy, the boast of our kingdom, the glory of our islands, be displaced from the fair field of its fame to a road that will lead to temptation and end in defeat. And why? for obvious reasons; a British seaman is a well-paid and well-fed man, and well-clothed on board his ship,—if at sea, he takes his watch by turns, if in port, he sleeps all night; men of this character, who know their own ability as seamen, will not quietly submit to the slavish life of a Coast Guard boatmen, hence, we find them yielding to the first temptation, and flying with ill-gotten gain from both the service of the Coast and the duty imposed on them.

Fishermen, however, a community from which the Coast Guard men have been chiefly taken, are composed of very different materials; in youth they earn their bread by using the utmost diligence in their calling, and this is attended with great labour or hardship; enured to toil from their earliest days, they earn that bread scantily, and in many cases this hardy race of persons are barely able to maintain themselves by pursuing the life they have been trained in. By nature and by practice these men are capable of enduring any privation, almost men an appointment in this service is looked on as an unanticipated inde-pondence, he valuea it at the highest price, persuasions rarely tempt him to violate his duty, bribes have no availing charms for him, he is in a good situation, gets excellent pay, he duly appreciates the berth, dreads returning to his former life, and hence, in his new capacity, he becomes a good boatman, subject, and protector of the revenue.

With respect to the Naval force on the coast of Kent, it was justly abolished, to renew it would bring the Pimdorians again into existence; the same or a similar sport will be noted, the same course pursued, and the same destiny awaits its career.

But for argument sake, suppose it were a Naval service, would 10,000 fishermen man ten sail of the line? Would 10,000 Portsmouth or Plymouth watermen (were so many found), man ten sail of the line as well as 10,000 seamen? Would 10,000 Thames watermen, or Indians from the wilds of America, man ten sail of the line? To be sure they would (notwithstanding all the marine acumen of their politic Commanders); and, with Numa in the front, and Philo-Numa in the rear, they would cut as many strange capers as ever appeared marvellous in print, or ludicrous in painting; and while amusing themselves, the shores of the kingdom would be left unguarded and exposed to the attack of every steaming corsair or privateering banditti, that in case of war would swarm our own coast.

Having thus, Sir, replied to Philo-Numa, I wish now to observe as to what I have not done. I have not aimed at my foe and smote my friend. I have not lifted my heel with unavailing force against my superior or my master (whose friend I am as well as Philo), whose servants we both are. I have not had recourse to mis-statements or garbled words to obtain a redress of grievances. I have produced no line of competition between the moral conduct of Civilian or Naval Chief Officers, showing by dismissals, among whom crime most predominates or most abounds; but let the inquiry come when it will, truth will demonstrate facts, and justice, with even scale, weigh the merits or demerits of both parties, and the result I am by no means doubtful of.

In this letter I have forborne either to attack or threaten, nor can the one or the other ever induce me to swerve from the path of honesty, honour, and uprightness; let statement and counter-statement be laid on the Commons' table by patriotic or other members, every renewed inquiry or fresh development will only add additional laurels and multiplied honours to the brows of those officers who have already conducted the service into its present state of high discipline, order, and regularity, with prudence, courteousness, and efficacy.

In conclusion I beg to say, I reserve to myself the prerogative of following any path, either by a series of letters or otherwise, pledging myself to follow no distinct course, but be entirely guided by my own judgment as to what is past or may be forthcoming. Yes, Philo-Numa, though I have been brought up to the "plough," learn, it has been to plough the great deep. Yes, Sir, I have been, as it were, cradled in the Navy, and my health, strength, and blood, have been spent in defence of my country. I merely defend the Coast Guard from a principle of disinterested duty, and neither the jeers, scoffs, or derision of Philo-Numa or any other person shall blunt the arrows I have pointed at the interested few, who attack a class of men that under His Majesty are the most aggrieved. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

CINCINNATUS.

[We have had considerable trouble in correcting the extraordinary diction of this letter, in order to make it intelligible, and must therefore request our correspondent to bestow more attention on any future communications.—ED.]

SERVICE OF CORPS IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

SIR,—Advocating as you do the cause of those who have not the means or opportunity of battling for themselves, I hope you will not lose sight of our Botany Bay Service. From the period of the sailing of the first detachment of a regiment taking charge of convicts to Sydney, to the date of embarkation of the regiment for India, may be reckoned at five or six years. Surely this period should be included in the India Service, unless, indeed, Botany Bay is to be considered as a preparatory seasoning, for which we ought to be thankful. If such be the idea of the higher powers, I can only say they are wofully ignorant of the real fact, it being notorious that troops going from Sydney to India suffer far more than those proceeding direct from home. One cause possibly may be, that they are sent from these colonies without the slightest reference to the season. In no country in the world are soldiers more harassed than in New South Wales. Take everything connected with their comfort—the regiments scattered in detachments at distances from 10 to 1000 miles—the barracks tumbling about their ears (those at Sydney condemned long ago)—hospitals mere pigsties, except the one at Sydney, while those for the convicts are almost palaces. Then look at the duties of the soldier—harassing marches of 15 or 20 miles a-day, in charge of convicts, with a vagabond convict constable, whose orders the Serjeant must obey. When on guard over a road party, he will have to stand the whole day, except an hour for dinner, under a broiling sun and hot wind, the thermometer perhaps 120 degrees; and for these severe duties, distressing marches, and great wear and tear of boots and clothing, he gets not one farthing of extra allowance! So far from it, indeed, that I would ask a certain Commanding Officer the following simple questions. Was not an order issued to discontinue the ration of spirits, and substituting a penny a-day in lieu of it? That order being enforced, had not the soldier to pay sixpence a-day for his ration, when it actually cost government only fourpence-halfpenny or less? And lastly, I would ask him how the matter ended in his own crack corps, and what became of the order?

I appeal to every Commanding Officer whether a well-behaved convict is not, in almost every respect, better off than a soldier? I defy them to deny a fact as notorious as noon-day. During the short period since my arrival I have seen somewhat and heard more; I shall, however, content myself with only stating sufficient to show that the service in this country is no sinecure. You will ask why no complaint has ever been made. I will explain this in a few words. When we told one Chief that we found the blue surtout buttoned up to the throat, with sword and sash, quite intolerable in summer, he replied—"Oh, never mind, we shall not be long in the cursed country!" Besides, the thing has been tried over and over again, but to no purpose, as the orders to the Army do not specify this colony, and the General will not interfere!

The truth is, that while the soldiers are made to work like slaves, a certain quantity of colonial money is saved to be locked up in the chest. Yet it were ungrateful not to acknowledge the boons we do receive from the Colonial Government. Commandants are munificently rewarded for the trouble they (ought to) take in visiting the distant parts of their large districts, with 2*s.* 6*d.* per diem for the keep of an extra horse. Captains may at times pick up a Police Magistracy, with 10*s.*; and Subs are sometimes made Overseers (!!) of road-gangs with 5*s.* a-day, which include the expense of a horse (to be bought first), which is rarely less than 2*s.* 6*d.* a-day, and often double. I have heard one or two odd stories regarding the difficulty at one time of finding officers to succeed the Civilian Overseers; but I do not wish to say more than is necessary for my argument, besides that I might get our chiefs into hot water for remarks made by them, with more truth than prudence. I have taken the matter in hand myself, partly because I am likely to have a good dose of the colony in my own person, and partly because I am wearied of the eternal grumbling which takes place of all other conversation. I the other day received a letter from a friend having charge of a road gang, a long way off in the "Bush*." Himself and men are in bark huts far from impervious to the rain. The convicts are in large "boxes" fixed upon low wheels, in fact, comfortable locomotive houses. His men are all rags and tatters, their boots falling off their feet for want of a shoemaker; yet these men have actually to pay for the transport of their necessaries, or little comforts of tea, sugar, &c.! And this too in a place where the soil is so bad as not even to afford food for a goat, and where, consequently, they are without vegetables, milk, or butter! There, too, the contractor uses them ill, in respect to the bread and meat; but still it would be to speak to the winds to complain to people who are engaged in building houses and buying sheep instead of attending to their desks. I understand that things are better managed in Van Diemen's Land, at least the officers seem to like that colony better.

For the truth of all I have stated I appeal to every officer in the colony. Those who are lately gone home may contradict me if they can. If I am borne out in our complaints, surely the least we have a right to expect is that the period so miserably misspent in this colony should be reckoned as part of the India service!

New South Wales, April 12, 1836. S.

* By the term "bush" is meant a post, miles away in the interior, where the officers have not a soul to speak to for many months at a time, except their own people or the convict overseers.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF MALTA.

SIR,—As a friend to equal justice being distributed to both the gallant professions, it has been with considerable disappointment and regret that I have seen it announced that V.-Admiral Fleeming is positively not to go out as the Governor of Malta, as had been confidently stated. When it is borne in mind, Sir, that out of the twenty-five to thirty Colonial Governments that there are altogether, the Navy have but three or four—these of the very worst sort, and this too whilst the total number of superior officers of both services, who are eligible to these appointments, are very nearly equal, as you have before established in your remarks upon Honduras, it does appear as extraordinary as it is unjust that the distinguished officers of the Naval profession should not have a due share of these situations. Can Lord Glenelg be aware that the Navy once had, not only the Government of Malta, but also that of New South Wales, Prince Edward Island, and several others which have since been so unfairly and undeservedly taken from them? Besides, as regards that of Malta, economy alone should have had its weight in placing an Admiral there, as by this arrangement the two duties of Port Admiral and Governor would be blended in one individual. Hoping, Sir, that you will in your able manner call attention to these facts, I am, &c.

15th Sept. CORNELIUS.

WOMEN IN THE FLEET AT THE BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR.

SIR,—Having seen it stated in the papers that the only female on board the English Fleet at Trafalgar was now in necessitous circumstances, &c., I beg leave to inform you that there were many women present on that occasion, as was then customary for every line-of-battle ship to carry several to sea. I should think there were at least one hundred women in the fleet; and, as little more than thirty years have elapsed, no doubt many of them are still alive. On board the ship in which I served, there were seven women; and one of them, the wife of a Gunner's Mate, of the name of Swallow, gave birth to a fine boy in the heat of the action. The child lived for several weeks, and was, as you may suppose, the object of great solicitude, having been born under such circumstances; it was killed, I believe, by too much kindness. As to the Euryalus (which is a frigate) sustaining no loss in the action, having four ships upon her at once, it is all nonsense, and only shows that a ridiculous statement has been imposed upon the public.

[We refused to insert the absurd statement.—ED.

THE SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

SIR,—I am delighted to find the efforts of a gallant C. directed towards drawing your attention to a separation of the "corn from the chaff," in the case of the late School of Naval Architecture. It is a pity the "sins" of a part should be "visited upon the whole." In the case of Mr. Allan, Portsmouth-yard—a foreman, I believe, in that establishment—it is well known that he has, in the public prints, disclaimed all connexion with the clique which so incessantly rail against the Sailor Surveyor's plans. Nay, has he not actually published a paper to prove, on scientific principles, the advantages of those improvements introduced by the British Navy by Sir Wm. Symonds? Surely, then, when your shafts are directed against "the School," exceptions ought to be made in favour of those who judge right, and have the candour to acknowledge their opinions, levelled only at such as "kick against the pricks."

21*st Sept.*, 1836. PHILOTHEORUS.

[We agree with our correspondent, and will, as far as we are informed, separate the "corn from the chaff." Can he give us a list of names.—ED.—]

POSTAGE OF NAVAL OFFICERS' LETTERS.

SIR,—Among the Post-office regulations, as affecting ships of war, it appears to me that several call loudly for alteration. First, newspapers to ships on foreign stations, not colonies, might, I think, be forwarded free of postage. Secondly, as only commissioned officers are allowed to have their letters forwarded free of additional expense when sent on duty from the place to which they are first addressed, it follows that Masters, Surgeons, Pursers, and even Pursers' Mates and Middies, have to pay the extra postage whenever they may be sent after them; nor is this all, for the Post-office charges the full local postages between the different post towns, instead of what seems to me to be the intention of the legislature—according to the whole distance the letter may be carried. This is no joke to a poor Mid in a steamer, who flies from port to port with the velocity of lightning, and who, on almost every letter he is lucky enough to get, has to pay 5*s.* or 6*s.* postage. The words of the Act of Parliament being "Commissioned Officers of the Army and Navy," the parliamentary indulgence includes all the officers of the Army who are not entitled to have their letters franked, and was no doubt meant to be extended equally to the Navy, while, by availing themselves of an absurd technicality, the Post-office exacts from the naval officers of the Navy the exorbitant charges referred to.

Trusting to your insertion of my views, and that they will meet the eye of some friend to the Service who has the power of benefiting it, I remain, &c.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1836.

In our columns of Military Intelligence it will found that orders have been issued for the em- rkation at Cork of certain corps for foreign rvica, and we shall therefore proceed to ex- ine the arrangement. It is said that the 18th gimont will be sent to Ceylon, and relieve the h Highlanders. The 78th left England in 1826; 45th, 54th, and 16th went abroad in 1819. We , is Ceylon so differently or distantly situated m Madras, where the 45th and 54th are now ving, as to prevent the corps from being landed India, and relieving the regiment which has n abroad since 1819, rather than the regiment ich has been in Ceylon only since 1826, and ich had four of its ten companies at home?

Next let us take the 33d regiment, which is re- ted to be under orders for Gibraltar, as an ra regiment. Be it so. But then, why also er the 82d regimont to the Mediterranean? 82d regiment, it would seem, is to relieve 2d Battalion of Rifles, which has been in the diterraneen since 1826. We ask, what claim relief from the European climate of the Medi- ranean have the Rifles, while the three regi- nts, in India since 1819, are grilling under a pical sun?

Further, we perceive that the 35th is to proceed tha Mauritius, and relieve the 99th regiment. e again ask, what claim has the 99th regiment hich, on being raised, was sent to our most healthy lony) to be relieved before the Indian regimants, hich have been out since 1819, while the 99th nt abroad for the first time in 1825 only? Add this, that the regiments in India have all their ctives abroad, while those at the Mauritius ve four companies out of ten always at home! e trust that an arrangemant which would volve so much injustice towards the 45th, 54th, d 16th regiments, is not finally decided on.

Independent of their manifest injustice, the ar- angements are inefficient; no provision what- ver having been made for the convict guards to New South Wales, and a large portion of the 80th regiment has already embarked on that duty. It is obvious that the 46th regimant will not be sent to Australasia as the 17th has been; and the next corps available for foreign service have returned home so late as 1834. On all these considerations we hope, instead of these preposterous arrangements, to have the gratification of hearing that a widely different distribution of the four regiments next for foreign service will take plece.

The Fleet under Sir Charles Paget, consisting of Bellerophon (flag ship), Vanguard, Pembroke, Scylla, Pantaloon, and Emerald, tender, arrived at Cork on the 16th instant. Several interesting trials have occurred very much in favour of the Vanguard, which ship beat the whole Fleet, including the Pantaloon, sparing the Bellerophon courses. The Pembroke as well as the Vanguard has improved greatly, and now beats Bellerophon nearly as much as Vanguard beats her. A trial took place between Scylla and Pantaloon on the 10th; both vessels were ordered out of the Sound to sail round the Eddystone, starting from the Breakwater light-vessel. On passage out they had a leading wind, at N.W., blowing fresh with squalls at times. The Pantaloon led from the first, and rounded the Eddystone five minutes before Scylla, which latter had evidently no chance in the contest; for, after making two boards, Pantaloon passed the light-vessel forty-two minutes before Scylla.

This match took place in the presence of the Admiral, who was on board the Emerald; and, although the trial was well known to, and witnessed by, some who are ever ready to raport any presumed failure of Sir William Symonds's ships, we have not perceived any notice taken of this interesting and special trial, attended with such a decisive result.

The officers of the fleet consider the Pembroke and Bellerophon to be very fast sailing vessels of their class. If so, the Vanguard has proved a very superior Line-of-Battle Ship, as every one now admits.

It will probably be in the recollection of many of our readers, that in our comments, some months back, on the numerous losses of ships laden with timber, during the last winter, in their voyages across the Atlantic, we expressed the hope that some means would be devised to prevent the dangerous practice of overloading those vessels with timber upon their decks. It has been with considerable satisfaction that we have heard that one of the principal Insurance Companies at Sunderland have adopted measures which will, we trust, tend in a great degree to prevent a recurrence of those sad disasters which we had at that period so often to recount, and we hope that all other Insurance Companies in the United Kingdom will follow the example thus laudably established, of limiting the extent of cargo which vessels employed in this trade shall henceforward carry, to entitle them to recover the amount of their policies, in the event of any accident happening to them.

By these regulations it is declared, that after the 1st of October no vessel, insured in this society, shall take any deck load without being subject to a heavy penalty; whereas, hitherto, vessels of but 200 tons burthen have been frequently known to take upon deck as much as fifty loads of timber, even in the depth of winter, and the consequences have been, that they have become water-logged and upset, thereby sacrificing the lives of all the crew and passengers on board of them. It occurs to us, that there should be an authorised agant, or surveyor, at each of the different ports where these ships take in their cargoes, who should have the power at once cancelling the policy of insurance, if, on examining the line of flotation of each vessel, she was found to be too deep to cross the Atlantic with safety; and if any ship sailed in that state, not only should the insurance be void, but even if, contrary to expectation, she did reach her destined port, that the Master should be liable, by legislative enactment, to some punishment for having hazarded the lives of his crew by such criminal conduct.

It is not as regards ships carrying timber alone that these precautions are necessary; we think that care should be taken that every vessel that sails from the United Kingdom, or from any of our Colonies or possessions, and indeed every vessel belonging to a British subject, should be in a perfect sea-worthy state when she commences her voyage, and more especially those carrying passengers, including all our steam-vessels; whereas we have known some of the latter, in their voynges between London and Ireland in particular, to be so deep as to make them extremely dangerous in bad weather, and when, instead of rising to every sea, they became, by being overloaded, as immoveable as a rock, with each succeeding wave breaking over them. Even in moderate breezes this overloading has frequently prevented their making any progress, whereby the voyages have been prolonged considerably beyond the usual period.

To guard, then, against these evils we trust some effectual measures will be adopted at an early date, and thus ensure the better preservation of the lives and properties of our countrymen, which are now too commonly put to imminent hazard through the avaricious and unprincipled conduct of the Owners and Masters of our Merchant vessels.

It may not be generally known, even to Military men who have not served in the East, that the European soldier of His Majesty is considerably mulcted in India of the pay for which he engaged to serve. The private soldier on attestation stipulates for a shilling per diem to serve his Majesty (this is exclusive of the one penny beer money). When serving in India, and that for twenty years, he receives, in lieu of his sterling shilling per diem, one quarter rupee and sixty reas, or twelve rupees for a month of thirty days. Now, these twelve rupees are said by the Indian Government to be worth thirty English shillings; but, though the rupee is issued as 2*s.* 6*d.*, it will scarcely ever fetch 2*s.* in the market. Officers and men alike complain of this system. Frequently soldiers go into the money-changers' shops and ask the dealers to give them two English shillings in specie for the rupee, which is issued as 2*s.* 6*d.*, but we never heard of the dealer in money who would give them 2*s.* 6*d.* for one rupee. We remember when the Bombay rupee was only exchangeable at 1*s.* 8*d.*, and then clearly the poor soldier was clipped of his pay about one-third, or from 3½*d.* to 4*d.* per diem. The penny for beer money is not here taken into account, as it is not granted in India where arrack is issued as an equivalent.

These are simple facts, and known to every individual who has ever served in His Majesty's Army in India. Let the Company deny that twelve rupees is not the pay of the private per mensem. We ask, are twelve rupees equal to thirty shillings, which should be the soldier's monthly pay?

This loss to the soldier was one of the grievances set forth by "John Hardiman," whose humorous petition, in our Gazette of the 10th instant, has attracted so much notice.

Our readers will be pleased to see in our announcement, this day, the names of two excellent and deserving officers, promoted to be Commanders, Lieutenant Richard Byron, late first of the Jupiter, nephew of the immortal bard, and who has been constantly on active service for the last ten years in his late rank; and N. Cory, the well-known skilful Commander of the Pantaloon.

ALTHOUGH we always encourage correspondents to address us, and devote a large space of our journal to their communications, it is still necessary that the subjects they write upon should involve some interest for the majority of our readers, so as, by drawing forth opinions on disputed points, to elicit information from those capable of affording it.

In our gazette of the 10th instant we inserted a letter, signed Conservative, wherein certain insinuations were set forth, respecting the treatment experienced by Naval Lieutenants, and we annexed a note to that communication, recommending the writer to state some authentic facts in furtherence of what he advanced. We have received another letter from Conservative, and which we this day publish; but so far from complying with our reasonable advice, that he would specify some case which would warrant the strong language used, when reflecting on what he called "the caprice of unprincipled superiors," and asserting that the Lieutenants were treated in the most "degrading and disgraceful manner,"—so far from this, his communication chiefly consists of lamentations; and, although he asserts, "that such instances can be too readily supplied," and that they are "almost as numerous as the officers of which the rank is composed," he declines further allusion to the regular service, and refers to the Coast Blockade, abolished several years since, and to the present Coast Guard Service.

Now, if Conservative had considered it necessary, after what has been already so fully detailed by our excellent correspondent Nuna, to repeat the slights and endurances which officers experience, who think proper to serve in the Coast Guard, it would have been more ingenuous in him to have stated his purpose frankly, and we could then have referred him to those able letters, in order to show that a full exposure was already made.

The rules and regulations adopted for the management of the Coast Guard have nothing whatever to do with the Navy. The complaint is, that Naval Officers can be induced to accept situations in that service, which are not considered by the profession at large commensurate with their rank, and in this feeling we ourselves indulge; but it must not be supposed, as Conservative asserts in his second communication, that officers are obliged by the Admiralty to serve therein, or that, when appointed, they are removed at the end of three years. We speak of the Lieutenants, and we do not think a case can be made out since the Coast Guard has been under its present direction, where the three following regulations have not been observed:—

First, that no officer has been recommended by the Admiralty for an appointment, except on his application.

Secondly, that when appointed he has not been removed except at his own desire, or in consequence of some complaint preferred against him.

Thirdly, that on application he has been allowed to retire from that service—there being always a number of expectants waiting for appointments.

We know these to be facts, for we are acquainted with officers who have served in the Coast Guard for many years, and are likely to remain therein as long as they are capable of service.

In his statement, respecting the regulations of vessels in command of Lieutenants, Conservative is also incorrect. These vessels very seldom carry Surgeons; we believe there are only three or four instances out of all the vessels in commission; and when they do, their messing with the Commander is at his option; and this shows that our correspondent is in want of that information respecting the practice of the service, on which he volunteers to inform others. As regards the paying off ships every three years we also differ in opinion with him; such has been the practice time out of mind in peace, and a very good practice too; and does he think our seamen would engage in the Navy for interminable service?

We have always remarked, that those writers who draw a comparison between soldiers and sailors, and then infer certain conclusions, are mere theorists, and quite unacquainted with the practical operation of matters; and unless Conservative can show us that it would be a wise system to make the King's Service distinct from his brother seaman's in the Merchant's employ, and thereby extend still wider those bonds which it has always been considered good policy to draw as tight as possible, by inducing all our mariners to take short turns in the Navy, so as to qualify them for service when called on,—unless Conservative can show this, and also the advantages to be gained by such a system, even were it possible to rely on the Navy being recruited from its own resources, we must utterly deny not only the soundness of his reasoning but his capacity for entering upon the task he meditates. Our principal object in time of peace should be to keep up as large a Naval force as possible, more for the sake of qualifying the officers than the men; and the ships should be kept at sea as much as possible for the same reason, and a rigid maintenance of strict discipline observed as regards the officers, however politic it might be to relax somewhat in favour of the men at such periods. It is, therefore, a new view of the case to find our correspondent complaining of the treatment these officers receive, when it is notorious that too much indulgence is already permitted. The experience of all history proves that seasons of long peace are fatal to Military bodies, by enervating that discipline which occasion calls for, and is therefore freely submitted to in time of war; and although it is certainly politic to relax it in favour of the seamen, for the reasons we have given, we cannot perceive that such necessity should be pleaded on behalf of the officers.

MANY weeks since we noticed the unfortunate suicide of Ceptein Neile Sincleir, of the 55th Foot, while on his march from Bellary to Madras, there to take his trial by Court-Martial on certain charges, and our paragraph has been going the round of the papers even to this time, for we find it repeated in the Standard of a few days back. This constant republication of our prior intelligence on all matters relating to the Army, Navy and East India Company's Service, is not however unproductive of benefit, for it reminds us to offer comments on facts which frequently escape due notice at the time of our early publication of them.

It is a horrid system now obtaining in India of ordering officers to travel in a state of arrest hundreds of miles to take their trial. From Bellary to Madras must be about 300 miles; now such a journey in India, in a state of arrest and in the mental anxiety of approaching trial, is enough to break down the strongest mind, and lead it to suicide or, what is almost as bad, excess of indulgence in drink or opium.

In India it is most especially desirable, that a man should be placed in arrest until the charges are ready to be delivered to him; and that he should be brought to trial in the division, or even garrison, where he is serving, without a day's delay beyond what is requisite to assemble the Court. The Mutiny Act declares, that no officer or soldier shall be in confinement more than eight days, until a Court-Martial can be assembled:—now, to make the march from Bellary to Madras would alone occupy four times that prescribed time, and it is evident, therefore, that such a system must be one of extreme injustice to all officers labouring under accusations, who are so treated. In the present instance it is more than probable that had the officer, whose lamentable death we record, been promptly brought to trial at Bellary, instead of being ordered on such a melancholy march to the investigation, he would have been still alive.

We earnestly call the attention of all the authorities to this dark feature of Military law practice in the East Indies, and trust they will at once issue orders to ensure its correction. We know many instances where the custom has been made an extreme abuse of power, to the serious injury of the unfortunate accused, and almost tampering with justice as affecting them; and there can be no doubt that the system, united to that of illegal long arrest, has tended not a little to bring Courts-Martial into the dis-esteem in which they are now held by the Indian Army.

WE find the following paragraph in a morning paper:—

"It is reported that Lord Howick intends recommending the consolidation of some of the Departments of the Horse Guards, and that the whole should be attached to the office, and be placed under the superintendence of the Secretary at War.

It is quite improbable that the Military Departments will be brought under the control of the War Office. That there will be a further consolidation of the Civil Departmens of the Army under the Secretary at War is highly probable; and that there will be also a consolidation of the head-quarter offices is more than probable. We some weeks ago announced that the Deputy Quarter-master-General, Major-General Sir R. Jackson would be removed to the Northern District; this has now taken place, and the Major-General's situation at the Horse Guards, we presume, will not be filled up. There will be also other reductions in the Military Departments, and eventually we expect all to be placed in one office under the Commander-in-Chief, which measure would - business and admit of a reduction of expenre.

n the subject of placing the Secretary at War y and efficiently as the responsible organ of ernment as regards the Army, we think it ot be accomplished until that part of the duty attached to the Secretary of State for the Co-es is transferred to him.

he present anomalous state of things was exem-d in the late parliamentary discussion respecting Brudenell. Lord John Russell, as Home Sery, had no immediate control. Lord Howick, ecretary at War, declared he had none. Now if,
e Secretary at War has lately been a Cabinet sler, he were to be invested with the further tions of Secretary of State for the War (or
y) Department, we might expect soon to have y things, which are at present but ill-arranged worse defined, set right.

e Report of the Select Committee on Military rs is understood to be with Lord Howick. His ship, or the Secretary of State for the Home rtment, will submit it to the King, after h we may look for great alterations at the e Guards.

an Court of Inquiry at Fort Pitt, Chatham, closed its proceedings, and a Report has been arded to the Horse Guards. From all we heard it is impossible to imagine anything infamous than the whole affair. It has been ears one mass of unalloyed fraud, robbery, and der, almost beyond belief. When men landed were sent into hospital, their kits were com-ted to the care of the Staff Serjeants. The generally died, and their effects produced a few ings, out of which it seems to have been pretty ascertained that the Serjeants retired, after a years' service in that capacity, with from five lred to a thousand pounds!

one of our recent numbers we stated that in Charter of Incorporation of the Trinity Board expressly declared, that "the Master-Wardens, stants, and Elder Brethren shall always be sed from Commanders of the Royal Navy and chant Service." Now, with these clear and ambiguous words before us, we would ask the bers of this Corporation how it has happened they have of late years wholly departed from positive injunction, of having "Commanders t is to say, those who have been in the comd of H. M.'s ships) of the Royal Navy," as part is Body Corporate? and why, at this moment, e is not, we believe, even one Naval officer being to the Trinity House! Do the Elder thren, in whom the right of election rests, deem they are at liberty to violate the express words eir Charter whenever they please? or do they know that a departure from its statutes renders t once voidable in law? Are the superior of-rs of our Navy more unfit for these trust-thy situations than the Masters of our Mer-nt ships? or why have they of late been wholly luded from these appointments in direct opition to the letter of the Charter under which s Corporation act. Whoever will be at the ns to read the clause to which we refer, will l that it is not optional with the Elder Brethren elect either Naval officers, or those of our Mer-ntile Marine, but that it is compulsory upon them nominate a certain number of Naval Commaners; and we should say, from the wording of the clause, that it evidently was intended that the majority should be taken from our Naval Service, the words being these—"selected from Commanders of the Royal Navy AND Merchant Service," thus making the latter secondary to the former. If it had been intended that the Trinity Board might have been constituted of Merchant Captains only, as it now so unjustly is, the monosyllable OR would have been substituted for that of AND, but as the clause stands we unhesitatingly maintain that the half at least of the Board ought to consist of Naval Captains; and knowing as we do how well qualified numerous gallant officers are for these appointments, we now submit these facts to the consideration of the Earl of Minto and Mr. Ponsell Thomson, and we shall at an early period again recur to this question.

The Dukes of Brunswick.—The marriage between Duke William of Brunswick and the Princess Maria of Wurtemburg is broken off, though so near being concluded. Austria has interfered to break the marriage. A note having been of course addressed on the subject to the Court of Vienna, its Chancery notified on return to the King of Wurtemburg, that although it recognised Duke William as Sovreiegn of Brunswick, nevertheless, that the succession of the duchy must pass to the legitimate heirs of Duke Charles, provided the latter should make a princely match; in other words, should espouse one of his rank.—Munich Gazette. This declaration is directly in contradiction to the semi-official note lately published by the Gazette of Hanover, in the name of the Agnats of the House of Brunswick (King William being the chief one). This declared that the children of Duke William should succeed to the duchy. The King of Wurtemburg, nevertheless, was too much moved by the declination of the Court of Vienna to permit the marriage of his daughter with Duke William, and it has accordingly been broken off.

Peerage Reform.—Twelve months ago we expressed the strongest conviction that the question of remodelling the House of Peers, if urged as a practical question, would break up the Reform party and the Reform ministry. So evident is this, that we have long entertained the opinion expressed last week by the Spectator, that it has been the deep design of that crafty intriguer, Lord Lyndhurst, by his conduct during the last session, to provoke the ministers and their friends into an advocacy of peerage reform—knowing, as he does, and as we should think every man of common discernment must, that the instant ministers advocate that question their doom is sealed, and parliament will be dissolved, with an absolute certainty of a Tory majority being returned at the next election. Lord Lyndhurst, therefore, has set a trap for the ministers and the reformers; and if they walk into it, their fate is merited as well as certain. Let the Reformers divide among themselves, and the triumph of the Tories is inevitable. But if the question of peerage reform is pressed by the Radicals the division cannot be avoided. The Canst annual Reformers will neither be led nor driven into a scheme which they conscientiously believe to be essentially Republican, and therefore pregnant with the greatest danger, not only to the monarchy but to the peace and prosperity of the country.—Lords Mercury.

The Hon. Capt. Dillon, A.D.C. to the Lord Lieutenant, broke his collar-bone on Wednesday evening, leaping a horse over a fence in the Phœnix Park. The accident is fortunately not of a serious nature.—Dublin Paper.

Madame Lefevre, a Parisian beggar, died lately, and among the wretched rags in her still more wretched apartments were found money of various descriptions, amounting in the whole to upwards of 600*l.*

On Monday se'nnight General Sir C. Dalbiac and Miss Dalbiac arrived at Floors, the seat of the Duke of Roxburgh.

Mr. C. Wood, Secretary to the Admiralty, and Lady Mary Wood, daughter of Earl Grey, are on a visit to Sir F. Lindley Wood, at Hickleton-hall.

Candidates.—Lord Fitzalan, grandson of the Duke of Norfolk, is spoken of as a candidate for Sheffield, in the event of a new election, in opposition to Mr. Buckingham. The Tories at Peterborough will bring forward Mr. W. E. Surtees, nephew of Lord Eldon, as their candidate, in opposition to one or other of the present liberal members. Captain Scobell, R. N., of Hagle Littleton, Mr. Lindlow Burges, and Sir W. Molesworth, have been announced as candidates for Bath. Requisitions are now in progress among the electors, addressed to Lord Eliot, to induce him to offer himself as a candidate for the Eastern Division of Cornwall.

The health of Mr. Barham, M.P., is such as to leave not the least hope of his ever again resuming his parliamentary duties.

Revenue Police.—Lieut. James Kavanagh and Lieut. J. St. Lawrence, of the Revenue Police, have been promoted to the rank of Sub-Inspectors under Major Brereton, Chief Inspector-General of that force in Ireland.

The Duke of Wellington, it is expected, will review the Yeomanry at Hatfield on the 30th inst. His Grace until then will remain at Walmer surrounded by his political friends. He makes daily excursions with his visiters to Dover, Deal, and Walmer.

Buckingham Palace remains in statu quo. The preparations for completing the building as a royal residence have been long in a forward state; it is still, it is understood, uncertain whether the royal family will occupy the Palace by February next.

Irish Constabulary.—There is a letter from the United Service Club in the Standard, stating that Col. Kennedy dismissed his Secretary, a Mr. Furlong, at the dictation of Mr. O'Connell. One of our contemporaries says this letter ought to be answered. We shall do so—Fudge.—Dublin Evening Post.

The present Lord Dufferin and Claneboye's eldest son, Capt. Blackwood, 69th Foot, having fallen at Waterloo, his Lordship's only surviving son, the Hon. Capt. Price Blackwood, who married Miss Helen Sheridan (sister to Mrs. Norton), becomes heir presumptive to the title. It is a somewhat singular coincidence, that the three grand-daughters of the late Richard Brinsley Sheridan are united to heirs apparent or presumptive to titles.

Mr. Moody, coach proprietor, and who has driven between Windsor and London for upwards of fifty years, and was in the 79th year of his age, was thrown from the coach-box on Saturday last, and is since dead. A similar fate befel his son about a twelvemonth since.

Upwards of thirty French vessels are now in the Swansea Harbour, loading steam-engine coal for the use of the French Government.

It is rumoured that a marriage is on the tapis between the Marquis of D—— and the accomplished Miss S——, the fair ward of a wealthy nobleman.

French Steamers.—A grand French enterprise of steamers in the Mediterranean is nearly completed. Ten of them, each of 500 tons, and magnificently fitted up on English models, are in the port of Marseilles, ready to commence the service. There are to be two lines, one from Marseilles to Constantinople, the other from Athens to Alexandria. They will intersect each other at the little Island of Syra, and exchange passengers and despatches. Between Marseilles and Constantinople they will touch at Leghorn, Civito Vecchia, Naples, Messina Malta, Syra, and Smyrna. The departures will be so managed that three times per month three steamers, one coming from Marseilles, the second from Constantinople and Smyrna, and the third from Alexandria, will arrive at the central station at Syra; so that a person at Marseilles can receive on the 29th day an answer to a letter written to Constantinople, while at present forty-five or fifty days are employed in going and returning between Marseilles and either of those places.

The Manchester Musical Festival terminated on Friday evening with a Grand Fancy Dress Ball, for which the most extensive arrangements were made. The amount received on account of this Festival exceeds, we are informed, 16,000*l.*

The Court.

King Leopold arrived at Windsor on Sunday afternoon, and dined with their Majesties. A select party were present to meet his Majesty. In the evening King Leopold left the Castle. On Thursday evening the King arrived at Dover, and at seven o'clock yesterday morning embarked on board His Majesty's packet Ferret for Calais.

On Wednesday Major-General Sir H. F. Bouverie had an audience of the King, and kissed hands upon being appointed Governor of Malta. Sir James Cockburn had an audience of His Majesty, and kissed hands on his appointment in the Hanoverian Service.

The Duke of Sussex has arrived at Kimmel Park, the seat of Lord Dinorben.

The visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and their daughter Princess Augusta, is not expected to take place until the spring of next year. Col. Sir James Reynett left town on Monday to resume his duties of Aide-de-Camp to the Duke.

The King has given permission to Maj.-Gen. Benjamin Forbes (late Gordon), to resume the name of Gordon only.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur of Tuesday contains a series of 16 Royal ordinances, the first two of which complete the Cabinet, by the appointment of General Bernard to the Ministry of War, and M. Martin (du Nord) to the Ministry of Public Works, Agriculture, and Commerce. Others appoint General Schramm, an Honorary Councillor of State and Director-General of the Personnel and Military operations of the Army; M. M. Deschesnez, Director-General of the Administration and of the Accounts of the same Department; M. F. Tarre, Attorney-General of the Royal Court of Paris, vice M. Martin (du Nord); M. Hebert, Advocate-General of the Court of Cassation, &c.

Great preparations are making at Compiegne for a series of entertainments, which are to last three days. On the first there will be a grand hunting party; on the second races; and on the third a review. It is expected that their Majesties and the Princesses will be present. The camp will be broken up at the beginning of October, and the Duke of Orleans is expected to return to Paris by the 10th.

PORTUGAL.—We almost exclusively published last week an express we received at the moment of going to press, announcing that a revolution in Portugal took place at Lisbon on the 8th inst. The Constitution of 1820 was proclaimed, and at two o'clock the next morning received the assent of the Queen. It was proclaimed by the military, and the Queen had no choice but to consent to their demands. Little tumult took place, and no lives were lost. The Ministry was instantly dismissed, and Viscount Sa da Bandeira and Count Lumiares were commissioned to form a new one.

SPAIN.—The Madrid Gazette of the 14th officially announces M. Mendizabal's appointment as Finance Minister, and that of Lopez (not Ohuga) as Home Minister. M. Mendizabal has announced a small loan of 30,000,000 reals. The arrears due to the British Legion were about to be paid; part of the amount has been already transmitted to St. Sebastian.—Some expectation seems to be entertained at Madrid that Don Carlos means in earnest to advance northward, and "march to the capital."—An army of reserve has been formed at Soria.—Letters from Bayonne announce that Don Carlos had received within a few days 60,000*l.* in bills of exchange (supposed to have been forwarded from Russia and Holland), and that, in consequence, considerable purchases of provisions, clothing, and ammunition for his service, had been made in that town (Bayonne).

TURKEY.—CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 31.—Intelligence of high importance was received here last week from Circassia. A division of the Russian fleet at Sebastopol anchored in the beginning of August in the Bay of Soujuk, and after an obstinate and bloody contest succeeded in landing a body of troops estimated at 12,000 strong. Two columns from Arraper and Ghiloudjik made a simultaneous attack on the Circassians, and, according to report, routed them completely. Should, more fortunate on this occasion than on former ones, the Russians succeed in permanently securing this position, the final subjugation of this country hardly admits now of a doubt. Master of the whole coast, easy will it henceforth be for Russia to cut off the supplies, which, in spite of the vigilance of her blockading squadron, the natives continued to receive from the Black Sea. Fourteen of the country boats, laden with salt and gunpowder, have, it is said, during the present month been captured by the enemy.

PRAGUE.—The Coronation of the Emperor took place on the 7th inst. in the Cathedral of this city, as the Emperor Ferdinand III. King of Bohemia. The Empress was crowned Queen of Bohemia on the 10th inst. with the greatest solemnity.

UNITED STATES.—The packet Virginia has arrived at Liverpool from New York, bringing papers to the 24th ult. It was reported that Santa Anna had been shot, and as it was known that he was about to be tried by a Court-martial, little doubt was entertained that this would be his fate. A letter from the American Consul at Matamoras states that that port had been opened to vessels of all nations for the introduction of provisions, on payment of an ad valorem duty of forty per cent.

Theatres.

QUEEN'S.—A Mr. Walterton made his debut at this theatre on Wednesday evening, in the character of Rob Roy, for the amusement of himself and friends. This gentleman does not possess a single qualification for an actor; his performance was decidedly the worst we have ever witnessed; indeed, the piece throughout was nothing but a burlesque. Mrs. Waylett's singing was the only thing worth listening to: she executed a new song, entitled "Beside the Clear Waters," very sweetly; it is a very pleasing composition. The new farce of Love in the King's Arms is a very stupid affair, and ought to be withdrawn at once.

ST. JAMES'S.—Considerable additions have been made to the company since last season. Three new pieces are the novelties for the first night: our old friend "Boz" is the author of the first. It is in part founded, we are informed, on one of his popular "Sketches," and entitled The Strange Gentleman. As it introduces Bailey to his new audience, he is The Strange Gentleman, of course. The two Miss Smiths, pupils of Signor Siverati, and nieces of Miss Stephens, are engaged. They are both singers of considerable talent: the eldest is a charming ballad singer. Among the new engagements is Mr. Parry, jun., the son of one of the most venerable veterans in the musical profession. Mr. Parry, jun., is said to possess talents of a similar description to those of Charles Mathews, and we trust that the son of one of our oldest and most respected melodists will fulfil the very high expectations his friends have formed of him.

OLYMPIC.—During the summer Madame Vestris's superb little theatre has been considerably altered and improved: a second circle of boxes has been added, and the gallery dispensed with. The house altogether presents a light and elegant appearance. With the exception of Mr. Keeley, all the old favourites are engaged. Oxberry supplies Keeley's place. Mrs. Honey has been added to the company. The stage department is still under the able direction of Mr. James Vining: it could not be in better hands.

ADELPHI.—Yates returns to the management of this theatre. "Fitz-Adelphi Jack," as the Americans call John Reeve, will appear on the opening night. We are glad to hear that Mrs. Yates returns to this theatre.

COVENT GARDEN.—We have had nothing worthy of notice at this theatre during the week. Keeble has appeared in several of his favourite characters, and has been most shamefully supported, if we except the Stanley of Mr. G. Bennett.

DRURY LANE.—We have not heard that anything is settled as to when, and with what, this theatre is to open; but we suppose Bunn will commence the season with something attractive.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—These gardens had a numerous and fashionable company on Wednesday afternoon, to witness the second ascent of the new balloon, containing eleven persons. At five o'clock the stupendous balloon rose slowly, and after attaining a considerable altitude immediately above the gardens, it took a south-easterly course, and descended at ten minutes past six at Claybill, near Beckenham, Kent.

GIPSY'S SONG.

We have not country, laws, or home;
None govern us, and none obey;
We find a spot where'er we roam,
And pitch our tent at close of day!
Our banquets may be coarse and rude,
Our board be spread in open air;
But we can relish humble food,
While others loathe a richer fare.

Let wealth in perfum'd chamber lie,
Let damask guard his fever'd rest:
Our curtain is the starry sky,
Our couch the green earth's dewy breast.
No jewell'd robes our daughters wear;
In wreaths their raven locks confine;
But where 's the grace that can compare
In lustre, when their dark eyes shine?

Our men are brave, and prompt to do,
When weaker spirits fail, or shrink;
We never work for hireling's due,
And never for the morrow think.
We have not country, laws, or home;
None govern us, and none obey;
We find a spot where'er we roam,
And pitch our tent at close of day!

PROGRESS AND PRESENT POSITION OF RUSSIA IN THE EAST.*

A REFERENCE to the map will show that Russia has advanced her frontier in every direction; and even the Caspian Sea, which appeared to present an impediment to her progress, she has turned to advantage by appropriating it to herself. It will be seen that the plains of Tartary have excited her cupidity, while the civilized states of Europe and Asia have been dismembered to augment her dominions. Not content with this, she has crossed into America, and there disputes, in direct violation of her engagements to England, the right of our merchants to navigate the rivers that debauch on the western coast. It will be seen that the acquisitions she has made from Sweden are greater than what remain of that ancient kingdom; that her acquisitions from Poland are as large as the whole Austrian empire; that the territory she has wrested from Turkey in Europe is equal to the dominions of Prussia, exclusive of her Rhenish provinces; and that her acquisitions from Turkey in Asia are equal in extent to all the smaller states of Germany, the Rhenish provinces of Prussia, Belgium, and Holland taken together; that the country she has acquired from Persia is about the size of England; that her acquisitions in Tartary have an area equal to Turkey in Europe, Greece, Italy, and Spain; and that the territory she has acquired within the last sixty-four years (since 1772) is greater in extent and importance than the whole empire she had in Europe before that time.

These are facts which rest on no doubtful evidence, yet they are such as may well startle every thinking man who has not previously reflected upon them, and such as no one who desires to remain on the present state of Europe or Asia ought to disregard.

Every portion of these vast acquisitions, except perhaps that in Tartary, has been obtained in opposition to the views, the wishes, and the interests of England. The dismemberment of Sweden, the partition of Poland, the conquest of the Turkish provinces, and of those severed from Persia, have all been injurious to British interests; and though some of them found favour for a time, and for a price given at Vienna and Berlin, all the kingdoms that have shared her spoliations can regard them with no other feeling than alarm.

The power and resources of Russia lie to the country to the west of the Volga, not in the wilds of Siberia, and her empire in Europe has been nearly doubled in little more than half a century. In sixty-four years she has advanced her frontier eight hundred and fifty miles towards Vienna, Berlin, Dresden, Munich, and Paris; she has approached four hundred and fifty miles nearer to Constantinople; she has possessed herself of the centre of Poland, and has advanced to within a few miles of the capital of Sweden †, from which, when Peter the Great mounted the throne, her frontier was distant three hundred miles. Since that time she has stretched herself forward about one thousand miles towards India, and some distance towards the capital of Persia. The armament that is now stationed at her farthest frontier post on the western shore of the Caspian, has to make a great detour to march back to Moscow as onward to Attock on the Indus, and is actually further from St. Petersburgh than from Lahore, the capital of the Seiks. The battalions of the Russian Imperial Guard that invaded Persia found, at the termination of the war, that they were as near to Herat as to the banks of the Don, that they had already accomplished half the distance from their empire to Delhi; and that therefore, from their camp in Persia they had as great a distance to march back to St. Petersburgh as onward to the capital of Hindostan. Meanwhile the Masonic Gazette threatens to dictate at Calcutta as the next power with England, and Russia never ceases to urge the Persian Government to accept from it, free of all cost, officers to discipline its troops, and arms and artillery for its soldiers, at the same time that her own battalions are ready to march into Persia whenever the Shah, to whom their services are freely offered, can be induced to require their assistance.

Thus, while she arouses the more populous governments of Europe of a desire to subvert existing institutions, Russia is herself undermining every throne within her reach; that of Poland she has pulled down. Since the battle of Narva she has never ceased, by intrigue and by force, to distract and encroach upon Sweden; since the battle of Poltawa she has continually sought the subversion of Turkey; since the peace of Neustadt she has perseveringly pursued her conquests in Persia. Her intrigues in Germany, and her ambitious projects are a source of continual alarm to Austria. France is threatened with invasion, in order to force upon it a government it had rejected. Greece is taught to believe that its tranquillity can be secured only when it shall be a Russian province; Prussia purchases forbearance acquiescence in the views and even the caprices of the Emperor; hostile restrictions are directed against the commerce of England, and her empire in the East is openly threatened with attack. In the wilds of Tartary, on the east and on the west of the Caspian, on the north and on the south of the Black Sea, in the centre of Europe, on the Baltic,—everywhere we find her a successful and persevering aggressor. With a larger extent of territory than ever before was subject to one crown, she thirsts insatiably for more, and studiously directs all energies, not to the means of improvement, but to further inquisition.

MEMOIR OF THE LATE VICE-ADMIRAL ROBERT LAMBERT.

THIS officer was the eldest son of Robert Lambert, Esq., many years a Capt. R.N. He entered the Naval service at an early age, and in 1791 was promoted to the rank of Lieut. by the late Hon. Sir W. Cornwallis, in the East Indies. He served as such on board the Barfleur, of 98 guns, bearing the flag of R.-Adm. Bowyer, and commanded by the late Lord Collingwood, in the memorable battle of June 1, 1794, after which he was made a Commander, into the Swift sloop of war. From that vessel he removed into the Suffolk, of 74 guns, as Flag-Captain to the late Adm. Rainier, with whom he served at the reduction of Ceylon, Amboyna, Banda, &c. &c. in the years 1795 and 1796. His post commission was dated April 11th in the latter year.

Capt. Lambert continued to command the Suffolk till June, 1798, when ill health compelled him to return to England. His next appointment was to the Saturn, 74, in which ship he accompanied the expedition sent to the Baltic under Sir H. Parker in 1801. On his return from that station he joined the Alemene frigate, and was employed during the remainder of the war in affording protection to the Halifax, Newfoundland, and Lisbon trade. Early in 1812, Capt. L. was appointed to the Duncan, of 74 guns, from which ship he removed into the Royal Sovereign, a first-rate, on the Mediterranean station, where he remained until the termination of hostilities. His advancement to the rank of Rear-Admiral took place Aug. 12, 1819. He soon after hoisted his flag in the Vigo, of 74 guns, as Com.-in-Chief of the squadron employed at St. Helena for the secure detention of Buonaparte. He returned from that station Jan. 1, 1822, and struck his flag on the 31 of the same month. The 22d July, 1830, he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Adm. of the Blue. A more zealous officer, brave man, or warm friend than the late Admiral never existed, and few men of late years have departed more sincerely regretted or universally beloved by all grades of society.

[In compliment to the "Clan" we publish the following Memoir of a brave and singular officer, precisely as sent to us by "a very old Highland Officer."—ED.]

MEMOIR OF THE LATE LIEUT.-GEN. SIR ALLAN CAMERON, K.C.B.

A MOST BRAVE HIGHLANDER.

THE Lieutenant-General was the son of E. Cameron, and Margery, sister to Mac Lean of Drimmin, who resided at Errocb, near Fort William, N. B., a most powerful man, six feet eight inches high. Sir Allan lived with his parents, enjoying the sports of the field and every species of manly and heroic exercises and exploits that the Chief Highlanders delighted in, until he arrived at the age of 19 (his education was much interfered with by these sports), when he disagreed with a gentleman of the same name (called Morsheilich) at a ball respecting a lady, which produced a hostile meeting early on the following morning, on which occasion his antagonist, from knowing the activity and strength of his juvenile opponent, placed a great many of his attached followers in ambush around the spot fixed on for the combat, in order to prevent young Cameron's escape. They soon measured swords, being the weapons agreed on, and in which Morsheilich had the advantage, from his having been scientifically taught the use thereof and considered to be expert therein, whilst his antagonist was untaught and inexperienced. The strength of mind, heart, and arm of young Errodi (as he was called) soon broke Morsheilich's scientific guards, and he, with a blow of his broad sword, split his head in two, when the vassals of Morsheilich rushed out of their ambush and endeavoured to seize on the youthful hero, whom they proclaimed a murderer, but from his great activity they were unable to do so. The interest, however, possessed by the slain, roused the feelings of the people of Lochaber, &c., against the alleged murderer so strongly as to render it necessary for him instantly to make his escape. Accompanied only by his bosom friend, his Claymore, he crossed to Mull, and got to the house of Dr. Alex. Mac Lean, of Pennycross, where he was kindly and compassionately received, and fed and concealed for two days, which became the more necessary, as a party of armed men from Fort William and Lochabar traced him thus far with blood hounds. In the day-time he was hid in the Doctor's hospitable house, for which the pursuers, &c., had much respect, and at night he concealed himself along with his said tried bosom friend in a cave near the house, which, although within a few hundred yards of Pennycross House, and not twenty yards from the high road, is so peculiarly situated and concealed as to make it impossible for any stranger to find it, indeed, even now, it requires ingenuity for the grand-children of the worthy Doctor, the occupiers of Pennycross House, to find it, as the writer of this Memoir, in September, 1830, has witnessed.

From the said party being certain that the pursued was somewhere in Pennycross, they continued constantly on the alert, and kept their blood-hounds on the track, which rendered it necessary for him to remove to a more uninhabited and impregnable place, which Providence furnished in an inaccessible cavern, six miles distant (called Innl Moir), where tremendous rocks and the sea prevented approach, and to which concealed stronghold provisions were occasionally conveyed by Archibald, the good-hearted youthful son of the said doctor. The door of the cave was so constructed and small that one able gladiator, such as our hero, could defend it against any number: this cave is situated on the south side of the island, and is now constantly passed by the steam-boats to and from Oban to Staffa and Iona. The rocks and basaltic pillars on that coast and around that cave are most magnificently imposing, and well worthy of being seen; they afforded the writer hereof great gratification at the time above specified.

The pursued hero remained in this seclusion constantly for six weeks, without enjoying even light, except in the very mouth of the cave; but his pursuers having then given up all hopes of finding him, returned home, and he came out and went to Ameron, where he attached himself to one of His Majesty's regiments as a volunteer, we believe the gallant 71st Highlanders, in which capacity he signalised himself exceedingly, and obtained a commission; and subsequently his bravery got him the rank of Major in America.

The effects of musket balls having, on a certain occasion, overcome the force of his arm and the efforts of his claymore, he was severely wounded, taken prisoner, and locked in the upper part of a very strong castle, where he was strictly confined. As soon as he had recovered so far from his wounds as to enable him to endeavour to effect his escape, he attempted to do so by letting himself drop down from a window; but the height was so great and the place he fell on so hard, that his ankles were dislocated, which enabled the enemy to seize and confine him again, and he was kept a prisoner until the end of the American war, when he returned to Europe and repaired to London, where he got so far acquainted with a young lady through the agency of an aunt of hers as to prevail on her to elope with him. She soon proved to be the daughter of a very rich West India gentleman, of the name of Philips, who was so much displeased at his daughter's conduct and choice, that he would not see her or her husband, nor did he do so until after the birth of their eldest child, who was called Philip, whom he took under his own care, and he soon afterwards became reconciled to his child and son-in-law, so much so that he advanced the necessary sums to get him on in the Army, in which he purchased, step by step (a thing easily effected by money in those days under "Marse wings)," until he got a letter of service to raise a regiment of Highlanders in the year 1793, which he called the Camerons, and was numbered the 79th Regiment.

He then repaired to Scotland, escorted with a band of ten or twelve chosen Highland Officers of importance and nerve, who were attended by attached domestics, all of whom, including himself, were armed as completely as possible, and came to Kilfinichin, the house of his cousin, Colonel Mac Lean, of Kinlochallin (son of the before-mentioned Drimmin), from whence, after ascertaining the feelings then existing at Fort William, &c., he proceeded to that place guarded by them, and he entered the town with his piper playing the Cameron's March. The feelings of animosity which originally existed, as to the combat with Morsheilich being unfair, had disappeared; he made known his intentions of raising a Highland regiment, and expended money freely amongst the people. He selected Officers and Non-commissioned Officers from his own connexions and name, and in a short time recruited and enlisted so considerable a number of men (although Government allowed him no bounty), as completed the regiment within the time prescribed.

The regiment was consequently inspected, and passed by the late Duke of York as Commander-in-Chief in the Isle of Wight, when his Royal Highness (probably from conceiving that it was contrary to the good of the Army to permit regiments got up in such an unprecedented manner to continue on the strength of the Army) told Colonel Cameron, in the hearing of his Staff, that he would draft the regiment immediately, which induced our hero to tell him—"It is more than your Royal Father can do;" and he showed him the letters of service, in which it was particularly specified that the regiment would not be drafted, which annoyed the Duke so much that he instantly caused the regiment to be sent to the West Indies; thither Col. Cameron accompanied them, and so did his lady, who had, before then, presented him with 3 sons and 2 daughters.*

On their passage to the West Indies Mrs. Cameron was seized with a brain fever and jumped overboard; the Colonel instantly jumped into the sea after her, and prevented her from drowning,—but she never recovered. He remained with his regiment in the West Indies until it was so reduced by disease as to render it necessary to bring the skeleton of it home. Soon after its return he recruited it again with much trouble and expense (Government during that occasion allowed him the levy money or bounty granted the rest of the Army). He made the regiment most effective; and, although he was obliged to replace his original Highlanders by a considerable number of English and Irish recruits, he very soon made them, by the use of whisky and bag pipes, conceive themselves to be Highlanders. He constantly recruited and completed his regiment with Highlanders, to a most efficient state in a shorter period than any other Colonel could do, and rose a 2d battalion of Highlanders of 1000 men. It went on every service (with himself and his claymore at its head), viz.—Holland on various occasions, Egypt, Copenhagen, the Peninsula, Waterloo, &c. &c.

He acquired the rank of Lieutenant-General in the British Army, and that of Knight Commander of the Bath. His eldest son was the Lieut.-Colonel commanding his father's regiment, in which corps his other two sons were Major and Captain; the three served under their father in the Peninsula with great credit; the eldest was killed at Fuentes D'Onor covered with glory, Ewan, a promising youth, was also killed there while Aide-de-Camp to his father, and the third, named Neil, retired from active service when the war was ended in 1815, and when, on his father's death, he was refused the Colonelcy of his father's regiment, to which he laid claim pursuant to his father's will, in which he bequeathed, as far as he could, the regiment to his son, on the ground of his having raised it at his own expense, and served with it as before-mentioned.*

The writer of this memoir refers it to the British Army, who so often witnessed and admired the bravery of the departed hero, to confirm his gallant services (as alluded to briefly in the preceding statement); he himself has witnessed the facts here recorded,—those in America and the West Indies excepted; he knew no man more Gaulish or disposed to do a more friendly generous action. The writer is no relation, connection or namesake of the departed hero; his sole motive in writing this Memoir is, to let the world know authentic traits of an unprecedented nature of a true and brave Highlander, which he hopes will excite others to energy, bravery, and determination.

Both the caves herein mentioned are called, and most likely ever will, Cameron's Caves.

* We have not time to enquire into this statement, but doubt the accuracy of our correspondent as regards the Duke of York. His Royal Highness was occasionally hasty but, we believe, never inveterate.—ED.

Literary Notices.

A Residence in France, with an Excursion up the Rhine, and a Second Visit to Switzerland. By J. Fenimore Cooper, Esq., Author of "The Pilot," "The Spy," &c. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

THIS is in several respects a very remarkable book. Firstly, as containing the most unequivocal evidences of a perfect change of feeling in the author as regards his countrymen, whom he no longer idolizes, but, on the contrary, asserts to be behind the rest of the civilized world in taste, good feeling, sympathy, and loftiness of purpose. Secondly, as embracing a curious picture of the state of France under Louis Philippe, to whom Mr. Cooper was personally introduced. And thirdly, as including an animated recital of his tour in Belgium, up the Rhine among the quaint old German towns, and over the Glaciers and Mountains of Switzerland. In detailing the particulars connected with his residence in France, the author, who enjoyed a familiar intimacy with La Fayette, recounts many interesting conversations with the old Republican General, in which are elicited some curious statements relative to the connexion between the "Citizen King" and La Fayette, who, after placing the semi-democratical crown on His Majesty's head, appears to have been kicked aside as of no further use. During the revolt which arose at the funeral of General Lemarque, Mr. Cooper traversed the streets of Paris, and kept a wary eye on all that was going on; and accordingly his pages teem with vivid and graphic sketches of the event. From his "Second Visit to Switzerland" we extract the following picturesque description of the ancient Chateau of Blonay:—

"The buildings of Blonay are neither extensive nor very elaborate. We entered by a modest gateway in a retired corner, and found ourselves at once in a long, narrow, irregular court. On the left was a corps de batiment, that contained most of the sleeping apartments, and a few of the others, with the offices; in front was a still older wing, in which was the knight's hall, and one or two other considerable rooms; and on the right was the keep, an old solid tower, that was originally the nucleus and parent of all the others, as well as a wing that is now degraded to the duties of a storehouse. These buildings form the circuit of the court, and complete the edifice; for the side next the mountain, or that by which we entered, had little besides the ends of the two lateral buildings and the gate. The latter was merely a sort of chevalrous back-door, for there was another between the old tower and the building of the knight's hall, of more pretension, and which was much larger. The great gate opens on a small elevated terrace, that is beautifully shaded by fine trees, and which commands a view second, I feel persuaded, to but few on earth. I do not know that it is so perfectly exquisite as that we got from the house of Cardinal Rufo, at Naples, and yet it has many admirable features that were totally wanting to the Neapolitan villa. I esteem these two views as much the best that it has ever been my good fortune to gaze at from any dwelling, though the beauties of both are, as a matter of course, more or less shared by all the houses in their respective neighbourhoods. The great carriage-road, as great carriage-roads go on such a mountain side, comes up to this gate; though it is possible to enter also by the other.

"Blonay, originally, must have been a hold of no great importance, as neither the magnitude, strength, nor position of the older parts, is sufficient to render the place one to be seriously assailed or obstinately defended. Without knowing the fact, I infer that its present interest arises from its great antiquity, coupled with the circumstance of its having been possessed by the same family for so long a period. Admitting a new owner for each five-and-twenty years, the present must be somewhere about the twenty-fifth De Blonay who has lived on this spot!

"A common housemaid showed us through the building, but, unfortunately, to her it was a house whose interest depended altogether on the number of floors there were to be scrubbed, and windows to be cleaned. This labour saving sentiment destroys a great deal of excellent poetry and wholesome feeling, reducing all that is venerable and romantic to the level of soap and house-cloths. I dare say one could find many more comfortable residences than this, within a league of Vévey; perhaps 'Mon Repas' has the advantage of it, in this respect: but there must be a constant, quiet, and enduring satisfaction, with one whose mind is properly trained, in reflecting that he is moving, daily and hourly, through halls that have been trodden by his fathers for nearly a thousand years! Hope is a higher, and, on the whole, a more useful, because a more stimulating, feeling, than that connected with memory; but there is a solemn and pleasing interest clinging about the latter, that no buoyancy of the first can ever equal. Europe is fertile of recollections; America is pregnant with hope. I have tried hard, aided by the love which is quickened by distance, as well as by the observations that are naturally the offspring of comparison, to draw such pictures of the latter for the future, as may supplant the pictures of the past that so constantly rise before the mind on this quarter of the world; but, though reasonably ingenious in castle-building, I have never been able to make it out. I believe laziness lies at the bottom of the difficulty. In our moments of enjoyment we prefer being led, to racking the brain for invention. The past is a fact; while, at the best, the future is only conjecture. In this case the positive prevails over the assumed, and the imagination finds both an easier duty, and all it wants, in throwing around the stores of memory, the tints and embellishments that are wanting to complete the charm. I know little of the history of Blonay, beyond the fact of its great antiquity, nor is it a chateau of remarkable interest as a specimen of the architecture and usages of its time; and yet, I never visited a modern palace, with half the intense pleasure with which I went through this modest abode. Fancy had a text, in a few unquestionable facts, and it preached copiously on their authority. At Caserta, or St. Cloud, we admire the staircase, friezes, salons, and marbles, but I never could do anything with your kings, who are so much mixed up with history, as to leave little to the fancy; while here, one might imagine not only time, but all the various domestic and retired usages that time brings forth.

"The Ritter Saal, or Knight's Hall, of Blonay has positive interest enough to excite the dullest mood. Neither the room nor its ornaments are very peculiar of themselves, the former being square, simple, and a good deal modernised, while the latter was such as properly belonged to a country gentleman of limited means. But the situation and view form its great features; for all that has just been said of the terrace, can be better said of this room. Owing to the formation of the mountain, the windows are very high above the ground, and at one of them is a balcony, which, I am inclined to think, is positively without a competitor in this beautiful world of ours. Cardinal Rufo has certainly no such balcony. It is le balcon des balcons."

Glances at Life in City and Suburb. By Cornelius Webbe. Smith, Elder, and Co.

This volume chiefly consists of reprints of some very clever and entertaining papers, and they well merit to have been thus collected together. We have seldom met with more faithful sketches of life, and yet they are scarcely to be surpassed in comic humour. From hints to hypochondriacs we take the following:—

"Keep the mind cheerful if you can, and employed, which you may. A vacant mind, like a bill in parliament, may be innocent enough in that state, but it depends upon the filling up—"the third reading"—as to what it will hereafter turn out. Do you love literature? Read works of humour in preference to those of seriousness: such as the novels of Fielding and Smollett, Scott, Edgeworth, Bulwer, and Galt. These writers will give you more cheerful views of life—the two first especially. If you have not looked into Fielding since you were a boy (and who, as a boy, did not read Tom Jones?) there is something in mere association which will recal the feelings of that happiest period of life; and it is hard if there is not some passage of the past, which only to remember is like living youth over again. If you once begin to laugh, farewell, for that fit, to hypochondria. Avoid even a Parthian glance at past impressions of a painful nature. Do not dwell long on old grievances, even if they will start up again, and, like Richard's victims, repass in melancholy procession. Let them "come like shadows—so depart!" our bodily eyes are given that we may look before us;—hope, our mental eyesight, inclines us to look forward. There is no further use in being mindful of the past than as it makes us careful of the future. Avoid rumination leave "chewing the end of sweet and bitter" to four-footed creatures; they have nothing else to do, and can turn it to some account. Even in your progress to convalescence, some old monster, tired and torn of the disease, will start up to frighten you back; but nothing will so effectually subdue it as this very simple exercise;—hail its rise with a hearty "Pooh, pooh!" and a hundred to one but it turns tail. But, before all things, avoid fresh occasions for mental disquiet. Let the actions of the day be such as will bear review on the pillow at night. If you have done a wrong anywhere, either thoughtlessly or from passion, set it right—if possible;—if you cannot, at least atone for it by doing good in some other quarter. It is the impulse—the intention—not the mere value and amount of the good you may do, which is the thing; it is the thought that you are not so much engrossed by yourself and your own afflictions as to be incapable of sympathising with others which shall make you rich indeed. Encourage charity in thought, word, and deed. If you can once forget yourself, and look abroad upon the world, not as a mere idle speculator upon the miseries of your fellow-men, but as a participator in them, you will soon forget your own cares and miseries in the cares and miseries of others. Leave all besides to Heaven."

"Hardly nine months have elapsed since, in consequence of the hostile preparations of Russia in the Black Sea, England was under the necessity of increasing her Naval establishment, by the addition of five thousand men. It was stated at the time, that this force was necessary for the protection of our commerce, and the maintenance of our maritime ascendancy, in a ratio corresponding with the increase in the navies of other Powers. France, Holland, Sweden, and Sardinia, imitated our example; and thus the aggressive projects of Russia have imposed on the maritime States the burdensome maintenance of defensive armaments, at a period when every European Government, and England in particular, have required to satiety their unabated desire, nay, their utmost anxiety, for the preservation of peace.

"Under what circumstances, then, does Russia call, at this moment, for an army of one hundred and fifty thousand men, and assume a warlike attitude, which, considering the present amount of her fleets in the Baltic and in the Black Sea, is even more imposing than that which she displayed in 1812, when forced to contend for independence against Napoleon, supported by half the Continent? Are the gallant Circassians the sole object of preparations which extend throughout the entire Russian empire, or is it that Poland, the Don Cossacks, the Crimea, Georgia, Mingrelia, Imeretia, Persia, Moldavia, Wallachia, Servia, each and all sigh for the hour of retribution, and feel that their hopes, their sympathies, and their national existence, are inseparably attached to the success of those hardy mountaineers, the mere mention of whose name drew down upon us, eight months ago, from men of education, the charge of imposture?

"If such be the grounds of the alarm which agitates the Cabinet of St. Petersburg, why is she not earnestly invited by those of her allies, whose tranquillity depends upon her stability, to desist from a contest, not only wholly unprovoked on the part of the Circassians, but maintained by them for the preservation of that independence, which is the inalienable birthright inherited from their forefathers?

Looking at the armaments of Russia under the simple point of view of their being intended to act against Circassia, is not England called upon, if not on grounds of humanity, on those of self-interest, and essentially with interests of peace, which are those of commerce, to place herself in a position to render good offices to either of the belligerents in the event of their being required? So long as the war continues, it not only keeps up alarm in Europe, and is detrimental to the interests of Russia herself, but all the populations bordering on the Euxine, the Marmora, the Sea of Azof, and the Caspian, comprising many millions, of different creeds, languages, habits, and resources, are kept in continual ferment. The industry of man throughout those extensive regions is necessarily held in check by the insecurity arising from the general apprehension of war, and from the instability of their Governments, under the ever varying aspect of affairs, and the multifarious action of Russian diplomacy, sowing everywhere the seeds of dissension, revolution, rebellion, destruction, and anarchy.

"It is evident from all accounts that the entire military talent of the Empire is at this moment put in requisition. All the most distinguished generals of the staff have been ordered to attend the Emperor to the south: General Jomini, the general writer on the campaigns of Buonaparte, Marshal Paskewitsch, Prince of Warsow, Gen. Rosnieski, the best General of Cavalry in the Russian service, and celebrated for his military skill and experience, Count de Witt, &c.

"We have, however, already shown, on the declaration of Circassian independence, that no forces which the Emperor of Russia can bring into the field will be able to effect any thing against the inhospitable tribes of the Caucasus.

"'If Russia conquers us,' the Circassians say, 'it will not be by arms, but by cutting off our communications and making use of Turkey and Persia as if they were already hers; by rendering the sea impassable, as if it were her own; by blockading our coast; by destroying not only our vessels, but those of other states which approach us; by depriving us of a market for our produce; by preventing us from obtaining salt, gunpowder and other necessaries of war, which to us are necessaries of life—by depriving us of hope.'

"To succeed, therefore, in her unprincipled ambition Russia must of necessity not only continue to stop the transit trade through Georgia, but the traffic of Austria, Persia, Turkey, and every other power, with the eastern shores of the Euxine. She must make herself absolute mistress of that sea, in order to intercept the commerce of all Europe, and she must recognise her antagonist as a belligerent power, in order to be able to exercise the right of blockade, because, without such blockade being officially announced and acknowledged by England, she can have no right whatever to stop an English merchant-ship bound for the Circassian coast."

Ruolt's Portraits of Eminent Conservative Statesmen. The second Number of this work, which contains Portraits of the Duke of Newcastle, Lord Salmouth, and Sir William Follett, is even superior to the first. The engravings are exquisitely executed and the accompanying Memoirs are lively but accurate sketches of these leading Conservatives.

East India Intelligence.

Singapore.—We have received an account of an encounter which appears to have taken place between a fleet of pirate boats and H. M. sloop of war Wolf, accompanied by the schooner Zephyr. The junk which brought the intelligence was on this side of Pedra Branca when she heard firing from the Wolf and Zephyr, and descried the men-of-war's boats leaving their vessel under cover of her fire, and making towards a fleet of five large piratical prows, who appeared to be using their best exertions to avoid the attack, and pulled for that purpose in towards the shore, near to which they descried a more numerous body of prows than that held in chase by the Wolf's boats, but whether sailing or at anchor, the distance prevented them from making out. Next arrivals, we hope, will bring further accounts, and of a more gratifying nature.—Hurkaru, April 24.

The Chamber of Commerce lately made a representation to Government on the precarious position of the British trade at Rangoon, soliciting the appointment of a Consul, or Assistant Resident at Rangoon, with consular powers. The proposition was favourably received, and a reference has been made to the Resident at Ava to ascertain if any objection will be raised to such an appointment.—Calcutta Courier, April 21.

the inhabitants of which had afforded protection to Chunun Singh. The place was saved from plunder by the head man giving his promise to put Luchmun Singh in possession of Chunar within a month. A report prevails that the execution of Jootu Ram, Hookum Chund, Futtay Singh, and the person who cut at Major Alves, is fixed for the 11th April.

Civil Annuity Fund.—It is stated that twenty-three applications have been made for pensions on the Civil Annuity Fund, under the modified rules prescribed by the Court of Directors.—Bengal Herald, April 24.

Euphrates Expedition.—It is stated that Ibrahim and Reschid, Pashas, have been positively ordered to oppose the Euphrates' Expedition under Col. Chesney.—Ibid.

We communicate with sorrow the death of Lieut. Colonel Sneyd, Madras Army, just before arriving at Madras, on his way from Hyderabad. His remains were brought to, and interred with military honours at, St. Mary's burying-ground. In Colonel Sneyd the service has lost a good and zealous officer; but a keener pang remains to all those who enjoyed his intimacy and acquaintance, who knew and felt the kind-heartedness of his amiable man, which earned him the grateful title of the "Subaltern's friend."—Madras Herald, May 14.

At a Court of Directors held at the East India house this week, it was resolved to raise the rate of interest payable on East India bonds from 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. per annum to 3*l.* 10*s.* per annum. The increase will take effect from the date of that resolution.

The Ship Charles Eaton.—A letter from Commander Aglesden, of the Indian Navy, dated Bombay, 25th Feb. last, states that he was under orders from the Bombay Government to proceed immediately, in command of the Company's brig of war Tigris, to Torres Straits, for the purpose of endeavouring to save the passengers and crew of the ship Charles Eaton, said to be wrecked near Murray's Island. Subsequent accounts from Bombay report the departure of the Tigris on 5th March.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be Tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an Imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its main qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, Alex. Thorn, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use: in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 229, High Holborn, also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broths, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result. the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acid of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them.*

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

APPROVED ARTICLES for the TOILET, PREPARED BY

HANNAY AND CO., Perfumers to the Queen, to Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victoria, No. 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London.

HANNAY'S FRAGRANT ESSENCE OF RONDELETIA, for the Toilet or Handkerchief, originally prepared expressly for the use of the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe. An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered for Public Patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other Essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of Lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open free, and on which handkerchiefs so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

The ESSENCE of RONDELETIA is a most delightful and refreshing Perfume, for burning in Philosophical Pastilles.

 The great satisfaction HANNAY'S ESSENCE of RONDELETIA has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits,—perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Co., therefore, beg to inform their customers, that the ESSENCE of RONDELETIA cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop, 63, Oxford-street; but it may be obtained in the country of most respectable perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY & CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and the Seal.

Sold in Bottles at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

Also in handsome Cut Glass Toilet Bottles, as supplied for the use of the Royal Family, 10s.

HANNAY'S HIGHLY CONCENTRATED SMELLING SALTS, in Cut Bottles, with Glass Stoppers, 2s. each.

The extreme pungency of these Salts proves them to be in a richer state of concentration than those heretofore in use, with the desirable advantage of being in bottles with air tight stoppers, which prevents their decay, and are found to be a most useful appendage to the apartments of Invalids; the large Table Bottles, unstoppered for a few minutes, diffusing an agreeable and refreshing odour through the atmosphere, far preferable to that produced by fumigating pastilles, without the noxious and suffocating fumes produced by the charcoal contained in them. Their utility in the chamber of the sick, at church, in crowded assemblies, and at the theatre, is obvious; their beneficial effects in case of fainting should induce every Lady to carry one in her reticule. They can be filled into Ladies own Bottles, and they will not corrode the silver or gold mountings.

FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION,

HANNAY AND CO.'S NEW VEGETABLE SOAP

To those Ladies whose refined tastes value the appearance of beauty and health, Messrs. HANNAY and Co., Perfumers to the Royal Family, beg to recommend their NEW SOAP, prepared entirely from Vegetable Oils, as a most invaluable Improvement on Toilet Soaps; it possesses all the detergent properties of the common alkaline Soaps heretofore in use, without any of their injurious properties, it renders the Skin beautifully soft, smooth, and delicately white; removes all Redness, Freckles, Tan, and Sunburn, and justly ranks as the most agreeable, efficient, and harmless improver of the complexion in present use, and retains its agreeable perfume to the last.

Sold in Packets of three squares at 1s. 6d., six squares 3s., or six 3s. packets 15s.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA SOAP.

This is the Vegetable Soap perfumed with the admired Fragrance of the Essence of Rondeletia, and has acquired the unqualified approbation and patronage of almost every Lady of Fashion.

Price 1s. the square, or six 5s.

HANNAY'S IMPROVED STICKING PLAISTER.

This useful article is a great improvement on the old Court Plaister, as it will adhere until a cut is healed up, and will not come off in washing the hands. Price 6d.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE

PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills, they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, allowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 3s. 6d.; pints, quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE

for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery to King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HENTSON, Esq., No. 3, Finnical's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Great Ile street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, "April 15, 1835." (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSON.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE —Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salutiferous and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla, Buchu, and other chaste alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains in the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. STIRLING, 8d, High-street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London (carriage free), in Bottles, at 4s. 6d., 10s., and 20s. each.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The Proprietor being apprised of several unprincipled Medicine Vendors, who, when applied to for this remedy, substitute, under the name of Cubebs, Sarsaparilla, &c., a worthless and injurious article of their own make, feels it is an imperative duty to say, that it is absolutely necessary, before purchasing, to see the name "J. W. Stirling," Whitechapel, is engraved on the Government Stamp affixed outside the wrapper on the bottle, without which it cannot be genuine.

An Inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or

SOILING the SKIN.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair, to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and others in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, W. Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 93, Gracechurch-street, and Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; in Bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 15s. each, with directions for use, and a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Hassan; also that of W. Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL

PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible; they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for these complaints, and, after a cure is effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature, which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scorbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unparalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S. Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Theatre of Anatomy, Blenheim-street.

DEAR COOPER,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed. And what I consider their most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that harass the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, JOSHUA BROOKES.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Hannay and Co.'s General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine now in use, with an allowance for taking six at one time, warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

IMPROVED PATENT WATER

CLOSETS.—J. ODY begs to inform Architects, Surveyors, Builders, and Gentlemen repairing their houses, that he has received His Majesty's Royal LETTERS PATENT for an improved Construction of Water-closet, which has two very important advantages over all others, viz. simplicity and economy. The whole apparatus only occupies a space of two feet square, is perfectly free from any offensive effluvia, has an ample supply of water always standing in the basin, and is not liable to be out of order.

Urinary Closets on the same principle, admirably adapted to public buildings, hotels, &c.

The following apparatus in the usual valve closet is dispensed with—the service box and valve, the spring lever and pipe to conduct the wire, the air or D trap, the cranks and wire to open the valve in the service-box; all of which are liable to be out of order.—Premises surveyed, and an accurate estimate given of the expense.

Orders received at SALMON, ODY, and Co.'s Patent Trusses Manufactory, 202, Strand, London.

FAMILY MEDICAL MACHINE.—The

Manufacturers of Dr. SCOTT'S newly-invented CLYSOPUMP respectfully invite public attention to this desirable domestic apparatus, the piston of which, by a curious mechanical contrivance, keeps the pump unvaryingly full, propels the fluid by its ascent as well as descent, and consequently totally excludes air, and discharges an uniform stream. No part of the apparatus is perishable; there is no fixing necessary, nor basin, nor any other article required. In short, it has been so contrived by its professional inventor, that the most infirm or timid female may apply it with facility. Persons in the habit of using lavements will duly appreciate this incomparable apparatus, which cannot be too strongly recommended to individuals who are constantly requiring opening medicines, or those who suffer from indigestion, bilious attacks, spasms, flatulence, and complaints connected with a disordered state of the stomach, or an irritable, weakened, or sluggish action of the bowels.—Supplied, wholesale and retail, by SAVORY and Co., 369, Strand (three doors from Exeter Hall), and may be procured of all respectable Druggists in the kingdom. Purchasers in the country will please to observe the Inventor's stamp.

These truly charming and melodious compositions will be found alike interesting to the amateur and to the professor; as they are amazingly effective and brilliant without being difficult, and the parts are alternately obligato, and full of interest for each Instrument. So highly are Reissiger's Trios esteemed on the Continent, that no pianist, nor even violin or violoncello player, is without them. In fact, whether we consider them with respect to the invention and originality of ideas, the classical richness and piquancy of their harmonies, or the variety, freshness, and beauty of the melodies with which they abound—we are compelled to allow that they deservedly rank with the Immortal Trios of Beethoven, Hummel, Mozart, and Onslow. It is therefore with great pleasure, that Messrs. R. Cocks and Co. are enabled to offer this new and correct Edition of these exquisite productions, beautifully and uniformly printed on fine stout paper, at one-half the cost of the foreign edition.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Hollis-street (established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as Domestics, with good characters, are waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock. Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment [for] Servants, but if the Servants possess a good character [it] is obviously absurd to suppose that it is injured [by] the method having been taken to procure a situation.—It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Pro[spectus].

LATE TOMMEY'S HOTEL, 36, Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.—The Nobility and Gentry are respectfully informed that the above extensive Establishment, fitted up in the most superior and splendid style, is THIS DAY RE-OPENED for their reception, under experienced management.

Portsmouth, Oct. 21st.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Pique and Inconstant sailed on Saturday for Plymouth, the first at eight a.m., and the latter at three, p.m. They got into the Sound on 16th and 17th. Pluto st. has been detained in consequence of her defects; a party of shipwrights and caulkers have been at work on her since Friday. She hauled off the Dock-yard Jetty last night, and it is expected the detachment of Marine Artillery and the Supernumerary Serjeants and Corporals of Marines for the coast of Spain, will embark this afternoon and depart in the morning. Athol troop ship has been taken into harbour to refit. Cracker, tender to Seaflower, sailed for Guernsey on Monday. North Star could not land her treasure at Spithead, and it has been done in harbour, and despatched to London. She is returning stores, and will be paid off next week. The Norfolk came in on Wednesday, to embark convicts for New South Wales. They are placed in charge of Mr. John Inches, Surgeon, R.N. The Beagle and Prince Regent yacht arrived yesterday; the former on her way to Woolwich to be paid off, to land some stores, and take round to the Observatory at Greenwich several unserviceable chronometers from the College Observatory. The yacht is to receive Lord Elphinstone for a passage to Bombay, and then cross over to be presented to the Imaum of Muscat. On working from the Thames they discovered a leak, and she is now in Dock to have it stopped, and also to have her gilt ornamental work covered with canvas and board, and her ports better secured against bad weather. She will be ready for his Lordship to-morrow, but it is not thought she will be able to get away until Monday or Tuesday. The Princess Charlotte, Ganges, Samarang, Ariadne, and Conway, are in the Basin. The Venerable will be docked next spring. Ships in Port.—Norfolk at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, North Star, Conway, Excellent, Royal George yt., Beagle, Pluto, Barrosa trans., Athol troop ship, Prince Regent yt., Emerald, in Harbour.

Plymouth, Oct. 20th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Oct. 14.—Sailed H.M. steamer Pluto, Lieut. Duffill, for Woolwich, to have her defects made good. M.M. sloop Comus, 18, was taken into dock this day, and as soon as she is repaired she is to be commissioned. 15—Sailed H.M. ships Minden, 74, Captain Sharpe, and Russell, 74, Capt. Sir W. H. Dillon, for the Tagus; the latter has taken out 10,000 stand of arms, and other warlike stores; the Partridge, 10, Lieut. Bisson, sailed at the same time with dispatches for the Commander-in-Chief at Lisbon. Sailed the Hermes steamer, Lieut. Blount, for Falmouth, from whence she will proceed with the next mail for the Mediterranean. H.M. schooner Dolphin, 10, Lieut. Roberts, arrived here this day from Portsmouth, and sailed the following day for the Coast of Africa. 16th—Arrived from Portsmouth H.M.S. Pique, Capt. Hon. H. J. Rous; also said to be destined for the West Indies, after the trial cruise; Valck, Capt. Van Coster, Dutch man-of-war brig. Sailed, with stores for Pembroke Dock-yard, the Diligence, Naval Transport. 17—Arrived from Portsmouth H.M.S. Inconstant, 36, Capt. John Hayes. 18—Sailed for Woolwich, the Beagle, 10, Capt. Robert Fitzroy, where she will be paid off. Also, sailed H.M. sloop Fly, 18, Commander Russell Elliott, for South America. 20th—Arrived H.M. steamer Rhadamanthus from the Eastward, with the Marines destined for the Tagus. Sailed the squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral Sir Charles Paget, consisting of the following ships, viz. Bellerophon, 80; Vanguard, 80; Hercules, 74; Pembroke, 74; Pique, 36; Inconstant, 36; and Pantaloon, 10. The Scylla, in dock at this port, is found to be in so defective a state, that her officers and crew are turned over to the Satellite, 18, which has just received a complete repair. The Heron, lighter, has taken on board provisions and four tons of powder, and will proceed immediately to the north coast of Spain. Assistant-Surgeon, John Shaw (supernumerary) to Royal Adelaide. P.S.—The Marines which arrived in the Rhadamanthus, from Woolwich yesterday, were put on board Sir C. Paget's squadron, and she sailed again some time in the night for Woolwich. It is conjectured the squadron are gone to Lisbon, from the circumstance of the Marines being distributed on board them. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, and Scylla. In the Sound—Scorpion, and Valck, Dutch brig of war.

Admiral Sir P. Durham, yesterday, gave a grand entertainment to all the officers of the ships at Portsmouth, and to such as were at the Battle of Trafalgar, on which occasion he commanded the Defiance, which ship bore a conspicuous part in the action. Although it is 31 years ago, there are several residing in Portsmouth and the neighbourhood, that have been met with. We hear that four old sailors got an interview with Sir P. Durham, having "urgent business," which proved to be, that they had served on board the Defiance with the gallant Admiral, and their statement proving correct, he generously gave them a sovereign each to drink his health.

Royal Marines.—Lieut. Gordon, and 20 men, are ordered to go out in the Pluto st., from Portsmouth, in addition to the party of Marine Artillery, and Non-Commissioned Officers.

Notwithstanding the tremendous gales which have prevailed during the week, we are happy to state that the men-of-war in the Sound, and the shipping in the different parts of the Harbour, have sustained no injury whatever. The hurricane on Wednesday night afforded the most decisive proof of the superiority of this harbour, as a roomy and safe place of refuge for shipping in dangerous weather. Six sail of the line, with the Fly sloop, Pantaloon, Partridge, and Scorpion brigs, and Diligence transport, besides several merchantmen, rode out the gale in perfect safety in the Sound, under shelter of the Breakwater, which being now advanced towards completion, after nearly twenty-five years of continued labour, is affording evidence of its great utility in protecting this harbour from the fury of the western gales. The stories circulated that the anchorage in the Sound is injured by the erection of the Breakwater, has been, in this instance, most satisfactorily refuted. The sea raged most terrifically outside the Breakwater, and the tide rose nearly as high as in the fatal hurricane of November, 1824, when 36 vessels went on shore; but it was remarked, that for two miles or more, inside that great national work, the sea presented a comperatively calm appearance, and it is now past all doubt, that treble the number of vessels might have rode out the gale in safety under the protection of that mighty bulwark, which is one of the wonders of the age.—Devonport Telegraph.

On Monday last the first increase of 1s. a-day to the half-pay of the Pursers of the Royal Navy was paid at the Dock-yard, to the great satisfaction of this deserving but hitherto neglected class of officers, who have been endeavouring for more than twelve years to accomplish this object, and are now indebted to a liberal administration for a boon which is universally admitted to be founded on justice.—Devonport Telegraph.

Captain Phipps Hornby, C.B., a cousin to Lord Stanley, is the new naval aide-de-camp to His Majesty, vice Raines, deceased. A vacancy arose in the number of militia aides-de-camp to the King by the decease of Lord Dufferin.

The master shipwrights at Liverpool and their journeymen are at war. An advance of wages had been conceded by the former, but on conditions which the latter deemed objectionable, and, in consequence, the arrangement which had been concluded remains unratified. The journeymen have put forth by public advertisement 21 rules and regulations as the only articles on which they are prepared to resume their labour.

The North Star has brought home four convicts, the remainder of 12, who it is understood overpowered and murdered their guards, when proceeding from some port of New South Wales to another, and, striking across the Great Pacific Ocean, nearly half the circumference of the globe, in their small vessel, had begun to commit acts of piracy on the coasts of Chili, when they were seized by the authorities, and delivered up to one of our men-of-war.

Plymouth Breakwater.—The western end of this stupendous undertaking is now nearly finished. The foundation of the lighthouse at that extremity is laid, and the building it is understood, will be proceeded with early next spring. It is needless to remark that this work, when finished, will present one of the most triumphant monuments of the bold enterprise and science of man overcoming obstacles apparently insurmountable effected in ancient or modern times.

Disastrous Loss of the Barque Doncaster.—The Childe Harold, Capt. Willis, arrived from Bombay, brings intelligence of the wreck of the barque Doncaster, Capt. Pritchard (which sailed from the Mauritius for London about 20th June), on the reef of Agulhas, about 70 miles S.E. of the Cape of Good Hope, supposed on the night of Sunday 17th July, when every soul on board perished. The only clue to the names of the passengers is, a small memorandum book, or journal, a little defaced, which, from comparison of dates and circumstance, appears to have belonged to Dr. Page, of the R. Artillery or Engineers—and it is there stated, that the passengers were Capt. and Mrs. Wein, of the 29th Reg., Lieut. and Mrs. Welker, 99th Reg., Madame Wiehe and her daughter, Mrs. Saunders and family, Serj. John Reid, of the Royal Sappers and Miners, and 17 invalids.

Royal Marines.—On Sunday last Major Wright, K.H., Captains Leighton, Stewart, and Taylor, 6 subalterns, and 250 men, embarked on board the Rhadamanthus st.-ves. (under the temporary command of Mr. King, of the Messenger), the bands of this latter vessel being lent to the Rhadamanthus to take the Marines round to the westward. A finer body of young men never left the British shores. On Monday they managed to muster sufficient men to relieve the company on duty at the Dock-yard, by the aid of some recruits; and on Tuesday they were relieved by 4 companies of the Grenadier Guards, a detachment under the command of Colonel Fox having marched in on the preceding day and taken up quarters in the East Horse Square Artillery Barracks. The Officers were billetted on Long's Hotel. Col. M'Claverty, C.B., the Commandant of the Marines, has resumed the command from three months' leave of absence; and Lieut. Burney Varle, from H.M.S. Jupiter.

The Echo st. ves. was commissioned on Saturday last at Woolwich by Lieut. W. Viner Read (1823), and went Petty Officers and seamen. The Volcano st.-ves. has been taken up to the City Canal, to get engines and boilers. The Lightning Admiralty st.-yt., Lieut. Shambler, arrived at Woolwich on Wednesday night, from Stockholm, where she landed the Hon. Mr. Bligh and suite, on the 4th inst. The Lightning had experienced beautiful weather.

[From a Correspondent, Plymouth,] 19th Oct.—The Pique arrived here on the 16th, after a boisterous passage having been in considerable danger off the Bill of Portland and lost her main-topsail, blown out of the bolt-ropes in a squall—or, as some people say, for want of reefing in proper time. There seems some fatality about the management of this ship, and the report is strong that her constructor, Captain Symonds, and Capt. Rous, are by no means agreed in their opinions as to her stowage, &c., the former wishing to have the weights taken from the extremities, and the ship brought to nearly an even keel, after the same manner as her other ships, the Pique being moulded precisely upon the s ptinciple as the Vernon, Vestal, Caryefort, &c. &c., lat Capt. Rous is of opinion that she should be nearly s feet by the stern. If this be the case, and her con-ctor and commander differ so widely in their opinions, rial, under such circumstances, can be attended with a factory or final result. The Inconstant arrived the day the Pique, and appeare a fine frigate. Both ships are rted to sail well; but as one left the day before the r, and they were not in company, no opinion can yet be ed. Captain Hayes, the constructor of the Inconstant, mends her for the first cruise; and it has been very ge-lly remarked, that it would have been but fair to have o Capt. Symonds the same chance, for of course much nds upon the manner in which a ship is stowed, and d, and handled;—and it appears he could be spared his official duties to take a cruise in the Vonguard.

he Lieuts. of the Ordinary are now paid as First Lieu-nts of third-rates. The late additional Lieuts. appointed o enable four to be Divisional Lieutenants and two for hips' duty, and their servitude is considered as sea ice.

here is, we are glad to say, no prospect that the seamen marines employed on shore in Spain, forming forts, erles, &c., will be paid by the Spanish government for arduous and laborious duties; if similarly employed ny extra duties in their own service, they are entitled ditional pay. Surely no government could deny their to what they are allowed by their own.

is reported the Apollo frigate yacht, at Portsmouth, is e fitted as a floating boat-house, for the ordinary at port. She was altered, at a very great expense, to a t for George the 4th. Sic transit gloria mundi.

he Greenwich, 74, is nearly rigged alongside the k-yard, at Portsmouth, preparatory to her proceeding e Eastward to be broken up, having been sold to Mr. ret, of Rotherhithe, for 5,300*l.*

Kinsom's sounding machine:—have to certify that I have put your sounding instru-t to a complete practical test, by using it every second by day and by night for nine days, beginning with a h of five fathoms, and extending to 600 fathoms. dings up to 80 fathoms being obtained whilst going at ate of six knots per hour. Inspecting the accuracy of nstrument, I have only to state, that I found it perfect; as to simplicity, I need only say that all my crew soon erstood its use, and on these grounds I can strongly mmend this instrument as being of great practical ty."

he Masters and Second Masters of guard-ships are red to qualify themselves for Pilots, and to take charge s Majesty's ships coming into or going out of the ports which the Masters are attached; no extra pay to be ed.

he young Sir Godfrey Webster has just attained his rity, and is serving on board one of the line-of-battle to the Mediterranean as Midshipman. The second of the late Baronet is also in the navy, and on the West s station.

OAD OF SAUMAREZ.—The remains of this gallant noble-were interred last week at Jersey. As it had been the epeated request of his Lordship that no pomp or pa-ntry should attend his funeral obsequies, but that they ld be conducted in as plain and private a manner as ible, the number of gentlemen invited to assist was but paratively small. The inhabitants of Jersey sponta-ly closed their shops during the day; minute guns, by r of the Lieutenant-Governor, were fired from Castle et and Fort George, from noon till half-past one o'clock; ells of the town church and St. James's tolling during ame time; and the flags of the various ships in the har-as well as that of the Bethel Union or Sailors' Chapel, hich his Lordship was the patron and warm supporter, hoisted half-mast high.

The magistrates beg that you will have the goodness to convey to the Officers, Non-commissioned Officers, and Privates of the 96th reg., the high sense they entertain of the exemplary good conduct of the corps during the period of 12 months they have remained in this garrison, and that you will at the same time express to the reg. the peculiar gratification which the magistrates feel at the good understanding that has uniformly existed between the regiment and the citizens. Assuredly the best wishes of the magistrates and of the inhabitants of this city will accompany the 96th in whatever quarter of the globe their services may be required. I have, &c.,

RIFLE BRIGADE, 1st Batt.—The Adjutant-General did not inspect the Batt. at Chatham on the 20th, as was expected, but will do so on the 26th instant.

1st West India Regt.—The following Officers have embarked for the head-quarters of their regiment:—Ensigns Campbell, Mackenzie, Pogson, and the Hon. T. C. S. Foster.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—On Monday evening the Artillery Officers sumptuously entertained the Officers of the Grenadier Guards, who are arrived at Woolwich to do duty in the Dock-yard. It is said two detachments of line regiments will relieve the Guards from Chatham. Veterinary Surgeon Percival has joined the Infirmary at Woolwich, vice Burt, ordered to Dublin. A serious affray between the Marines and Artillery took place on Wednesday night, in the dancing-room of the Abercrombie public-house, at the back of the Horse Artillery Barracks, Woolwich. A dispute arose between a Marine and an Artillery-men, which came to blows, when a party of Marines, drunk, passing at the time, rushed up stairs into the dancing-room, and without inquiring into the cause of the riot, commenced an attack on the Artillery, who, being much inferior in strength, were cruelly maltreated, not only with the Marines' bayonets, but with the pewter-pots, &c. The Horse Artillery guard was sent for and soon arrived, but the Marines had taken the precaution to post sentries to prevent their coming up. The Foot Artillery guard then came, and after a protracted struggle, effected their way into the room. The Marines used the tankards, chairs, tables, glasses, &c.: the guard charged upon them, and after an obstinate resistance managed to capture nearly all, and lodged them safely in the guard-room. The Corporal of the guard of the Horse Artillery was so severely injured by the wounds, and from being several times knocked upon the head with the pewter-pots, that it is reported he died the same night, and many others are in the hospital from the effects of the wounds inflicted. Such was the determined resistance of the Marines that there is not a whole pane of glass left, and the house was completely strewn with broken furniture, glass, &c. An inquiry has been ordered into this affair, that the guilty parties may suffer their just reward.

YEOMANRY.—The Westmoreland and Cumberland Yeomanry Cavalry regiment assembled for permanent duty, at Penrith, on Tuesday, 4th Oct., and notwithstanding the lateness of the harvest, mustered within twelve men of its full complement. On Monday, the 10th, it was inspected on the Mains, near Longwathby, by Major Wallington, of the 10th Hussars, a very able, experienced, and distinguished officer, who came in front of the line at 11 o'clock, dressed in the splendid uniform of his regiment, and wearing his Waterloo medal. When he had very minutely inspected the regiment in open order, it marched past him by squadrons, single files, and troops, in the usual manner, and performed the sword exercise. It then executed a variety of movements, taken from the new book of cavalry regulations, advancing repeatedly by squadrons and in line, at a very fast pace, and in excellent order, frequently changing front and position, forming close column of squadrons, changing its front, counter-marching and again deploying into line, and finally advancing to the general salute; the performance of the whole of which was good throughout, and which was witnessed by the inspecting officer with evident satisfaction during its progress. At the termination of the review, Major Wallington requested Lieut.-Col. Hasell to inform the regiment that its performance had far exceeded his highest expectations, that he had been surprised and delighted at seeing such a field-day from a regiment of yeomanry; and that his report should be worded in the strongest terms of approbation as to the appearance and efficiency of the corps.

On Tuesday Colonel Tynte entertained a distinguished party at Halswell House, in Somersetshire, including the officers of his regiment, the West Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry. The occasion was selected for the presentation of a splendid piece of plate, value 200*l.*, to Capt. and Adj. Maher from his brother officers. The plate, which was executed by one of the first houses in Bath, consists of a superb centre piece and candelabra for the table, the branches formed of the acanthus, supported by beautifully executed dancing nymphs advancing with chaplets, and standing on a circular pedestal, on one side of which are embossed the arms of the gallant captain, encircled with military emblems, and on the other the following inscription:—"Presented to Captain Charles Martin Maher, adjutant of the West Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry, by his brother officers, as a mark of the sense they entertain of the zeal, assiduity, and ability with which he has brought the regiment to its present high state of discipline, and as a token of their sincere regard, respect, and esteem towards him as a friend, an officer, and a gentleman. October 11, A.D. 1836." On the same day Serj.-Maj. James M'Cann was presented by the officers of the West Somerset Regt. with a splendid cup, value 30*l.*; on one side is engraved two mounted yeomen, in the attitude of "attack and defence;" on the other, the following inscription:—"Presented by the Officers of the West Somerset Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry, to James M'Cann, as a mark of their approbation of his services as Regimental Serjeant Major. October 11th, A.D. 1836." The following promotions have taken place in the regt., viz., A. G. Lethbridge, Esq., to be Capt.; Cornets C. H. Warren and J. Hole, to be Lieuts.; J. W. Browne, gent., to be Cornet.

Col. Sir Charles Smith, C.B., commanding the forces in the West Indies, has appointed, as his Military Secretary, Capt. T. H. Tidy, of the 14th regt.

Maj.-Gen. Sir Lionel Smith embarked on the 21st Aug. on board the Belvidera, for Jamaica. The Hon. John A. Beckles, President of Barbadoes, will administer the Government there until the arrival of Col. Sir Evan M'Gregor.

Hobart Town and Launceston papers have been received. Colonel Arthur is recalled by order of the King in Council. This measure has been hailed with demonstrations of joy by the great majority of the colonists.—Sun.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland has appointed Major George Browne, h. p. unatt., to be Inspector of Police for the district of Leinster, comprising Carlow, Dublin, Kildare, Kilkenny, King's, Longford, Louth, Meath, Queen's, Westmeath, Wexford, Wicklow. This is the situation kept vacant for Lieut.-Col. Macleod, and which that gallant officer declined accepting. Major Browne was lately appointed stipendiary magistrate for Belfast. The salary of the former situation is 500*l.* per annum, that of the latter 400*l.* The Lord Lieutenant has increased the number of his extra aides-de-camp to nine; the Hon. Capt. Liddell, of the Scots Fusilier Guards, brother of the Countess of Mulgrave, is first aide-de-camp to his Lordship.

One of the London assurance offices boasts that it assures the lives of members of yeomanry and volunteer corps without any extra premium.

Major-General Sir Amos Norcott is to continue on the staff of Jamaica, with the rank of second in command.

The Lieut.-Gen. commanding in Ireland inspected, last week, the garrison of Cork, comprising the 3d Drag. Guards, Royal Artillery, 33d, 35th, and 62d regts. Sir Edward has since returned to Dublin. Capt. F. C. Griffiths, 3d Drag. Guards, and Lieut. H. G. Conroy, Grenadier Guards, are appointed extra aides-de-camp to the Lieut.-General.

We are informed that the Board of Ordnance have decided on augmenting the allowance of coals to officers and sublims on guard. Nothing could be more wanted, and Government will doubtless find their account, in its preventing many from going into the Hospital from want of sufficient fire to warm and dry themselves after coming off sentry. An allowance of coals to school-rooms would also be very salutary, as many are deterred from attending on winter evenings, who, from want of this comfort, are perhaps induced to seek it in a public-house. Many things might be done to induce both children and adults to attend school. Some Commanding Officers have applied to keep the old great coats to clothe the children, but have been refused.

Major-Gen. Sir John Burlton has returned to Athlone, and resumed his command of the western district of Ireland.

COURT-MARTIAL.

On Wednesday a Court-Martial was held on board the Royal Adelaide, at Plymouth, to try Second Lieut. Frederick John White, R. Marines, on charges preferred by Capt. Mercer, R.M., of H.M.S. Vanguard.

The charges were, for disobedience of orders, neglect of duty, and contempt to his superior officer.

The Court consisted of the Hon. C. Paget, G.C.H.; R. Adm. of the Red, President. Capts. J. Hayes, C.B.; C. H. H. Ross, C.B.; R. Thomas, J. Sykes, S. Jackson, Sir T. Fellowes, M. P. F. Berkeley, M.P., and the Hon. H. J. Rous; G. Eastluke, Esq., officiating Judge Advocate. The prisoner was assisted by J. E. Elworthy, Esq., solicitor, of Devonport.

The Court having been duly sworn, and the charges read, the prisoner asked permission to address the Court, and submitted that the proceedings were irregular, inasmuch as that not being furnished with a copy of the particular facts which were intended to be proved against him, he could not do justice to his defence. But the Court having decided to proceed,

Capt. Mercer, R.M., the prosecutor, called Lieut. Topham, R.M., who proved that having been directed by Capt. Mercer to prevent Lieut. White going on shore, he told him, on his stating that he had obtained Captain Bouverie's permission, that he was not to leave the ship. He replied,—"I'll not stand that," and he then went into the cabin, and I endeavouring to remonstrate with him as to his going to Capt. Bouverie; he then went into the cabin, and immediately after came out very angry and said, "It was tyrannical, and Capt. Mercer had not treated him like a gentleman by doing so, and he would tell him so to his face."

On the evening of the 5th, prisoner did not inspect the relief at 4 o'clock, agreeable to Capt. Mercer's orders. Knew this, because witness did it himself; this was frequently the case with prisoner during the time he has been in the ship; has seen Capt. Mercer frequently remonstrate with him since we came out of harbour in June last, and seen prisoner treat Capt. M. with contempt; and no advice or remonstrance of Capt. M. ever appeared to have any effect upon the prisoner. The witness proved other cases of disrespectful conduct on the part of the prisoner to Capt. M. personally, as did also Serjeant-Major Best.

The prisoner did not call any witnesses, but cross-examined those for the prosecution. He was allowed an hour to prepare his defence, when he addressed the Court as follows:—"I should ill discharge the duty I owe the service to which I have the honour to belong, to this Hon. Court, or to myself, if I were, for one moment, to deny that I have erred, in allowing any circumstance to interfere with obedience to the orders of my superior, and I am before this Hon. Court for a breach of those orders, a breach, however, of a nature, and committed under such circumstances, as I trust may lead the Court to a favourable consideration of my conduct. It would ill become me to point out the particular circumstances, which lead me to believe such a departure from orders might not be deemed an offence worthy such serious notice as has been taken of it. The question of an Hon. member has produced evidence that the practice was not unfrequent. From the evidence given in support of the charge, it is clear, that no premeditated disobedience of orders, or neglect of duty, was contemplated; on the contrary, the cause of the disobedience is shown; and whilst I reiterate that, I do not say this as a justification, I respectfully submit it as an extenuation. These observations apply to the two charges, disobedience of orders and neglect of duty. The third charge is for treating Capt. Mercer with contempt; the proof upon this charge is confined to the prosecutor's deposition; none other being present; I cannot, therefore, produce the evidence of any one to compare with the proof offered by the prosecutor, I purposely abstain from asserting anything which may hold the appearance of contradicting that which Capt. Mercer has sworn to; but he has admitted that he was displeased, and that he immediately placed me under arrest; he, therefore, must have been excited. That excitement may have led him to consider my conduct as disrespectful; but I hope this Hon. Court will take all the facts into their consideration, and, in addition to which, I solemnly declare, upon my honour, that it was not my intention, nor my desire, to be either disrespectful or contemptuous; and I beg to express my sorrow that the prosecutor should have so misunderstood me. From my earliest youth I have been accustomed to the military service—my father having been upwards of 43 years in the line, and holding a staff appointment as Town Major; I have had also three brothers in the line. For myself, I am only 22 years of age; I have held my commission two years, and been embarked two months."

The Court was then cleared for half an hour, and after the usual preamble, pronounced the following sentence:—That the charges have been proved against the prisoner, and the Court doth in consequence adjudge the said Second Lieutenant, &c., to be severely reprimanded, to be dismissed H.M.S. Vanguard, and to be placed at the bottom of the list of the Second Lieutenants of the Royal Marines.

East India Intelligence.

Notice has been issued by the Government of India that Bills on London, secured on produce, that may be tendered to the Board of Customs, and accepted, will, until further orders, bear the rate of exchange of two shillings and one halfpenny for the Company's rupee, and that these Bills will in future be payable upon demand, in lieu of granting them payable at 40 days' sight.

The Governor of Bengal has issued an order, requiring civil servants intending to retire from the service, or to leave the country upon furlough, to give notice thereof to the Accountant of the Department to which they belong at least three months before their departure, in order to allow that officer to adjust any items of account standing to their debit in the public books.

Agra.—We understand that a General Court-Martial is likely to take place in this station, arising out of a dispute concerning dealing in horses. Lieut. Loveday, 37th Native Infantry, purchased a horse of Lieut. Hull, 36th N.I., who, five days after the horse had been in his stable, returned it to Lieut. Hull, on the plea that the animal was unsound, who refused to receive it. After the usual notes and references on such occasions, L Hall was accused by the other party of ungentlem conduct, in having warranted a horse sound whe knew him to be unsound; and the option was of him by the Brigadier commanding the station eith annul the bargain by taking back the horse, or to the result of a reference to higher authority; but L Hall, we understand, refused all compromise, and manded a public investigation to clear his character the accusations of Lieut. Loveday.* The case is before the Maj.-General.—Agra Ukhbar, April 30.

A report has reached Agra of the murder of the jeant-Major of the 60th, and his wife, by some Sepo that regiment. The cause assigned for the act was detection by the murdered officer of some irregula among the Sepoys, and the subsequent report of the the regimental staff.

Letters from Goomsur give a melancholy detail o sufferings of the troops from climate and hard work; 10th regiment in particular is placed perfectly hor combat, has occupied the posts in the rear to enable recruit, but officers and men have suffered too muc indulge even the hope of its being again fit for se this campaign. The remainder of the 50th regimen been ordered up from Vizagapatam, and should the vice not be brought to a speedy determination troops will be absolutely necessary. Later official i ligence states that only a few petty chiefs have taken, and that the principal leading men of the Ze dary are still at large. A combined movement of de ments from several regiments for the capture of principal chief has entirely failed; the chief dispersed followers, and escaped by passing between the comb force and the main body of the Army. The numbe sick at head-quarters amounted to 1500, and one reg only 75 effectives.

It is curious to mark the progress of this camp In October, five companies were called for by the authority, but this did not frighten the Rajah. Ne regiment with a company of Artillery, still no hop success; and detachments from different stations in Northern Division, accompanied by the Major-Gen joined the field force; yet opposition appeared to incr and finally a member of Council, two more regim and a company of Artillery, came round from Ma This brings us up to the present time, when the inclem of the season appears to be a more powerful enemy the insurgents, for the loss, except by sickness, been trifling.

MODERN WARFARE.

Modern custom, and the practice of the most civilised nations, have established the system of having but one sort of infantry, which is all drilled and disciplined alike: equally capable of serving as light infantry, or as battalions of the line. It appears that this is correct, and that it is the only system with which war can at present be carried on to advantage; but opinions are not so absolutely united on this subject as, at first sight, it would seem they must be. There are men who say that skirmishers are useless, and others who maintain that, in imitation of the Greeks and Romans, whose light and heavy infantry had their ordnance and manœuvred apart, we should form two sorts of infantry;—that the men employed in extended order to cover the advance or retreat of the line should not be practised in line manœuvres, whilst the latter should be taught only to act in mass. It is difficult to conceive all that can be advanced in support of such ideas: it is obvious, however, that they are liable to objections, which, in the absence of contrary evidence, seem insurmountably to militate against any change. If the practice of extended formations be discarded, how shall we be able to cover our front flanks or rear against such skirmishers as the enemy may put in action for the purpose of harassing and retarding the march of a corps either in an open or intersected country? How scour or attack a wood or mountain position without tirailleurs? How secure ourselves against surprise when manœuvring in presence of an enemy, either offensively or defensively? In short, how answer the necessity which at present exists in a hundred different situations for the use of light infantry, and which expose a corps, neglecting to observe the enemy, or feel its way by means of skirmishers, to be attacked at a disadvantage, or to sustain a severe loss by attempting to advance in mass over a ground covered by detached musketeers? But, it is said, our ranks are recruited from uneducated classes; that the attempt to teach the soldier to act, both singly and in mass, spoils him for both, and is calculated to produce confusion and unsteadiness on service; and lastly, that complication is especially to be avoided in military affairs; that the instruction of the soldier cannot be too simple, and that, therefore, if skirmishers are necessary, they should at least be kept distinct from the line. The experience of all the armies of Europe proves, that the common soldier is capable of performing both these duties. So far from excellence in the one being incompatible with steadiness in the other, it is observed, that those battalions which, during the course of a war, have been most frequently detached en tirailleur are those which manœuvre the best in the army, because, in fact, their safety depends upon the readiness, rapidity, and skill, with which they pass from open to close order. The principle of simplicity is no doubt excellent, yet inexperience may abuse it. It might, under the same pretext, be said, that the soldier should be taught but one species of movement; that wheels, facings, and flank formations, should be abolished as tending to confuse and bewilder [illegible]; yet this would be very absurd. If it were really true that the soldier was injured by being taught to perform both light infantry and battalion movements, it would be requisite to draw the number of men annually desired for the military service of the state, from the higher classes, to obtain a proper degree of ability; but battalions of the line cannot be too often exercised in light infantry manœuvres, because this mode of action is particularly adapted to give the men that coolness, confidence, and perfection of discipline, which by enabling them, when dispersed, to platoon readily, and oppose all the resistance possible to an attack, is of such importance towards securing that mechanical presence of mind, which, under the most unexpected and disadvantageous circumstances, leads them instantly to adopt the only means of safety. If skirmishers, however, are to be kept ignorant of close formations, and the line unpractised in extended ones, the whole system of modern warfare must be changed; for, first, if the light infantry are not to be taught line movements, how shall we get them to form their supports and reserves, run in upon them, from the battalion, and conduct the retreat, in line, or column of quarter distance, ready to form the square battalion, and repulse the charges of cavalry; or, in an advance, how pass a defile when it involves a necessity for firing and charging in regular order? Yet these are duties they are at present constantly called upon to perform, and in which, if they are not perfectly au fait, they will be exposed to destruction the first day they take the field in presence of an enemy. Secondly, if a regiment of the line be detached, must it dispense with all observation of the enemy, or must it be attended by a company from a light infantry battalion, which, besides disturbing the organisation of the corps to which it belongs, will be frequently also insufficient to fulfil the object of its mission? If it be said that it is the business of the line to support and cover its light infantry, and that the light infantry, being organised simply as skirmishers, will not be disturbed by furnishing detachments, since the whole line, in fact, will have its proportion of them, it will still be true, first—that the support of the line cannot obviate the necessity which the skirmishers would still frequently be under of both making and receiving regular charges in mass; second, that no limited proportion of skirmishers will be sufficient for all occasions, since all the men of a battalion are sometimes called upon to act in turn as skirmishers and reserves, relieving one another several times; and lastly, that any proportion at all of troops confined to this desultory mode of action will be a serious deduction, which would deprive us of the services of a portion of our numbers at the most critical period of an engagement. For instance; as during the course of a campaign, the whole of your line may be expected at one time or another to be engaged with the enemy, either serving on detachment, or on the ground of different battles, it is desirable that it should be perfectly organised throughout. Every part of your line of battle, therefore, must have its proportion of skirmishers, in order that it may never be taken at a disadvantage, or be incapable of profiting by favourable occasions. That is to say, a certain portion of the infantry of your army must be light. Taking this portion at a moderate computation, we may rate it one-third, and it will still remain insufficient to meet all the exigencies of the service, whilst not more than half this number will sometimes be required. Of 60,000 men, then, of which we suppose the infantry of your army to be composed, 20,000 must be light; but suppose you are opposed by an enemy of equal force, but who, according to modern custom, has only one kind of infantry, all his battalions being armed, drilled, and disciplined alike, capable of serving either in extended or close order; on the day of the battle, when the skirmishers engage, one side or other will be driven in. Let us suppose that yours are victorious, and that the line approaches to make the charge: the enemy's skirmishers have fallen back according to regulation, are already re-formed in line ready to take their part in the conflict. Yours, after the manner of the Roman velites, because they are incapable of sustaining a shock in mass, and in order to clear the front for your attack, retire through the intervals of the second line. But these troops form one third part of your army; your line still contains 40,000 men, but that of the enemy is much stronger. He will probably be victorious. Again, should the field of battle, or the confined nature of the attack, be such as to afford employment for a small number only of skirmishers, a great part of your force will be paralysed; you may find the fixed proportion insufficient at some points, or under some circumstances, whilst it is too great on others. The proposition is absurd. One great objection to it is, that no officer of experience will ever be found to adopt it. It is better to have but one sort of infantry, so as to be able to employ as many, or as few skirmishers as you desire, and reinforce or weaken them at pleasure. Light troops are as necessary to us as they were to the ancients; but we have discovered the art of making their services equally available as troops of the line, by which means we avoid the inconvenience to which the Greeks and Romans were subjected, who, because their light troops were incapable of giving or sustaining a serious shock, were thus deprived of the services of one-third or one-fourth part of their numbers at the hottest period of an engagement. The invention of gunpowder, and the consequent abolition of defensive armour, has done away with heavy armed infantry. The soldier is now lightly armed: he carries the firelock and bayonet, which unites all that fire and sword possesses, most terrible, and has justly superseded the use of other weapons. It is not the Greek and Roman system of forming, arming, or ranging their troops that we should imitate; because these systems are barbarous and unmanageable compared to ours; but it is the genius and great qualities displayed by several of their first commanders, the conception, and especially the execution, of some of those fine plans of campaign, which have justly immortalised the spirits who presided over them; the excellence of the military spirit and feelings cherished by their social institutions; in fine, it is the great moral qualities of the heroes of antiquity that we should endeavour to perceive, appreciate, and emulate.

ORDNANCE MILITARY ECONOMY.

SIR,—The system of parsimony pursued in the Ordnance department, under this head, towards the lower ranks, escapes under the stigma of a minor offence,—dignified by burlesque: though if a private soldier or officer were to follow the examples set him, the one would be punished at the triangle for disgraceful conduct, and the other at least sent to Coventry, if not expelled from the corps.

Through your independent means and love of justice, which every one must admire, though every one does not follow your example, I once had an opportunity of representing a fact in elucidation of the above Ordnance maxim, by a story of a pump and drain at the east end of the Woolwich Barracks, which, being out of order, the Officers inhabiting the east wing were unable to pay for, in opposition to every law: simply, because the Commanding R.E. Engineer, in conjunction with the Barrack-Master, gave it as their opinion!!! the damage did not arise from "fair wear and tear." So that every accident or decay incident to the Government buildings, that they opine should not have a place of exemption in their slang classification, may be, at their conjoined caprice, meritoriously made good by dishonest extortions from the subsistence of the men and Officers; that is, a precedent has been established to that effect. I say dishonest extortion, because, in the instance alluded to, the damage did not arise from any acts of any of the Officers; and, if it had so arose, the tax was levied in diametrical opposition to the King's warrant!!! permitting such exactions under certain circumstances, and under wholesome restrictions to be made; and because the levy was made upon Officers who did not reside in that wing (those living there, by the proper application of the law, alone are made liable) when the damage was done, but when after the sluggish repair the Barrack department made the charge.

Here then is a combination of freedom, liberality, and principle. Freedom, as disregarding right from wrong. Liberality, as giving away what most men hold dear. Principle, as "lucus à non lucendo."

Let us leave this piece of almost incredible dirt, arising out of a machine that wants cleansing as much as did the drain, that time and neglect had choked up, in the back yard of the east wing, for which the Captains and Lieutenants are made to pay!!! This only affected the Officer's pocket, and he was robbed of a few shillings by the express and illegal command of his superiors, who carried the above-mentioned opinion into effect.

But now, Sir, I have another tale to tell,—springing out of the same foul hot-bed, "Economy," affecting the corps at large:—crippling the means, scanty and miserable as they are, of getting recruits; and not only smothering the zeal of the Recruiting Officer, but punishing him for having exercised it.

It will be necessary, for the information of those who have not enjoyed the distinguished position of crimping for the Ordnance, that I give you an account of how this important branch of the service is carried on; and how the opening for larceny, so carefully reserved in the volumes of Finance Regulations, is diligently taken advantage of. This will make my letter too long for the limited space it deserves in your columns; therefore "The Story" shall be, with your permission, the subject of a future letter; and I will proceed with a detail of the rewards and punishments of the Recruiting Service of the Royal Artillery.

This service was formerly carried on under the superintendence of the Adjutants of Battalions, who very properly received one guinea for each man when made a soldier of; that is, when he joined the ranks. But now, under the superintendence of the Lieut.-Colonels in the temporary command of the different battalions, as they happen to be senior, a Second Captain or a Lieutenant is detached to do the work as usual, and bear the brunt of the moody critics of head-quarters. He is generally a volunteer for this disadvantageous service, the evils of which are, from inexperience, though more than counterbalanced by some local qualification; for instance, a father's house, a circle of friends, or some other attraction. But be it distinctly understood, that every comfort or pleasure expected is completely unconnected with this responsible, unthankful, and disagreeable duty. Should there not be a volunteer, an Officer is fixed upon at head-quarters, like a lamb for the slaughter, and he is sent off, with a small party of men under his command, wherever the sapiens may fancy they should have a party. The party march, and the Officer makes his own way, upon a travelling allowance of nine pence per mile, which used to be two shillings. This adequate compensation will generally cover the transport of his baggage, servant, wife, &c. by waggon; and, when arrived at his new abode, he finds about double what he is allowed, with proper economy—that is, without cheating any one, or anti-Ordnance—barely sufficient to cover the outlay put upon him by this extraordinary service. He is allowed two shillings per diem for lodgings and fuel, which he seldom can obtain for less than three; five shillings for each recruit, "to cover postage and stationery," when approved of at head-quarters. If a recruit pays smart-money, or one pound nxamption, hn is eidered to accredit fifteen shillings of to Governmant; the remaioing five shilliogs is placed at disposal, and usually given to the party.

Thean ain the rewards to bn got for the duty, which inves tha following punishmeots: Tho Officer has a great l of necessary correspondenca and responsibility; acnts to keep, bills to draw, and moothly returns of capenira to make, supported by vouchers for avery farthing sing through his hands; the payment of his party, and recruits enlisted by him, until their arrival at headrtera. It is customary to buy ribbons, &c. and priot il-hille, setting forth tha charms of tha service, to attract countrymen; taking tha chence of a return out of the earious five shillings for postage and stationery. And, racruit be rejected, the Officer is made liable, it the nt.-Colonel commanding his battalion chooses to certify "*the ineligibility of the recruit should have been mani*to the Recruiting Officer at the time of enlistment," be charged with all his expenses to the day of his disrge, and marching-money to tha placa of enlistment. certificate vice versa alone ensures exemption, although Recruiting Officer receives no compensation whatever the risk he runs!!! Is this fair, Mr. Editor? or is it anifast" injustice? No period is fixed, after the man's stment, for his examinatioo at head-quarters; so a ut.-Colonel is supposed to have penetration enough to hock three weeks or three months!!! to the day of enment, and declare whether the man's appearance was lthy. And, absurd as it may seem, the Officer's pocket be cleared out by authority! if the Lieut.-Colonel pts an unfavourable opinion. This he does not attempt; reports, from the appearance of the man at sight, what state was, and is; throwing an unwarrantable and atural responsibility of present and future on the Officer, making a raport upon the very face of the case, without adation!!! The certificate is usually favourable to the cer; but, if a Lieut.-Colonel, "with a head longer than rest," should make a mistake upon this knotty point—eh is only rendered impossible by rank and brains inging from the same source—the unfortunate Recruit-Officer's money and reputation are sacrificed to the nnel's misconception of an act his duty imperiously calls o him to commit. And, if evidence of such misconcepbe offered to higher authority, against the Colonel's gment, it has been refused!!! that the infamous volumn Finance Regulations may be fulfilled, composed without norpia, enforced without pity.

Tho addition to other agrémens, the Recruiting Officer turn from this society and his mess; his detached mess rwance ceases; if taken ill, and there be no Military dical Officer on the spot, he must provide himself with odance and medicine, which his commission entitles him on every other service, though a private practitioner is for attending the sick men under his command.

This "Important part of the service" may then truly be to be a disadvantageous duty, nor can a man be excted to be in a very good humour to commence it. However, the Officer acts about his work with zeal, and, like the dier in the breach, does not bargain with his country in e of need, and meets with the usual reward.

Seldom does it fall to the lot of an Officer to be employed the Recruiting Service without some disagreeable occurce, and never without pecuniary sacrifice brought on by njust or niggardly conduct of his official superiors in arrying out," and that right willingly—against the ior grades of the Ordnance Service, to whom little is n, though from whom much is required—that outrage on decency, "Ordnance Economy."

RICHARD.

THE COAST GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—A contemporary journal having condescended to ice—in a peculiarly elegant and gentlemanlike strain—remarks in my last letter to you on the subject of the ast Guard Service, I must beg to offer a few further obrations in reply to the statements contained in that per. First and foremost, I deny, in toto, the correctness his data in many parts of it; and secondly, I still maina the truth and strict correctness of my former assertion: t this Service, notwithstanding all the zeal of the Offs belonging to it—and which, I cheerfully admit, is, far as the total suppression of smuggling goes, a perfect lure, or, in other words, a complete humbug; and that immense expense far exceeds the advantages that it lds. What, Sir, can any impartial, disinterested iter, dare to maintain that the Coast Guard Service s put an end to smuggling? or that it has even lessened in any extensive degree? when it is as well known as at the sea rises in the east, that, in all the coast-counties, nuggled spirits can be bought at all times for about twelve illings per gallon! and, near Portland, and other parts f the coast of Dorset, for considerably less. But it is useless nger to argue with an opponent so totally unacquainted ith this question, upon which he has presumed to give he public a treatise; for, to expose the ignorance which he has manifested in the article in which I refer, I need only state that he declares "The Coast Guard Service has nothing whatever to do with foreign silks!!!" Whereas, in the mouth of the Thames, and all along the east coast of Kent, their daily object is to strive to intercept the smuggling galleys which bring over French silks for the metropolis, and some cargoes of which are known to be worth ten thousand pounds and upwards. And yet, forsooth, "The Coast Guard has nothing to do with foreign silks!!!"

This is, indeed, the "climax of humbug;" and is quite in unison with the other facts which the evidently-interested contributor of the paragraph alluded to has so industriously put forth. PHILO NOMA.

EMPLOYMENT OF FATIGUE PARTIES OF MARINES IN THE DOCK YARDS.

SIR,—In perusing your Gazette of the 1st inst., I observed a paragraph respecting the employment of fatigue parties of Marines in the different Dock-yards. No doubt, Sir, the system adopted at Pembroke will be considered efficient and economical by those who do not give themselves the trouble to look beyond the present moment; but it will, I think, be otherwise to those who have their country's welfare at heart, and look a little into futurity. What, I would ask, is the use of paying a bounty, and keeping up a recruiting establishment to enlist Marines, if they are only to be employed as labourers? Such must be meant if I read your remarks correctly. When you say "they are not such efficient Marines now as they were before the system of employing them in battalions—that the Officers think more of their military than their sea duties"—will you have the kindness to point out what their sea duties are (unconnected with their military profession)? I have been unable to do so in thirty years' experience; but this I have ascertained, that the men prefer being embarked, because they have various advantages when so employed; and their duties (as labourers), in many instances, are more to their tastes. But in the case of Officers, there is not one single advantage to be gained to balance the many disagreeables consequent upon a sea life to (what the Sea Officers term) an idler. The majority of your readers are not, I think, aware that, in five ships out of six, the moment a detachment of Marines embark, the Officers actually cease to have the command of their men; they are entirely under the control of the Naval Officers, even of the most junior rank. If they are sent on shore on duty, except in a military capacity, a Naval Lieutenant or Midshipman is sent in command; if employed on board the ship, it is the same—although the Marine Officer, in many cases, is ordered to be present, yet he is prohibited from speaking. If a boat is required to be sent on service where nothing could be done without the Marines, a Naval Officer is almost invariably sent to command. The instances to the contrary are very rare, but there are such on record, and the service was quite as well performed. But the fact is, this method has been hitherto adopted to obtain promotion for the Naval man, at the expense of the Marines, who do all the work, as for instance, a case in point of very recent occurrence. It was found necessary to erect certain field-works, in doing which, parties of sailors were employed to assist the Marines. The work progressing towards completion, it was thought advisable not to lose the opportunity of having it said the work was completed under the superintendence and command of such an Officer; therefore, a Naval man was ordered to assume the command, and the Marines, who had been stationary on the spot, were ordered to be relieved daily. However, by a spirited and proper remonstrance from the Commanding Marine Officer, a Major, to the Naval Captain, the duties are likely to revert to the original order of things, and the Marines keep their station and command. Let every one keep his station, and honour be given to whom honour is due. It is quite time enough for a Naval man to interfere with the duties on shore when those who may be placed in command are found incompetent to act, or when they show any disqualification for the situation in which they may be placed. The fact is, Sir, the system of the Royal Marine Corps (if they are considered necessary) requires revision, that they may be commanded by their own Officers and Non-commissioned Officers. A company at present consists of 1 captain, 2 subalterns, 5 serjeants, 5 corporals, 3 drummers, and 69 privates—yet, when a detachment for a large ship is required, of 160 men, the proportion of Non-commissioned Officers sent is totally inadequate, being only 3 or 4 serjeants and corporals. The consequence is, that it becomes necessary, for the effectually looking after the cleanliness of the men, to appoint a number of lance-serjeants and corporals; whereas, if a sufficient number were embarked, according to the establishment of a company, there would be a greater stimulus for the men to act well, as there would be a greater chance of promotion, &c.

With respect to the employment of Marines in the Dock-yards—if such an arrangement should take place, it is to be hoped the men will be allowed a proper fatigue dress, such as is worn by fatigue parties at Gibraltar, a kind of smock frock, as their military dress is by no means calculated for such employment. But, in my humble opinion, it would be much more advantageous to the country if an extra number of labourers were employed in the different yards, giving the preference to mechanics—when, no doubt, numbers of that useful class of society would gladly avail themselves of the opportunity of gaining a livelihood in their own country, in preference to emigrating to a foreign land. By this means you would always be supplied with mechanics, by invariably giving the preference to those who have acted as labourers, whenever a vacancy may occur.

If you deem these remarks worthy a place in your journal, I beg you will make what use you please of them; and at some future period I will suggest for your consideration a plan for the embarkation of Royal Marines, &c. In the mean time, believe an admirer of your impartiality.

CLAIMS OF CAPTAINS TO FLAG PROMOTION.

SIR,—The unanswerable remarks of your correspondent, Fair Play, in your number of the 1st instant, on the subject of the cruel injustice done to old and meritorious officers in the Captains' List, who do not happen to possess any private interest whereby to get employed, well deserves to be read with attention by the Earl of Minto, and by every member of the Board of Admiralty, the sailor part of which must, however, be already well acquainted with the truths which this letter unfolds. The contrast which Fair Play draws between the case of the protected officer and the one who has only his services and merits to recommend him, is so perfectly correct, that I trust, Mr. Editor, you will take an early opportunity of calling public attention to it, for it is through the Press alone that facts like these can be fairly brought before the First Lord of the Admiralty and the Government. Why, it may reasonably be asked, should the man, who has been distinguished in war in the command of either a sloop or a frigate, but who has not completed the time now required to entitle him to his flag, be refused another command, solely because he has not a member of the Legislature or a minister of the Crown to make the request for him; whilst another, who has never seen any service against the enemy, should be permitted to hold two, and even, in some instances, three successive appointments, because he is a relation or perhaps political friend of some member of the Government? Were it not that it might seem invidious, I could point out several examples of this kind, but as we are all taught to hope and believe that at the hands of the Earl of Minto a different system will be established henceforward, and that well-known and generally acknowledged merit will, for the time to come, be sure to meet its reward under his Lordship's patronage, it is unnecessary to give the facts which I am prepared to expose.

That your paper has done a vast deal of good in both services, by calling attention to cases of unfairness and partiality on the one side, whilst it has enrolled every act of justice rendered to meritorious officers on the other, all must and do cheerfully acknowledge; and that you may ever continue to maintain this independant and honourable course, is the best hope of every man in either profession who knows that he has deserved well of his country.

FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

SIR,—I am glad to see that all your contemporaries, Whig, Tory, and Radical, agree to reprobating the conduct of France towards Switzerland; for, independent of the injustice and insolence of her powerful neighbour, the latter is the only foreign country in which I take a particular interest. Though I cannot quite say that "I am half a Swiss by birth, and bred

A whole one,"—

I have some Swiss blood in my veins, and am connected with the country by many powerful ties. But not even those circumstances would tempt me to exceed the bounds of truth in anything that I may say in favour of the nation. It is improbable, I hope, that this dispute should end in war, which, even if to the advantage of Switzerland, must occasion great misery there. Yet, should the French provoke a contest, unequal as it may appear, I hope and believe that they will have their work to do, though their overwhelming numbers and resources would probably finally prevail, supposing the two nations to contend alone; but England would, I hope, extend her powerful arm in aid of the weaker party. The Swiss have been very differently estimated by different travellers of our nation; some having, perhaps, rather exaggerated their merits, while others have certainly fallen into the other extreme. On the whole, however, praise has not undeservedly predominated, and the mutual feeling is friendly. Though they have been the subject of so many pens, a somewhat intimate acquaintance with the people, at least of the western cantons, induces me to offer a few observations on their character and military force, more especially as the English residents in general mix comparatively little with the natives. The country is too well known to be described at as far as mountains and preciplces can confer streogth, it is perhaps the stroegest in the universe; but this advantage would avail the defeoders less in reodern than ancient warfare; and the same thiog may be said of the character of the mouotaioeers themselves, as coreparad with the French. Although their native virluca are gradually yielding to the influeooe of foreign vices and foreign luxury, they may still be pronounced a bmve, hardy, and laborious people. If they ware ever (as often supposed) a tall race, they must have degenerated much in this respect; they are now geoerally rather the reverse, but commonly robust in make, and their uoiversal soldiership preserves in their frame and spirit a strength and firmoess which those of the larger towns would otherwise too probably luse. Scerce any individuals but the clergy and physiciaos, and those actually incapable, from deformity or iofirmity, are exempt from serving their country, and from 18 to 45 yeare they are aligible for active service: those above that age are a reserve; but from what I have seen of there, I thiek (although there is a strong Fraech party amongst them) that the great majority of all ages would fly to arms should their indepeoilence be forcibly violated. There are oo mere soldiers there; but probably the Swiss Geards in foreign service would return on the prospect of a natiooal war. No pay is geoerally allowad, and every man fiods his owo arms, &c., though, when on service, they receive their subsistence at the public espense. Consequently, thoegh in the ranks all descriptions of mee are mingled, the rich only esn aspire to be officers. Tbay ere drilled and disciplined oo the French model, and their uniforms are generally very similar to those of that ostion. Some of the more populous end level cantons have a small corps of cavalry, which, as they provide their own horses, are all cooposed of geotry, rich farmers or tradesmeo, or their sons. They may be compared to our Yeomanry, end those of the Canton de Vaud are very tolerably mounted, and though, as I am told, originally far from Centaurs, have lately been much improved in efficieocy by their ridiog master (a native of England, thoegh of Swiss pareots, and a man of remarkable powers, both of body aod mind), who served many years in one of our Light Dragoon regimeots. He has certaioly beee and is not unlikely, from his experisnce ned natural abilities, to prove,

"In camps, a leader sage"

But of course the Swiss cannot be termed an equestrian people. The troops of each cantoe are seldom saet out of it on ordinary occasioos. Reviews are very freqoent, particularly in the spring, and prizes are continually given to the best marksman. The numerous lakes afford great and not disregarded opportunities for swimming, an art too much neglected in England at the present day. But though I annsider an average Swiss a strooger, hardier, aod eveo braver individual than an average Frenchman, it is to be remembered that these qoalities (though always of great value) are less to be relied oe now than in the days of the pike and two-handed sword. I quite agree with those distioguished soldiers who have lamented this change, particularly as it is a part of my creed that streegth aed determinatioo, generally speaking, are oftenest found io the most virtuous races of maa. If this be so, it is to be desired that the battle should be geoerally in the stroeg. It is certain that "a giant's strength" is by no means always accompanied by a disposition "to use it like a giant." Though a devoted admirer of Shakspeare, I have never thought him quite true to nature in the complaints of "those vile gens," put into the mouth of the fop who conversed with Hotspur. It is the characteristic of foppery to admire what is new, and the dislike of that Invention which has caused such a change in war, would have been more natural in Percy himself, and other "good tall fellows" of his stamp. War is always a dangerous game, but close fight is peculiarly unfit for "popinjays."

There is a writer in a cootemporary periodical[a], signing himself Bombardinio, whose opinioos on most subjects I believe to be exceedingly just; but he has brought against the Swiss charges so sweeping, that, with those whose experience of them has beco contrary to his, they may too probably have the effect of throwing some discredit on his other writings, which "if, as I believe, their vein be good," I should regret. Bombardinio must have been singularly unlucky in his Helvetian excursions, or he would oot have reiterated such sentences as the following (he speaks, I presume, chiefly of the Innkeepers and men of the road):—"The downright rascal, as all the Swiss are, for instance, will not be browbeat by mere words; and knowieg they have you in their power, will render abuse for abuse, and make you pay into the bargain."—"In Italy and Switzerland you must look for respectability yourself, for I could never discern a grain of honour or honesty in either country."—"The boorish and rapacious insolence of the Swiss," &c.

My own experience is very different from Bombardinio's. Although I have certainly met with cases of attempted extortion in Switzerland, I can truly assert that, in proportion to the population of the respective countries, I have met with as many similar cases in England, and more in France, and they were also on a very small scale. The most glaring instance, too, was at Geneva, only half Swiss after all. It is true I had more advantages in the country than most travellers, having many connexions there; but still I was an Englishman, often alone, and speaking French but very fluently—German not at all. If the above remarks were indeed intended to apply to the whole nation, I suspect the writer's stay must have been very short. I could name many individuals amongst them who would do honour to any country. But why class the Swiss with the Italians—people (those of a few border cantons excepted) differing so widely? The mass of the republicans are of that German race whom Bombardinio everywhere else praises. But even as confined to the classes amongst whom a tourist is generally thrown, his censure is somewhat broad. The innkeepers, in particular, are superior as a body to those of most countries in birth, breeding, and respectability. They are, indeed, not unfrequently of good family. Bombardinio also, in speaking of female beauty, mentions "the vile Swiss caste." This is severe. It is hard to decide on matters of taste, but there are in that country comparatively few countenances strictly national (i. e. not to be found elsewhere); and I can assure him that almost every variety of feature, complexion, and figure, may be found amongst the women even of the single canton of Vaud, mingled as their blood has been with that of all the leading nations of Europe. Of the character of the ladies at least, in all the relations of life, I can speak with certainty in the highest terms. In these respects they are indeed as good as one. T. T.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF MALTA.

Sir,—In your paper of the 24th ult. a correspondent, under the name of Corineus, advocates the claims of the Navy to a fair participation in the appointments as Colonial Governors, and expresses regret that the nomination of Admiral Fleeming to Malta had been rescinded or cancelled. I am sorry that Corineus stopped so short in his arguments, for he might have "clinched" his advocacy by stating that, although their brothers in arms would have been equally up to their work had it been put in their way, yet it so happened, that to the Navy it is that we owe the possession of many colonies, for which there is now occasion to appoint Governors: and with respect to the particular and important spot referred to by Corineus, Official documents prove the firmness of the late Sir A. Ball, who did not hesitate, when he saw it was for the good of his country, to act upon the principles of the old school, which led to many glorious results, by braving the modern bugbear, "personal responsibility," had he not so acted in would have obeyed the short-sighted orders he had received to give up possession of the Island of Malta. Subsequent events proved the correctness of his superior information and judgment, and which secured to us this important island during the war; an object of the first importance.

OUR OYSTER FISHERIES NEAR JERSEY.

Sir,—The admirable and just remarks made by you in your last number, on the subject of the Oyster Fisheries near Jersey, well merit the attention of His Majesty's Secretary for Foreign Affairs; for, if a check be not put to the aggressive acts of the French Government, with regard to this valuable nursery for seamen for our navy, they will soon grasp the whole of it within their own power, and assume their right to every inch of these valuable oyster grounds. It is not in this instance alone that we see the spirit of France to usurp our maritime rights. In Newfoundland, along our own coast, in short, every where, the same earnest desire is to be found; and therefore it becomes the more imperious on our part to show our jealous rival at once that we see through her artful designs, and that we are now resolved, at all hazards, to concede nothing that can lessen or take from our rearitime claims. ## COAST GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—I have to thank you for so readily giving publicity to my letter, of the 20th ult., in your valuable Journal, and should not have again intruded myself on your notice, had not your correspondent Pry, answered my letter in rather an uncourteous manner, which has induced me to request the favour of your inserting the following reply in the Naval and Military Gazette.

In the first place, Mr. Pry, I assure you that my motives were as disinterested as your own can possibly be, when I stated a fact in contradiction to an erroneous statement of yours in the Naval and Military Gazette of the 17th September, 1836, respecting the Senior Chief Officer of a District not being allowed to make any visits until the Inspecting Commander had been absent 14 days; and it is only the style of your letter in that Journal, of the 8th inst., which has induced me to take the trouble of noticing it in any way whatever.

Pry, you by no means have made out your former assertion to be correct; and were you as conversant with the regularity at Head Quarters as I am, you would find that they are not given to overlook documents, which are necessarily sent to the Treasury in order to receive that Board's sanction for payment; and you are also in error in supposing that the night visits of the Senior Chief Officer to the stations would not be paid, unless his and the Inspecting Commander's visits amounted to 70 (both inclusive) during the quarter; for, on a late occasion, I was paid for a night visits, notwithstanding the Inspecting Commander had completed his 70; my night visits being deducted from his moving duty account. Facts are stubborn things Pry!

You are illiberal, Pry, in attributing uncharitable motives to me, for having advised those officers who do not like the Coast Guard to quit it; did you personally know me I flatter myself you would form a very different opinion nor am I wedded to the service! Hymen forbid that I should have so rough a spouse to deal with; but having entered the service (not from stern necessity), I are determined to do my duty, and to repel, to the best of my ability all malignant and false insinuations that may be launched against it; at the same time I pledge my honour, that had I ever been, or should be, treated unlike an officer and a gentleman, that moment would I throw up my Coast Guard Commission.

The Senior Chief Officers of a District.

ON MASTING SHIPS.

Sir,—As your learned and talented correspondent Tyro from has made some strictures on a suggestion I made with refereoce to the masting of Sir W. Symonds's ships, I beg to state my reasons for that suggestion, with a necessary correction of the same, which, on the whole, will not be found to impugn the correctness of your valuable correspondent's opinions. My words were—"I have great faith in the sailing powers of the Vanguard, if she be masted up to her stability, which one of the new ships have been, at least in an equal degree to the French ships of war." The sentence followed a descant on the great weight of the hull of the Vanguard. I also had in my mind the heavy frame of the Vernon; and therefore I suggested an increase of sail, as it is evident they could carry it; but I was wrong in making the observation general with regard to the Surveyor's ships. When the Columbine was tried with ships of various other forms, she had smaller spars than the other corvettes, actually carrying only 10,748 square feet of canvas; while the Wolf, of Capt. Hayes's construction, carried 11,768 feet with twice the quantity of ballast. The Acorn and Satellite had each 11,500 square feet of sail. Thus we see the opinion of your excellent correspondent Tristram verified in the only fair experimental squadron we have had; that is, the only trial on equal and fair conditions, for the accidental trials are not fair criterions by which to judge of ship-building. When we think of one corvette beating another hollow on all points of sailing, as Capt Symonds did that of Capt. Hayes', with 1015 square feet of canvas less, it must be acknowledged that there is some ground for the opinion of our Navy being generally over-masted; more than it is to be remarked that the Columbine's hull was not loaded with heavy timber and fastening like the new ships' hulls have been. I have thought it necessary to make this statement because I am fully aware of the value of your correspondent's opinions. In the papers of Naval Architecture, vol. 2, page 98, may be seen the account of Columbine's equipment, published by the School of Naval Architecture.

In stating that the Vanguard's hull was increased in weight 207 tons by using African timber, I stated only one source of augmentation, whereas almost every improvement introduced into the Navy within the last twenty years has added to the weight of ships. Lately our Navy has been rendered more durable by using copper instead of iron in fastening the topsides. Now, as the specific gravity of copper is to that of iron as 8·9 is to 7·788 it follows that more than one-seventh of the weight of fastening is added to the topsides, which, in line-of-battle ships, would amount to many tons. I could name twenty other such improvements. The iron hawse pipes of a line-of-battle ship amount to 64 cwt., which is the weight of a 32 lb. long gun within one cwt.

Perhaps it is not generally known that it has been received as a maxim in the King's Dock-yards till within the last few years, that the heavier a ship was the better, the weight carried her forward. This opinion was given in evidence before a committee of the House of Commons by Mr. Lang, the builder of Woolwich Yard (who is a great quack), on the subject of expediting the conveyance of the mail to Dublin, by means of the Holyhead steam-packets. When asked why the Government packet beat the private steam-packet, he sagaciously said it was on account of the solidity of her timbers, never once stating that she had twice or three times the propelling power of the merchant steam-boat. Lately an order has been received in the King's Yards to make "the hulls of ships as light as circumstances will admit," which shows how rapidly improvement is going forward under Sir William Symonds, while expense is saved. The immense contracts entered into for African timber in the time of Sir Robert Seppings has materially slacked the sailing pace of our ships of war, and lately, for the sake of economy, I am sorry to say, it has been too much used. It is true that a diminution of scantling is often made to compensate for the greater specific gravity, but it can seldom be carried into effect so as to remedy the defect of its great weight.

A Moderate Man.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We intend next week to present our readers with a SUPPLEMENT, for which no additional charge will be made. We do this in acknowledgment of the great increase of support we have received since the reduction of the price of this paper; and that we may have the means of making our peace with those correspondents whose favours we have been compelled from want of room to postpone.—We thank a Correspondent for his suggestion; there is or was a Magazine bearing the proposed title, published in Wellclose-square by Mr. Smith, a Preacher, better known as "Boatswain Smith;" but we think that the circulation which such a work might command would not pay the expense of printing.—"Veritas" insinuates a charge against some Chief Officer: we think he should name him, as he offers to do, otherwise his letter might give offence to many, and the charge be fathered on the wrong person.—We have received a letter from Mr. Chase, of Portsmouth Dock-yard, contradicting the statement of his son's death, stated in a letter from an officer engaged, and published in our last. The letter, we suppose, was written immediately after the action; and we are sure the gallant writer will take the earliest opportunity of expressing his sorrow for the pain he has occasioned to several relatives and friends, as well as his joy that Lieut. Chase is still alive, and likely to acquire further distinction than the honour conferred on him for his last services.—The statement respecting a late change of Commanders not being authenticated as we desired cannot be inserted, we believe it to be the attempt of some malicious person to malign an officer, whose conduct we never heard censured; but we make it a practice never to insert reports affecting the reputation of officers unless they are well authenticated. The change appears to us to have been no more than the usual one at the end of three years' service.—From inadvertence in our office, an advertisement was received and inserted in our last Paper from the Proprietor of some newspaper for a loan. The Paper requiring such support has, we believe, no connexion with the services.

Erratum.—In last week's paper, page 664, column 3, for "National Guards" read "National Wars."

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1836.

WE have been favoured with the perusal of the Journal of an intelligent British Officer, who accompanied the Russian fleet during its last summer's cruise in the Baltic, having procured the Emperar's permission to inspect everything connected with his Navy, of which permission he appears to have availed himself to its full extent. We shall, in this day's Journal and succeeding numbers, give such facts as cannot fail to prove highly interesting, not only to our Naval readers but to the public generally; the more so as the information is not procured from the writings of travellers or book-makers, who often embellish their narratives at the expense of truth; but from the observations of an officer who appears to have been a close observer, and to have scanned the proceedings with a seaman's eye.

The Russian fleet consists of five divisions, three of which are stationed in the Baltic, and two in the Black Sea. Each division comprehends one three-decker, eight two-deckers (including two 84's), six frigates, a corvette, and four small vessels.

The three divisions in the Baltic are complete; only one line-of-battle ship being absent from the manœvering, and she has since reached Cronstadt from Archangel. We know not in what state the two divisions, stationed in the Black Sea, may be, but there is reason to suppose they are equally complete; and if so, Russia possesses at this moment 45 sail of the line including five three-deckers, and ten 84's, besides thirty frigates, five corvettes, and ten small vessels, which are rigged and provisioned every year, during the month devoted to exercise and manœuvring.

The three-deckers are rated 110 guns; the three in the Baltic are called Peter the Great, Emperor Alexander, and St. George. They have each on the lower deck two brass guns for throwing shells of 40 pounds weight, besides which their broadside force is as follows:—Lower deck, fourteen 36 pounders; middle-deck, sixteen 24 pounders; main deck, sixteen 12 pounders; quarter-deck and forecastle, twelve 24 pound carronades and long 12 pounders. They are building a ship called the Russia, supposed to be on the model of our Neptune, to be rated 130 guns; she will be launched in 1838.

Their 84 gun ships are armed all round with 36 pounders of different weights; carronades on the quarter-deck and forecastle, and each has two brass guns on the lower deck for throwing shells of 40 pounds. One (the Wladamar) has a large Paixham's gun, which throws a shell of 120 pounds. The gun weighs upwards of six tons, takes a charge of 16 pounds of powder, but is very slowly worked, as they do not fire it more than ten times in an hour.

They have two frigates rated 54's; one a razeed 74, with a poop: the other built upon the lines of our President, a very fine vessel, having her main-deck guns mounted on Marshal's carriages. The broadside armament of these two frigates is fourteen 36 pounders on the main-deck, and thirteen 36 pounders and one long 36 pounder on the quarter-deck and forecastle. The remainder of their frigates are rated 44's, and armed with fifteen long 24 pounders of a side on the main, and carronades of the same calibre on the quarter-deck and forecastle.

Their corvettes are not all of the same armament. There are three in the Baltic: the Warsafski, built in America, has sixteen 32 pounders of a side; the Livitza and Nyarin, taken from the Egyptians; the first has twelve 24 pound carronades, and one long 12 pounder, and the other eleven 24 pound carronades, and one long 12 pounder, of a side.

The brigs have nine carronades and one long gun of a side.

With the exception of the Pallas frigate, built after the President, and commanded by one of the Emperor's Aides-du-camp, the ships have a heavy and slovenly appearance when under sail; but they are remarkably clean and well arranged on board, and appear to have combined everything from our ships. As many of their officers have been brought up in the British Navy, and their Fleet cruised for a considerable time in company with ours, this is not wonderful. We shall next week proceed to state the manner in which the Russian fleet is manned and organized, and sum up our observations upon this interesting subject.

THE Plans now under the consideration of the Horse Guards, and of which we shall give the outline, must, if carried into execution, afford a more regular and early relief of corps employed in our Colonies, inasmuch as it will do away with the present depot system, which admits of a species of favouritism prejudicial to officers without interest, lengthens the period of banishment of regiments sent to the East Indies, and has not in return a single real advantage to offer to the Service.

It is proposed for the West Indian stations, that regiments sent there should each leave but one company at home, which is to consist of the men most likely to be invalided. The several companies will form a Provisional Battalion, and be stationed at Cork.

The Regiments for the Mediterranean stations are, in like manner, to leave one company at home to be formed into a Provisional Battalion at Plymouth; whilst those for the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, and the Mauritius will have a Provisional Battalion at Portsmouth; at Chatham, as hitherto, there will be a Provisional Battalion for corps in the East Indies.

Further, we have reason to know that the Reports of Lord Sligo and Sir Lionel Smith, as to the working of the Slaves' Emancipation Bill in the West Indies, are so very favourable that Government may be enabled to withdraw nearly the whole of the European troops from those Colonies. The encouragement to Free Blacks to acquire property, and become valuable members of society, will lead to the formation of an efficient Militia, competent to the safe protection of British interests.

WE are well aware of the value of the Royal Marines, and have always been ready to concede to that highly distinguished corps the character which they are so justly entitled to, having earned it nobly. But we own we view with apprehension the gradual inclination, which is becoming more apparent daily, to turn the whole attention of this corps to their Military duties,—in fact, to make crack soldiers of them.

We consider the Marines to form a part, and a very efficient part of our Naval force; and as it is afloat where their services are required, and where their laurels will be gained in nine cases out of ten; we are of opinion that this military parade, which appears now the principal object, is after all but a secondary consideration; and that the efficiency of a body of men, destined to act afloat, would be improved under a discipline which partook more of the work they are there called on to perform.

The exercise of great guns, rowing in boats, knotting, splicing, and firing at a mark, appear to us much fitter subjects for drill than the marching and counter-marching in sections and divisions. It is true all these matters form part of the recruits education; but we believe we are correct in stating, that they are now considered but secondary to the skill at field evolutions; and this is all very natural, and will ever be the case so long as it is the practice to brigade the Marines with troops of the line, and put them in competition with men who have not these things to learn.

During the war, when the Marines boasted few of these accomplishments as soldiers, and in small vessels particularly, were often found in the yards as well as in the boats; in fact, when they were useful double-handed men there was little of this drill display; and we hold it as a maxim, that the nearer a man approaches to the qualities which constitute a perfect soldier, for the parade or a Drill Sergeant. he becomes the worst qualified for the sea.

We have said that, under the present system, too much pains is bestowed to make the Marine a perfect soldier, and we know that, since this has been the case, this corps, which was once the most popular in the kingdom, and the most easily recruited, experiences the same difficulty in procuring men as regiments of the line. A correspondent has asked us to define the Marines' sea duties; this is difficult to do, for the very reason that we complain of,—but we can inform him what his duties should be; and if the officers could be brought to see the policy of qualifying the men to perform them, we doubt not this corps would be considerable increased, and rendered far more efficient than they now are as Marines, or sea soldiers, whatever excellence they may have arrived at on parade. A Marine, then, in addition to his present education, should be taught to go aloft upon the lower yards, to reef and furl, to belay, stopper, coil, &c.; in fact, to do all the duties now performed by ordinary seamen and landmen, and, in addition, to man a portion of the boats. Under this system none but able seamen and marines would be admitted in our ships, and these together would form far more efficient crews than those usually supplied in war, including a large portion of landsmen.

By the instructions consequent on the issue of His Majesty's Warrant of the 13th ultimo, ninth paragraph, three years are allowed to be reckoned for two years of actual service in the East or West Indies. It is subject for regret that Australia has not been included; for every soldier who has served in that country must be considered equally deserving of the advantage. The climate of Australia is generally accounted healthy; but a reference to the casualties of a regiment in that country will prove that death, from consumption alone, is as frequent as from tropical diseases. From the day the soldier embarks from England for Sydney, a period of from four to six months he is on perpetual guard. At Sydney his duty is most severe; and from this hard duty he removes to a perfect banishment at almost all the outstations, where he cannot procure one comfort, or even necessary of life. When stationed at Norfolk Island he receives fresh provisions only twice in the week, and only half his ration of spirits; and even these he does not at all times obtain, for when a deficiency of Government Stores exists, he is subject to receive a substitute for a large part of his bread and meat, or other article of ration liable to fail, previous to being replenished.

In a colony composed of such a population the soldier is constantly exposed to the machinations of the convict portion, which forms the majority. The convicts are ever on the watch to tempt the soldier to his ruin, well knowing that he forms the sole check upon their liberty, and the only restraint upon the indulgence of their old propensities. Now the soldier is frequently a man of weak mind, and unsophisticated, while the convict is as frequently too subtle a tempter to be resisted. The soldier is lured into crime, for which he is tried by a Civil or Military tribunal, and sentenced to be transported to a penal settlement. He is thus placed, for his first offence, on equal terms with those who have several times, at least twice, been sentenced by the law, and in some instances have twice or thrice forfeited their lives, and live only to seek occasions for ravaging by murder their thirst for blood. This may be justice when applied to crimes committed by an emigrant, who willingly places himself in a country subject to such a law; but is it justice to the British soldier sent there on duty? Is it not making him a convict in the first instance, and punishing him as such? Is not the soldier in such a colony, and of whom a conscientious discharge of his duty is peculiarly required, who performs duties the most irksome and harassing, subject to peculiar temptations? Is not, we say, the soldier serving in Australia entitled to count every two years as three? Let it be further taken into consideration, that the soldier who proceeds to Australia on this disgusting duty, finds the colony to be merely a stepping-stone to India—an exchange from one place of banishment to another. It has also been remarked, that regiments which proceed to India from Australia suffer a greater loss of men than corps which embark direct for India from England. Shall not then the few survivors be permitted to have the privileges granted by the Warrant for their service in Australia?

It has been urged, that soldiers are so utterly disgusted with the nature of their duty in Australia, that if only sent for a first offence to Sydney or Van Diemen's Land as convicts, they would commit crimes to effect their removal. If it were peremptorily ordered that any soldier transported at the colony for crime should not be "assignable," at least, till a large part of his sentence had expired, we feel confident that it would put a stop to soldiers committing crimes with a view to rid themselves of their military duty, while at the same time they would not be punished, as if previously convicts, by being sentenced to transportation of the second and severer degree. In fine, let every soldier serving in Australia be permitted to count every two as three years' service, and an inducement will be held out which may keep him from listening to the tempter, who urges on his notice the condition of the emancipated convict as better than his own.

It may interest our Indian friends to know that some change is contemplated in the future Brevets to the rank of Colonel in the Company's Army in India. We understand, that instead of promoting at each Presidency all Senior Lieutenant-Colonels to any one, promoted to the rank of Colonel at that Presidency, that in future the date of commission of the Senior Lieutenant-Colonels of Infantry in Bengal will regulate the promotion to Colonel in the Company's Army throughout the three Presidencies; and those who succeed to regiments that are Junior as Lieutenant-Colonels to the Senior Lieutenant-Colonel of Infantry in Bengal, will become Lieutenant-Colonels Commandants as before; so that the promotion to Colonel in Bengal will regulate that for the whole of India.

We have received several letters from Subscribers to the Naval Charitable Society, with reference to the manner in which Lieutenant Newman and his Resolutions were disposed of at the meeting on the 10th instant, and more particularly as to a remark made by Sir Byam Martin, when he recommended the Secretary to treat anonymous communications to Newspapers with contempt. This remark of the gallant Admiral was unhappy, because the letters in question were well known to be written by Mr. Newman, who had, in fact, avowed himself as the author at the July meeting, and, therefore, the Secretary replied that it was impossible he could do so, and proceeded to refute the charges.

The contempt which men in authority entertained, or affected to entertain, for charges made on anonymous authority, might have been all very well some years ago, and even down to the time that Sir Byam left office. But it is very different under present circumstances; and, accordingly, we find, that when charges are made, if they are not immediately denied, or rebutted, they are generally believed; and, although there is not now the same danger of an officer being ruined, who undertakes the duty of reforming or exposing abuses, there are few who will volunteer the ungracious task of standing forward personally as accusers.

We cannot perceive that it was at all necessary for Mr. Newman to avow himself the author of these charges. Surely the able statement of the Secretary would have rebutted them by whoever made; that is, as far as it went, for the charge of unnecessary expenditure still exists, and this must be amended if the Society is expected to thrive, or even to regain its former position.

There was a practice exposed too of publishing the whole of the Navy List, distinguishing those officers who were Subscribers, a species of mention of which we should not have conceived so respectable a Society capable, and we hope the name of the ingenious projector of this most base-faced and contemptible ruse will be exposed.

We have received applications this week to support this Establishment. The Service well knows that we have never been backward in aiding Institutions professing beneficial objects, provided they are not under a cloud. A correspondent who addresses us from Bath, and appears to be a warm advocate of the Institution, writes—

"I observe by the papers that the funds of the Institution are much reduced. At one period the office of Secretary was done gratuitously by a Mr. Aubrey, one of the Clerks in the Navy Office; and at a General Meeting, in which the late Admiral Sir J. Colpoys was Chairman, it was proposed to vote the annual sum of 50*l.* to Mr. Aubrey for his great trouble as Secretary. I was one of the Committee on that occasion, and the vote appeared to give great satisfaction."

We are glad to find, by communications which have reached us this week from Greenwich and Woolwich, that the notice we took in our last of the proceedings of Mr. Young may be beneficial.

The dispute which has caused Mr. Young's bile to rise has been long in agitation. The parish of Greenwich having extorted an infraction from the Hospital, in the shape of poor rate, which the law would give them, began to talk of a "moral claim," and after assessing the officers' apartments, gardens, public offices, &c. &c., at the most exorbitant rate, found that the pensioners brought a vast burden on the parish by the families which accompanied them, and accused those who had not families ready of begetting them, and adding largely to the pauper population. They consequently endeavoured to enforce, by law, the assessment of pensioners' cabins in the wards to the poor's rate; this they were unsuccessful, and Counsel's on was decidedly against them. But with a view deal them even-handed justice, the Commis-ners of the Hospital and the Admiralty agreed submit the whole case to Arbitration. The ard was, a short time since, given, but so eely was it drawn up, and so extensive the ount awarded, that the Commissioners deter-ned on resisting it. This same Mr. Young was, eems, engaged in this controversy, and, at the pense of reason, law, and equity, he has taken opportunity of showing off.

That a vast deal of immorality among the chil-n does exist in the parish is most true, and ne of them are children of the Pensioners. uses of the worst description are also in abund-ce, and they flourish undisturbed. The worthy nch should consider this, and before they again e to think the poor old Pensioners a "moral t," let them mind their own business, and endea-r to prevent immorality. We assure them that shall watch their movements very closely.

Our readers will perceive with what perseverance our temporaries continue to advocate a hopeless cause. ey pounce upon some paragraph which suits their pose, and then produce a laboured theme, to prove this, hat, as occasion suits. Now as these paragraphs are ine cases out of ten utter falsehoods, palmed as al news upon Editors, ignorant of the subject, it ows that any hypothesis built upon such foundations ttely worthless.

Some few weeks ago, we animadverted on the Indeli-y of the inferior members of a department comment-upon, and speaking in such disrespectful terms of abilities of their superiors; and because we expressed r surprise at this conduct being tolerated, it has been insisted by a correspondent of the Sun newspaper, t the gentlemen of the School are muzzled by order, d dare not give vent to any opinion unfavourable to the esent Surveyor of the Navy's principle of ship build-. We need hardly say that a more false and ridiculous ertion was never made. Any member of society, ether connected with a Dock-yard or not, has a right express what opinion he pleases now, whatever might e been the case some few years back; and it is only en persons in Government employment resort to un-rthy practices, propagate false statements calculated mislead the public, and make unwarrantable assertions, t they should be made to feel the error of their ways. t is not too much to say that all the falsehoods which e been so industriously circulated have emanated n one particular source. Some of the gentlemen of School have denied the merit of the system boldly, endeavoured to sustain their opinions by scientific uctions. Others again have written in favour of it. r quarrel is with neither of these parties, for although do not consider ship building to be a question capa-of much elucidation from the most philosophical inments, it is a highly interesting one, open for dis-sion; and no one can deny but that it has been ntifully discussed, though perhaps little benefit has ulted.

Political feeling is now said to have a bias in this ter: we do not believe that such is the case on the of Sir W. Symonds, the present or even the late vernment. The School of Naval architecture was lished in consequence of having failed in the expecta-s from its establishment by a Tory administration; although many members have still continued their port (as far as it goes), and displayed great activity in vassing at the last election in favour of candidates of t party, we have never heard that they were visited, expected to be visited by such marks of displeasure the part of the Admiralty, as were usual in the old es, when that Board, and the Board of Ordnance, re the patrons of particular boroughs, and adopted ans which never failed to keep refractory voters in er.

Let all that can be argued for or against different des of construction be fairly discussed, and so in-esting an inquiry shall have ready insertion in our ges; but to invent or adopt a fallacy, and then proceed comment upon it, all the while assuming the false emises to be true, is a most unworthy mode of pro-elling, and only resorted to for the purpose of bolster-g up a condemned system.

All that can be assumed or imagined by the most ingenious sophist will not alter a tittle of an official port, and it is upon the official statements that the rits of ships will be judged.

Imperial Parliament.—On Thursday the Lords and Commons assembled pro forma, the period for which the Parliament was prorogued having expired. In the Lords appeared, at two o'clock, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Langdale, and Lord Holland, to act as Lords Commissioners. The Commons having been summoned, the Lord Chancellor prorogued the Parliament to Thursday, the 8th Dec.

The King has issued a commission for inquiring into the best means of establishing a paid constabulary force in the counties of England and Wales, and also for inquiring as to the best means of preventing crime in the rural districts by such an agency. The gentlemen appointed as Commissioners are Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., Col. Rowan, one of the two Metropolitan Police Commissioners, and Mr. Chadwick, the Secretary to the Poor Law Commission. It is to be an unpaid Commission, and the Commissioners will hold their sittings in the evening, that the official duties of two of the gentlemen may be as little interrupted as possible by the performance of the additional duties of the new Commission.

Wednesday se'nnight Louis Philippe was walking with Prince Esterhazy in the Palace of Versailles, in the immense gallery he has constructed there; on coming to a certain picture of Horace Vernet, the Prince asked what the subject was? "It is the battle of Jena, by M. Vernet," replied the King. "Very well, indeed," observed the Austrian Ambassador, "his Prussian Majesty is certainly greatly indebted to M. Vernet. The battle of Jena and not a Prussian in it! It is a most delicate attention!"

Prince Esterhazy has arrived at Chandos House from Paris, where he remained a fortnight on his way from Vienna. There is a report that the Prince is to be invested with the Insignia of a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath.

Lord Aberdeen has refused to accept the appointment of Aberdeen University Commissioner. The Duke of Richmond and Sir W. Rae have also declined to act.

The population of Great Britain is only at present increasing at the rate of from 280,000 to 300,000 souls a-year.

The Northern Lights.—Last Tuesday night messengers arrived at all the fire stations of the London establishment and West of England offices, stating that a dreadful fire was raging in the direction of Islington or Holloway, and certainly, from the appearance of the sky, there was every reason to fear the most dreadful results. In a few minutes, twelve of the London establishment engines, and also one belonging to the West of England, with upwards of sixty firemen, arrived in the supposed direction of the fire; but after traversing Hampstead, Highgate, and other places, for about two hours, they were compelled to return, with no other information than that the supposed fire could have been nothing more than the aurora borealis, or northern lights, which will be visible several times during the present month. Most of the inhabitants of the above-named places were much alarmed on the occasion.

A Recent Club Scene.—A party were playing piquet; and when one of the players, Lord De ——, had shuffled the cards, Mr. —— placed his hand on the pack, and called for the groom-porter. When the latter entered the room, Mr. —— desired him to bring paper, wax, and tape. These were brought, and Mr. —— then directed the waiter to seal up the packet, and keep it till the next day, and then lay it before the committee. At six next morning the noble Lord left town for the Netherlands. The Club (G——s) will be broken up.

The office of Geographer to the King is vacant by the death of James Wilde, Esq.

Sir H. S. Wheatley and Sir Herbert Taylor are to succeed the late Sir W. Kolghton in the two offices of Receiver-General of the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster.

Exmouth.—An "affair of honour," which took place on the Warren, on Thursday, the 29th ult., between Lieutenants Clay and Davies, R.N., one residing at Exmouth, the other at Teignmouth, has excited much sensation here. The affair was kept tolerably private for a few days, but on Monday it got wind, and has since been the chief topic of conversation. The gallant gentlemen were attended by a brother Lieutenant each, as second, and a Surgeon was within call in case of accident. The parties (report says) fired instanter; the Exmouth gentleman received his adversary's ball in his arm, but the wound is not dangerous. Another report says that only one fired, and no mischief was done to require surgical aid. The quarrel which led to this mode of giving satisfaction, occurred at the Yeomanry Ball at Exmouth on the previous Tuesday, when the epithet "coward" was applied to the Lieutenant by his brother officer at Teignmouth. The misunderstanding was understood to have been made up that evening, but the quarrel was renewed next day, the result of which was a challenge and the duel.—Western Luminary.

The elopement from the neighbourhood of one of the Royal Palaces of a young lady related to a Noble Duke with a person in humble life, which has gone the round of the papers, turns out to be no elopement at all, but a regularly-arranged marriage between Miss Manners, of Kempton-park, near Hampton-court, and Mr. Stapleton, the fishmonger, of Egham, whose fine person and good looks had attracted much notice in the neighbourhood. The bride is one of the daughters of Mr. Menners, a descendant of an illegitimate son of one of the Dukes of Rutland, and has resided for many years at Kempton-park. Mr. Stapleton is in a large way of business, to which his fair partner now entirely devotes herself.—Brighton Guardian.

Next Wednesday week, 2d Nov., is fixed for opening the Greenwich Railway. It is the intention of the inhabitants of the Borough of Southwark to invite their Majesties to honour them with their Royal presence.

To show how extremely cautious people ought to be in pointing fire-arms where persons are passing, the commander of a steamer off Greenwich hospital, last Tuesday evening, in firing off a blunderbuss as a token of joy, made use of an old glove as a wad, to which glove was attached a small button; it entered the abdomen of a poor waterman named Nicholls on shore, who lingered on board the Dreadnought hospital ship until Wednesday, when death put an end to his sufferings; fortunately he was a single man, and the fatal accident was purely accidental. Nicholls was a poor hard-working respectable man, and his singularly unfortunate death is much deplored.

The great city meeting to raise subscriptions to erect a statue of the Duke of Wellington took place on Thursday at the Mansion-house. This is a tribute of respect purely of civic origin, in return for acknowledged and special services done to the city by his Grace, and in which, as the requisition to the Lord Mayor will testify, men of all political parties concur. The borough of Southwark, which has also derived great benefit from those improvements of which the Duke of Wellington was the great promoter, has taken a conspicuous part on this occasion, and there has arisen, we understand, a generous rivalry between the Londoners and the people of Southwark which shall most effectually promote the object in view, and to which of them the honour shall be awarded of furnishing a site for the proposed statue. At both ends of the new bridge are spots almost equally suitable for the purpose, and, to judge from appearances, the point will not be very readily waived by either party. Unless it were to be determined by the weight of subscriptions no very ready mode presents itself of adjusting it, though to an impartial judge, unconnected either with the City or with Southwark, there cannot be a moment's doubt of the propriety of placing the statue on that side of the bridge which is emphatically metropolitan ground. It is right, however, to state, that the contest will be conducted in the most friendly spirit, but at all events we hope his Grace will neither be plumped down in the mud on a pedestal scarce bigger than a pincushion, like George the Third in Pall Mall East, nor exalted out of sight on a pillar, like his royal offspring on Carlton Terrace. That the sum wanted, whatever it may be, will be easily raised, there can be no doubt. The requisition to the Lord Mayor has between 400 and 500 signatures, and the interest taken in the subscriptions, out of the city as well as in it, is very great. All the livery companies, whose property for the most part has risen in value with the general improvement of the city, will of course contribute liberally. To the whole city the occasion is one of much interest, and must, we dare say, be as agreeable to the Duke of Wellington, as it is honourable to those with whom the project originated.

We regret to announce the loss of the Red Rover steam-packet, bound to Herne Bay, which took place a little before 2 o'clock on Monday afternoon off the Nore, by coming into violent contact with the Magnet, Margate steamer, destined to London. The crew and passengers were saved.

The wife and a child of a saddler in the Flat rank, were burned to death in Tain last week. The mother was subject to fits of epilepsy, and it is supposed that she was attacked with this complaint in the absence of her husband, and had fallen into the fire with the child in her arms.

Admiral Parker's Widow.—Anne Parker, the widow

"Admiral" Parker, who was hung for the mutiny at e Nore, is now a pauper in the workhouse of St. iles-in-the-Fields, and is stone blind. For some time revious to last week she lived in Wild-court, Drury- ne, and used to be led about by a boy. Being in a ate of destitution, one day last week she applied to the agistrates of Bow-street, who, on hearing of her desti- te condition, wrote a letter for her to the overseers of t. Giles's parish, whom she became an inmate of the orkhouse.

The parties had travelled to the place of action in Lon- on chaises, one of which took up in Gloucester-place, nd the other in the City. The combatants exchanged heir shots, when the person dressed in the loose coat ap- eared to have been wounded, and he was led to the haise by two of his companions, when the post-boy drove ff the contrary way for town. The parties first alighted t Wormwood Scrubs to settle their dispute; but they ere, it seems, apprehensive of being molested, and tra- elled on.

A letter from Liège states that a duel took place on he 10th inst., in the wood of Quincampoix, between two tudents, in which the nose of the challenger was carried ff by the first fire; but, wounded as he was, he returned he shot, and struck the hat of his adversary, without oing him any injury. Steam Navigation to America.—The company pro- jected in London has at length been formed, and it is de- termined to proceed at once with the building of the ves- sels. The application of Hall's condenser to the engines is calculated to effect a saving of full one-third in fuel, and leave room for greater stowage for merchandise. ## BRITISH AUXILIARY LEGION.

General Order.—St. Sebastian, Oct. 9.—The recom- mendations of officers commanding brigades and corps, respecting the action of the 1st instant, having reached the Lieut.-General, it only remains to him to record and give effect to them as far as circumstances admit, and to express on his own part his highest approbation and warmest thanks to the troops, both officers and men, Spanish and English, for their firm and excellent conduct on the 1st Oct. The Oviedo and Segovia, 6th and 7th regs., under Brig.-Gen. Godfrey and Colonel Belloso, evinced their accustomed bravery and vigilence, and speedily repelled the enemy from before their part of the lines. The well-established gallantry of the volunteers of Guipuscoa and the Commandant Zuazuavar, not only in defending Alza against a very vigorous attempt, but in their attack on the enemy beyond the place, was again conspicuous. The Lieut.-Gen. takes particular pleasure in the distinguished conduct of this corps, from its having been so long attached to the Auxiliary Legion. Lieu- tenant Brooks and his detachment of the Artillery ren- dered also excellent service at Alza, as did Capt. Horn- brook and Lieut. Reed. In front of the post of Seratequi, where Maj.-Gen. Jauregui and Brig.-Gen. Von Holen commanded, the enemy were also repelled in the most successful, and to them disastrous manner; here the Se- cond Light Spanish Reg., the First British Reg., under Col. Kirby, who was wounded at the head of his corps, and the British Rifle Battalion, under Lieut.-Col. Boyd, conducted themselves with great spirit, activity, and va- lour. It was at this point the British Lancers, under Lieut.-Col. Wakefield, executed with admirable precision and complete success some very brilliant charges. With the conduct of Col. Don Jaime Arbuthnot, of the 2nd Light, Col. Boadille, of the 3d Saragossa, the Com- mandants Buccanan and Scarlin, of the 3d Light Batta- lions, he was particularly pleased. Lieut.-Col. Wakefield recommends Capt. Stephenson, Cornet Francis, Serj.- Major Parkes, and Serjs. Simkins and Webster, for their conduct on this occasion. Detachments of the Jaen, under Col. Estremera, and of the gallant National Gds. of St. Sebastian, zealously co-operated. The Lieut.- Gen. was also very highly satisfied with the gallant beha- viour of Lieutenant-Colonel Ross, Major Clarke, and the 6th regiment.

It was, however, at the picket-house of the first com- pany of the Westminster Grenadiers, and along the line of houses occupied by Brig.-Generals Chichester and Fitzgerald, where the enemy's cannon and musket fire and chief efforts were directed. At this point the courage and judicious conduct of Col. O'Connell, 10th regiment, particularly attracted the notice of the officer in com- mand of his brigade, whose well-merited recommendation is fully borne out by the Lieut.-General's own observa- tion of that excellent officer. Equally meritorious also was the department of Lieut.-Cols. Harley, Apthorpe, Cannan, and Campbell, commanding the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 9th regiments, and of Majors Cotter, Duree, and Bull.

The admirable precision of our artillery, and the exe- cution produced by its fire in the ranks of the enemy, fully uphold the high professional reputation of Colonel Colquhoun, who directed that arm, and redound to the credit of his corps, and the detachments of Royal British Marine Artillery by whom they were assisted. For the valuable assistance afforded the Lieut.-General by the General Officers and the Staff, he has expressed his ac- knowledgments in his despatch to the Minister at War.

In former times the Lieut.-General has had opportu- nities of occasionally witnessing the conduct, under fire, of the troops of the heroic army which fought in the great Peninsular war, and, without the presumption of instituting comparisons, he will still venture to say, that in the firm and undaunted bearing of the Spanish and Auxiliary officers and soldiers of this small corps, on the recent occasion (and considering also the immense ad- vantage of ground possessed by the enemy) there was nothing unbecoming or unworthy of their glorious proto- types. It is but justice to Captain Maclean and the 1st company of the Westminster Grenadiers, that the following just tribute to their intrepidity be inserted in orders as follows:—

San Sebastian, Oct. 7.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you, for the informa- tion of the Lieut.-Gen., that at the recommendation of Lieut.-Col. Campbell, commanding 3d regiment, I recom- mended Brevet Major Lyster of that corps, for having so nobly defended the picket-house on the morning of the 1st inst. Captain Maclean made a reference to me on the sub- ject, and I caused a court of inquiry, which came to the following decision:—"The Court having maturely weighed and considered the foregoing testimony, are of opinion that Capt. Maclean commanded when the attack commenced on the morning of the 1st inst., in the outer picket-house, and for upwards of an hour afterwards, when Major Lyster first made his appearance (for a short period) in the outer- court-yard, and commanded while there during the remain- der of the time, until relieved by the 4th regiment, Major Lyster remained in the court-yard of the picket-house."— From this opinion, I consider that Captain Maclean is enti- tled to great praise for the noble stand he made in the picket-house; and therefore beg leave to recommend him for his Excellency's consideration. I have, &c.,

CHARLES FITZGERALD,
Brig.-Gen. Commanding 2d Brigade.

A list of the Officers, Non-commissioned Officers, and Privates, present of this company, will be immediately for- warded to the Lieut.-General. Cotter, 3d reg., to be Capt., &c. The Cross of the first class of the Military Order of St. Ferdinand is conferred on the un- der-mentioned Officers, for their distinguished gallantry be- fore the enemy on the 1st instant:—Lieut.-Col. Apthorpe, 10th; Brev. Major Ifamfreys, Engineers. Brevet Major Duree, Rifles; Bull, 1st reg.; Askew, 4th; Clarke, D.A.Q.M.G.; Maclean, 3d; Captains Stephenson, 1st Lancers; Kent Murray, 7th; Howe, Artillery; and Lieut. Chase of the Art. By command.

THE LAMENT FOR MADAME MALIBRAN.

BY SIR LUMLEY SKEFFINGTON.

Flow, sorrow, flow; a deep lament,
An everlasting sigh,
Through every scene shall still present
That shade which seeks the sky.
Tear falls on tear—a boundless grief—
The deluge of the heart,
Revering Malibran as chief
In nature and in art.

If some rare star, in aftertime,
Would kindred fame oppose,
She must inherit the sublime
On which that angel rose;
Bereavement of terrestrial worth,
A trial wisely given,
Turns every thought from cares of earth,
To heavenly in heaven.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.—(From the Journal du Commerce.)—"The public are aware that King Leopold is the uncle of Donna Maria's husband, and that his Majesty had attached M. Van de Weyer, of protocol memory, to the person of his nephew as a sort of Mentor. Both M. Van da Weyer and his pupil wished to defend Don Pedro's charter, vi et armis, from the late successful attack made upon it at Lisbon; but the French Ambassador, M. de St. Priest, sustained the adverse party, and his opinion having prevailed in the Queen's Council, the Prince de Saxe Cobourg lost the command of the army. The nephew then complained to his uncle, the King of the Belgians, and the uncle to his father-in-law, the King of the French, who decided upon inviting King Leopold to Paris, in order that mutual explanations might take place on the subject of the complaint."

The Moniteur announces that the King, upon the demand of MM. de Peyronnet and Chantelauze, the health of whom is most seriously impaired, has ordered them to be discharged from the dungeon of Ham, and authorised them to reside on their parole—M. de Peyronnet at Montferrand, department of the Gironde, and M. de Chantelauze in the department of the Loire. M. de Polignac and M. de Ranvilla have refused to ask the King's grace.

The marriage of the Princess Mary to the King of Naples is said to be positively determined on. It is even added that the Queen and the Duke of Orleans will accompany the Princess to Naples; but as the King intends to celebrate the marriage with great magnificence, it will be put off till all fear of the cholera has disappeared. —French Paper.

The King has been slightly indisposed with cold; his sister, the Princess Adelaide, is seriously ill. It is again rumoured that the Chambers will be convoked for November. As, however, the new Cabinet can gain nothing by anticipating the ordinary period for the commencement of the Legislative Session, the report is deemed unworthy of credit. The arrival of M. Rothschild at the Chateau, where he had (on Tuesday) an audience of King Leopold, occasioned a rumour that his Majesty had a new loan in contemplation.

RUSSIA.—Extract of a letter: "You have perhaps received no further information as regards the assassination of the Emperor of Russia. His Imperial Majesty was shot at by a ruffian. An aide-de-camp was killed by his side. Whether from the effect of the shot, or the violent convulsions of his dying neighbour, his Imperial Majesty had his shoulder dislocated."

SPAIN.—It appears that the occupation of Cordova by Gomez had been a much more important affair than the accounts first received from Madrid represented it to be. Gomez fixed his head-quarters, and remained in that town for several days, and did not quit the place without first sacking it, and carrying with him the plate belonging to the cathedral. A Madrid paper of the 13th states, that intelligence had been received of the arrival of Gomez at Montilla, a town situate six leagues to the south of Cordova. The Malaga militia, under Escalante, were completely routed by Gomez at Baena on the 6th inst. They fled in the utmost disorder at the very sight of the enemy: 500 of these miserable cowards, whose heroism and patriotism had been so highly extolled in the Spanish papers, were taken prisoners by the troops of Gomez.

PORTUGAL.—LISBON, Oct. 7.—The Queen and Prince remain constantly at the Necessidades. Her Majesty used to visit either the Italian opera or the French theatre almost every evening; now she never goes to either. The theatres, in fact, are almost deserted, and Lisbon, from being a place of the greatest gaiety, has all the appearance of a city in mourning for some general calamity. The coffee-houses are shut at an earlier hour than usual, and the streets are also deserted before their accustomed time.

HOLLAND.—The States-General have resumed their sittings; the King opened the Session on Monday last, with a speech highly gratifying in regard to the internal prosperity of the country.

TURKEY.—It is affirmed that some English capitalists have placed at the disposal of the Porte a sum of 2,000,000*l.* sterling, to rebuild the quarter of Constantinople lately destroyed by fire. The Sultan, it is said, has in return for this service granted new privileges and exemptions in favour of the English commerce, and especially the right to form on the European side of the Dardanelles a depot of the manufactures and productions of Great Britain, which are to be imported free of all duty.

SWITZERLAND.—The Swiss question yet remains undecided, but there is little fear of a rupture. Letters from the frontiers contradict a number of exaggerated reports circulated both in France and Switzerland. No order, for instance, has been issued to prevent French citizens entering Switzerland. The French now in the country, who arrived there since the 29th September, are not admitted into France without a passport legalized by the French Ambassador in Berne. Those who arrived in Switzerland before that period may return to France without even being furnished with a passport. Waggoners have not been stopped, and the Genevese possessing property in France, on the frontier, are allowed to come and visit it. It is not true either that orders have been given to expel Swiss residents, and the measure taken with regard to a number of Swiss, who have lately been forced to retrograde, was owing to their travelling without a regular passport. It is also false that any military demonstration has been made on the frontiers; no troops crossed the department of the Ain, and none of the regiments of the garrison of Lyons have moved in that direction.

Theatres.

DRURY LANE.—Mr. Edwin Forrest, the eminent American tragedian, of whose abilities the public have heard so much of late, made his debut before an English audience at this theatre on Monday evening, in Dr. Bird's tragedy of The Gladiator, and met with a highly flattering reception from a numerous and fashionable audience; and, indeed, had it been otherwise, we must have quarrelled with the taste, and arraigned the judgment of our countrymen. As a stranger, we give Mr. Forrest a hearty and cordial welcome; not only for his merit as an actor, but for his excellent character as a man. We shall not, however, be led away by the unqualified, and, indeed, absurd praise, lavished on this gentleman's performance of the character of Spartacus (which has been bestowed by some of our contemporaries), and which will, we fear, raise expectations in the public mind far beyond what the actor can realise. This has too often proved fatal to the success of many a performer; and if Mr. Forrest is to rank as the first actor of the day, it will not be done by over-rating his talent, and thereby disappointing the public. It would, however, be unfair to criticise Mr. Forrest's acting too severely; as certainly sound judgment was not evinced in the selection of the part for his debut; for, had this mono-melodrama of The Gladiator been the production of an English author, we very much question if it would have survived beyond the second act; as it was, the play was d——d to all intents and purposes, after a most patient hearing. In person, Mr. Forrest is above the middle stature, and in figure a perfect Hercules. His features are not regular nor strikingly handsome; his countenance is manly, but certainly not capable of great variety of expression. His voice is deep-toned, sonorous, and musical, and his action commanding, graceful, and natural. His performance of the gladiator, Spartacus, evinced throughout a considerable portion of talent, but more particularly as a melo-dramatic actor of great power and experience; for we must confess we were at a loss to discover that all-powerful genius which has made our American friends so lavish in their praises of their favourite actor. Mr. Forrest's acting is of that description which dazzles the imagination from its energy and power, and not by any brilliant flashes of innate genius. We shall not, on this occasion, follow Mr. Forrest through the various scenes of this play, though there were many in which he highly distinguished himself: we must, therefore, for the present, take our leave of him, sincerely desiring his further acquaintance, and the sooner the better in a new character. This gentleman's Othello is very highly spoken of, and we have no doubt it is a performance of considerable merit; but, from the specimen he has afforded us of his talent, we should say the part of Coriolanus was admirably well suited to his powers. With the exception of the Phasarius of Cooper, and the Senona of Miss Huddart, we never saw a piece more shamefully acted by all concerned in it. Mr. Warde evidently did not like his part, and was imperfect; and Mr. and Mrs. Hooper might just as well have been in New York for all the service they rendered. At the end of the play Mr. Forrest was loudly called for, and, on his re-appearance, was most enthusiastically greeted. He thanked the audience for his reception, and attempted to do so for the author of The Gladiator: to this the audience would not listen. This surely ought to convince Mr. Forrest of the necessity for his appearance in some other character.—We regret that Mr. Banim's new drama, The Duchess of Ormond, was not favourably received on Thursday night. We have not had an opportunity of witnessing it, but hope that, with judicious pruning (for its fault, we are informed, is tediousness), it may prove more successful on its second representation. As was anticipated, the tragedy of The Gladiator failed to attract on Wednesday and Friday evenings. It is not doing Mr. Forrest justice to allow him to appear in so dull a production.

COVENT GARDEN.—The performances during the week have been most attractive. We have had the tragedies of King John and Ion acted in a style which even at higher prices could not have failed to draw an overflow. The manager, however, does well in keeping his theatre open at moderate charges for admission; payment for pleasure should never be made to punish the pockets of the public. Last night we had the tragedy of Othello, and, as might have been anticipated from the excellence of the cast, the house was crowded in a few minutes after the opening of the doors. By the time the curtain rose many hundreds had left the theatre unable to get a glimpse of the stage, and so great was the noise and confusion that nearly the whole of the first act passed off in dumb show. Owing to the polite attention of Mr. Harris, the sub-treasurer, who ordered all the vacant private boxes to be thrown open, we were fortunate enough to procure a seat. The announcement of Macready as Othello, Vandenhoff as Iago, and Kemble as Cassio, was almost enough to remind us of the good old days when tragedy was acted in sterling style upon the boards of our National Theatres. It has, however, convinced us that it is the determination of the management to leave nothing undone to merit a continuance of public patronage. Although we have often seen the above in the characters they so ably sustained last night, yet we believe it is the first time they have appeared together in London in this tragedy. Macready's personation of the Moor is well known; it was as finely performed as we ever remember to have seen it by this actor; but we do not consider it one of his happiest efforts. In some portions of the third act he met with considerable applause. Of Kemble's Cassio there has never been but one opinion; it is one of the best pieces of acting the town ever witnessed. Vandenhoff played Iago extremely well. The Desdemona of Miss Faucit was a pleasing and delicate piece of acting. Mrs. West's Emilia and Bennett's Brabantio are both entitled to praise. At the fall of the curtain Kemble, Macready, Vandenhoff, and Miss Faucit, were loudly called for, and on their re-appearance most cordially greeted by the audience. Vandenhoff then announced Othello for Tuesday next.

ADELPHI.—A very amusing burletta, entitled Sir Roger de Coverley, was produced at this house on Monday evening, and met with a favourable reception. The author has contrived to introduce the venerated names from the Spectator into an amusing melo-drama, in which there are several very interesting situations; but the names from any other popular work would have answered quite as well. The tableau from the celebrated picture of "Sir Roger de Coverley going to Church" was very effective. The same may be said of the scene in which Mrs. Yates escapes from the hands of the gipsies who are about to murder her. Reeve, as White Moll, a sort of Moll Flagon, was very amusing. The characters sustained by Mrs. Yates, O. Smith, and Mr. Yates, were well acted, and the piece was announced for repetition amidst loud applause.

ST. JAMES'S.—Mr. Lunn's new burletta of Harvest Hall has been favourably received throughout the week. In the musical piece of The Waterman we were glad to see our old favourite Braham as Tom Tug; he is still without a rival. He sang the "Bay of Biscay" with great power and fine effect, and was loudly encored. The other characters in this piece were admirably sustained by Strickland, Harley, Madame Sala, and Miss Stanley. We should like to see Braham in a new dramatic musical burletta—something light and amusing.

OLYMPIC.—Another pleasant little burletta was produced on Thursday evening at this most agreeable place of entertainment. It is entitled A Pleasant Neighbour, and was most pleasantly acted by Mr. Liston and Mrs. Orger, who sustained the entire weight of the piece, and was very pleasantly received throughout and when announced for repetition, by an audience who were themselves determined to be pleasant. We shall next week do ourselves the pleasure of noticing it more at length.

QUEEN'S.—There has been no novelty at this theatre during the week: Kate Kearney has, we regret to say, been withdrawn by the author, because he could not obtain payment for one night's performance, although the piece had been performed nearly twenty times with more success than any novelty produced this season. Authors live by their labour as well as actors, and ought to be paid. Mrs. Waylett will again appear in Kate Kearney, by permission of the author, before she quits the theatre.

Mr. and Mrs. Tarnan (late Miss Jarman) are about to quit America for England. They have made upwards of 5000*l.* in little more than two years. Drury Lane Theatre can find ample room for them on their arrival.

Irish Revenue Police.—Lieutenant Conyngham Ogilvie, formerly of the Rifle Brigade, and son of the late Capt. Ogilvie of the 4th Dragoon Guards, has been dismissed his situation, under circumstances of great hardship and affliction. Capt. Duff, Sub-Inspector, has left Swanlinbar for Borrisokane, his new station, and Mr. Douglas, Sub-Inspector at Enniskillen, replaces him. Lieut. Beaver has succeeded Lieut. Henry at Enniskillen, the latter having gone to Ennis.

Literary Notices.

toria; or, Enterprise beyond the Rocky Mountains. By Washington Irving, author of 'The Sketch Book,' 'The Alhambra,' &c. 3 vols. R. Bentley.

HE taste for romantic fiction is perhaps an universal e. What the old song declares of the power of beauty y be truly applied to the fascination of imaginary rrative,—

"No age, no profession, no station is free."

he gravest, the gayest, all resign themselves to the ell of wondrous adventure, strong incident, and passion ite lofty moods; and no wonder that it should be so; r although no work of fiction that is not based on uman nature can hope for lasting popularity, yet to pos- s the necessary stimulus it should be formed of e con- ntration of events and developments of character that not often occur in such close union in any series of ansactions in actual existence. To satisfy, therefore, e love of mental excitement so strong within us all, the ill of the novelist is exercised to condense into one ot whatever is mysterious in the human heart and won- erful in human endurance; whatever is enthralling in cident and picturesque in scenery; whatever, in short, n arouse sympathy, or rivet attention, or excite terror, wonder, or curiosity. If the veritable occurrences of e world were more frequently to possess these attri- utes, the occupation of the writer of romance would in- eed be in danger of falling into disuse. If such romances real life as "Astoria" presents were often to be met with, w would turn to the artificial compositions of the no- ellet, but would confine themselves with intense and reathless eagerness to the true records of the enterprise, d perilous exploits, and striking adventures of their llow-men. Mr. Washington Irving's present work will, n this account, exert a fascination over romance readers hich could hardly be found to so great an extent in the ages of their favourite literature. "Astoria" is the ame of a colony, founded by a little band of dauntless dventurers beyond the Rocky Mountains of Columbia, d near the shores of the Pacific. Their journey to- ards this spot over several thousand miles of wild coun- y, never before trodden by civilised man, their encounters ith the savage tribes that infested the boundless prairies nd the shores of the mighty rivers that interlace them, heir hair-breadth escapes, and marvellous endurance, are ll narrated with a power, and earnestness, and never- ailing interest, which characterise the present volumes, s, beyond all comparison, the finest which have ever roceeded from the pen of Washington Irving. The rojector of the singular enterprise which forms the sub- ect of "Astoria," was the celebrated John Jacob Astor, an adopted citizen of the United States, and one f the most remarkable individuals at present existing. The expedition thus originated was entrusted to two se- arate parties; one proceeding, like "Sinbade of the ildernesse," overland across the vast continent of Ame- ica to the rugged barriers of the Rocky Mountains; the ther sailing towards the Pacific in a small ship called the Tonquin, commanded by a bluff, honest sailor, but strict isciplinarian, one Captain Thorn, whose character is worked out with great dramatic force. It is not our in- ention in this notice of "Astoria," to follow the un- precedented details unfolded in the work, but we shall ext week gratify our readers with an extract or two in jus- tification of the high opinion we have expressed of the erits and absorbing interest of the story.

Gems of Beauty; displayed in a Series of Twelve highly finished Engravings, from Designs by E. T. Parris, Esq. With Fanciful Illustrations in verse by the Countess of Blessington. Longman and Co.

For splendid embellishment this is the most splendid and captivating work that has yet appeared: a collection of twelve as beautiful representations of female loveliness as ever were placed before the public. We scarcely know whether we ought to allot most praise to the spi- rited publishers or the talented and captivating Countess for the selection of designs; but we are mindful that the artists are equally entitled to our admiration and respect. However, to all we will give unlimited praise, for we [illegible]rt that as a work of art this publication leaves nearly all others at an immeasurable distance. Lady Blessington's "Fanciful Illustrations" will be found as irresistible as herself; we therefore select a few, and re- commend the work to every admirer of beauty and the fine arts.

THE TOPAZ.

"My master, lady, sends me here;"
"Hush, boy! I hear a footstep near."—
"She comes not yet, for age is slow;
"Was ever lady guarded so!"

"Then wear this jewel* for his sake;
From thee all sadness it will take;
And, let me say, the ring hath spanned
The finger of the fairest hand
In Andalusia's sunny land."

* Cardanus relates wonders concerning the virtues of this stone in the case of melancholy.

"I ought not—yet—I'll wear the ring,
And he may 'neath my lattice sing,
Soon as the first pale star he sees
Rise o'er yon grove of orange trees;
For then my sour Duenna—(Fly!
I hear her tottering footstep nigh!)—
Will sleep at least an hour, I know.
Ah! was I won too soon!—go, go!
Was ever maiden guarded so!"

THE AMETHYST.

His parting gift! What yearning thought
To memory by its clasp is brought,
Of him who on the stormy sea,
Alas, is wandering far from me!

And he, too, does he fondly dwell
On the heart-sickness of farewell?
Like me, too, courts he vainly sleep!
'Tis but the left, who wake and weep.

'Tis said the Amethyst[§] can chase
Sleep, when the wretched 'twould embrace:
Bet, no! 'tis love, that in this breast
His vigil keeps, nor lets me rest.

Sail on! and may thy dreams ne'er show
Thy lonely maiden's ceaseless woe;
'Tis sweet for thee to pray and pine,
So I may bear thy grief with mine!

§ Andreas Baccius, in his work entitled De Natura Gemmarum, says that it diminisheth sleep.

THE AQUAMARINE.

How sweet, on such a lovely night—fair time, to lovers dear,
When down the path of soft moonlight the gondola draws near,—
For maids, who, to the noontide's glare, had seemed all coy and cold,
To listen from their balconies, while tales like these are told!

SONG.

Era close thine eyes in slumber,
Fair love! I come to seek
The garland whose young roses
Are paler than thy cheek.

And in exchange I bring thee
These gems* thy waist to bind,
To which the ancient sages
Cure for sad hearts did find.

Good night—may angels guard thee!
And bless thy slumbers light!
Dream of thy own Enrico!
Good night, sweet love!—Good night!

* Wurtzung states, that the Aquamarine is useful in all dis- eases of the heart.

THE CAIRNGOHRM.

"Place the plume in his bonnet, fair cousin; hoi say,
When thy lover has donned his bright battle array.
Should that plume not be foremost in all the wild fray,
Wilt thou still love its wearer as now?"

"Too well do I know mine own Jamie, to doubt
A courage that quick as a fire will flash out,
When with target and claymore, and Highland heart stout,
He taunts will vie for his brow.

"For when was a Campbell's heart e'er known to quail.
Or his foot to turn back,—or his strong arm to fail!
Ah, woe to his foemen! their widows shall wail
That my brave one went forth to the field.

"Like our own native jewel* is Jamie's true heart,
And as pure as the streams from our mountains that start—
Let him go: from the right he will never depart:—
He may fall, but he never will yield."

* The Cairngohrm is indigenous to the Highlands, and is a stone of considerable brightness and firmness.

Sir Thomas Lawrence's Cabinet of Gems. With Bio- graphical and Descriptive Memorials. By P. G. Pat- more, Esq. Ackermann and Co.

NOTWITHSTANDING the uncommon splendour and attrac- tion of several of the Annuals of this year, we doubt if the exquisite Work we are now to notice, will not, with Lady Blessington's "Gems of Beauty," prove THE Books of the Season—in this particular class, we mean. Certain it is that the Work before us puts forth claims of a kind quite peculiar and novel, and such as must at once bear it triumphantly into the favour of all lovers of art and pictorial beauty. To prove this beyond question, we have only to state that it contains no less than twelve fac-similes of Original Drawings by Sir Thomas Law- rence, none of which have, till this moment, met the public eye! But this is only one of its peculiar features of attraction. Its contents are not merely from Sir Thomas's unrivalled hand—they are also (so to speak) from his heart;—the greater part of them—at least, eight, we believe, out of the twelve—being portraits of his own nearest and dearest relatives (including his father and mother), every one of them taken beside their own hearths, and for the sole and especial pleasure and orna- ment of their own hearts and homes. Moreover, six out of the twelve drawings are of children; in the delineation of which Lawrence unquestionably excelled every other artist, living or dead. Our limits forbid our entering into details on the pictorial department of this highly in- teresting work. But, from a most careful examination of it, we feel called upon to state generally, that the sub- jects are all, without exception, worthy of the unrivalled fame of the artist; and that a very considerable number of them (at least half) are equal to anything of the kind he ever produced.

With respect to the literary department of this elegant and attractive production, it is evident that Mr. Patmore has been peculiarly favoured, in the access which he has been allowed to private sources of information, regarding the several subjects of his memorials; especially those which relate to the portraits of the infant relatives of the artist, his nephews and nieces. And the result is, that we have several passages, of touching interest in them- selves, and which singularly enhance the attraction and value of the portraits they relate to. The Memoir of the Artist's Professional Career will also be read with strong interest,—especially as it contains, in a score or so of pages, the whole pith and substance of the two lumber- ing volumes which are called (by courtesy) his "Life."

We must add that there is a hint in the Preface which many of our readers will do well to take, even if they should not be annually disposed. We mean that which points at the value and interest of these drawings as studies for the young artist and amateur. In fact, the work is peculiarly worthy of public favour in this point of view, every plate being a fac-simile of the original drawing from which it is taken.

Heath's Picturesque Annual.—Ireland, Picturesque and Romantic. By Leitch Ritchie, Esq. Longman and Co.

WE are pleased to find the "Annuals" taking higher ground and assuming a more literary character. Many of them are no longer depositories for the insipidities of fashionable scribblers, but possess historical and amusing information. Under the title of the "Picturesque An- nual" we have delightful sketches of Ireland, the cus- toms, habits, feelings, and traditions of the people. These do credit to the taste and researches of Mr. Ritchie, whilst the engravings, from drawings of M'Clise and Creswick, are no less to be valued than those we have been accustomed to meet with in these gay period- icals. We have made a selection which will amuse our readers.

"The Irish Gentleman.—This species is extremely rare; for it would be absurd to count as Irishmen the chil- dren of absentees, who are brought up to think of their coun- try merely as the place whence their father draws his re- venue. But the real Irish Gentleman, when found, is well worth the trouble you may have expended in finding him. He is not a mere walking gentleman. He is full of cha- racter; and is, in fact, a sort of highly-refined extract of the Irish-man. He is as polite as a Frenchman of the old school; but it is not the politeness of manner but of heart: and this is the secret of his success with the ladies. He is cool and self-possessed, but not grave and apathetic, like the English gentleman. The latter qualities are respect- able in a Red Indian, for in him they are associated with ideas of majesty and endurance: but the stoicism with which Mr. Smith enters a drawing-room, and the heroic calmness with which he levels his opera-glass at the stage, are irresistibly ludicrous. They remind one of the tragic air of a monkey cracking nuts. However, Mr. Smith is satisfied with the admiration of American travellers (who ought to know something of the Indian character); and so the little master Smiths have nothing to fear from the stric- tures of a vulgarian like me. It would be difficult for the Irish gentleman to acquire this apathy of manner. The laws of good breeding are only just sufficient to keep within reasonable bounds the natural elasticity of his temperament; and thus he hits unconsciously the precise point between gravity and sprightliness, beyond which, on one side, is frivolity, and on the other, dulness. The Irish gentleman is fond of his country, but he makes no parade of it. If a defender is wanted, he is ready; but he has the good taste to feel that the condition in which Ireland has been so long placed, gives a man no warrant to say lightly, or flauntingly, "I am an Irishman." Out of Ireland his plea- surable associations are all connected with the continent. It was there he received a part of his education; he speaks French like a native; he is a cousin of that foreign Irisher, the well-known Count Devilskimbo O'Shaughnessy. He is partial to claret, not because it is foreign, but because it was the favourite drink of his ancestors, in those golden days, when claret was the only wine they could afford to drink. He no longer indulges to excess; or, if he does so, on any extraordinary occasion, he carries his wine better than formerly, and eschews a row. When he quarrels, it is in cold blood, and in a gentlemanly way; but being a man of courage, and a good shot, this is not half so often as people imagine. The Irish gentleman will by and by become more common in Ireland. At pre- sent many individuals of the species are scattered abroad upon the continent, serving in foreign armies, or otherwise incorporating themselves with foreign nations."

"The Irish Jontleman.—The Irish Jontleman belongs to no station in particular, but is found in all classes, from the nobility downwards. His portrait has been painted by Miss Edgeworth and Lady Morgan; but the female pencil is too delicate in its touch to give features like his in their natural breadth and vulgarity. He has been exhibited also on the stage; but there a cloak of rude generosity is always thrown round him, to conceal those defects without which there can be no likeness. In Ireland, I have said, the vanity of one man is dove-tailed into that of his neighbours, the sult of which is an easy confidence of manner; but the Irish Jontleman stands out in bold relief from the plain surface of society. He is not vain, but impudent, and in this respect he is the cause of half the prejudices which exist against his nation; for he thrusts himself forward as the Irishman. His brogue is more than Irish, for he cultivates it with great industry. He is not an exaggerator, but a liar; he is not gay, but boisterous; he is not convivial, but drunken. He is a great duellist. You never enter his house but you find him cleaning his pistols, or hammering his flints. On the most careful calculation I have been able to make, there are three hundred and sixty-five duels per annum fought in all Ireland; and of these three hundred and sixty are fought by the Irish Jontleman. Notwithstanding this, he is never killed, or even wounded; the explanation of which is, that he always takes care to fight with a jontleman like himself. The remaining five duels are fought by men of honour under the usual circumstances, and are frequently accommodated in the usual way. In Ireland, although the number of such conflicts is so immense as compared with England or Scotland, there is not a drop more blood spreaded. The Irish Jontleman is a bully, and yet is not absolutely a coward. To serve a friend (that is to say, the person who hires him with money, or drink, or the loan of a horse, or the run of the larder), he will at any time run the risk of being kicked or horsewhipped. He is not a mere bully, however; he is also a flatterer, and a sycophant, and will fawn and crouch like a spaniel. The Irish Jontleman stands in special awe of the Irish Gentleman. They are in every respect the opposites of each other, and for this reason you will seldom or never meet with them in the same company. The breed of the Irish Gentleman, I have said, grows more common in Ireland; the consequence of which is, that the Irish Jontleman begins already to make himself scarce. A change, besides, fatal to the latter, has taken place in the manners of society. At table there is more gaiety and less drunkenness, and people are now unwilling to put up with coarseness and vulgarity for the sake of a good song, or a humourous story. The ladies too, finding the gentlemen more comfortable, turn away from the other with disdain; so that by and by, instead of meeting him as heretofore in the best houses, you will have to inquire in the low taverns and whisky cabins for the Irish Jontleman."

"The Irish Lady.—The Irish lady is the sister of the Irish gentleman, and is one of the most fascinating women in the world. She has a lofty brow, fine eyes, and a face altogether more intellectual than that of the English lady; but she has less dignity. In her manner she resembles more the French lady, and is quite as amusing and conversable; but her coquetry has nothing of the heartlessness which confines the fascination of a French beauty to the moment when her eyes are fixed upon yours. The Irish lady has a touch of the enthusiasm of her country, which betrays itself in her whole character. She is either a rake or a devotee—for she scorns a medium. If a devotee, you will know her by a grave, not to say sad, expression of countenance; and as this is not the true characteristic of devotional feeling, you perceive that she is struggling with the native archness of her disposition—which, notwithstanding, breaks out now and then in a sudden gleam from her deep bright eye. At such moments you turn a saint yourself, and acknowledge in its full power the beauty of holiness. If a rake, her face is pale and haggard, for she rakes to excess. She takes to dissipation, as men do to drinking. The idea of a quiet solitary evening is frightful to her imagination; she looks out for amusement with feverish anxiety, and bends down her spirit to the level of companions far inferior to that for which nature intended her. The intellectual powers, therefore, of the Irish lady rarely receive fair play. In the country, more especially, her mind labours under a want of books. Few families of any station are wealthy enough to purchase or keep up a sufficient library, and there are only two or three towns in all Ireland in which there is a public one. I am far from denying, however, that there is a good proportion of well-informed women in Ireland—but there ought to be more. Instead of the national brogue, the Irish lady has a certain buoyancy of accent which distinguishes her from all other women. This is the finer part of the Irish character manifested in sound. This accent gives point to the most common-place saying, and adds brilliancy to wit. To describe a thing so slight, so ethereal, is impossible; but any one who has enjoyed the conversation of an Irish lady of high rank in London, celebrated for her beauty and literary talents, must have felt what it is. Even setting the Irish lady, par excellence, out of the question, there is a great deal of character about female society in Ireland; and this is owing to the natural talent and liveliness of the people. We see there very little of the mawkishness which so often overspreads an English party; and are tempted more frequently to distinguish the individuals than satisfied to class them by that insipid, silly, no-meaning designation —young ladies."

"The Irish Lady.—The Irish lady is of the same family as the Irish jontleman, but is a much more amiable person. The grand object of her ambition is to pass for an Irish lady; and this, while it shows much pretension, shows also much taste. She gets rid of her brogue by the rule of contrary; that is to say, instead of substituting, like her mother before her, the open sound of a for that of double e, she tures everything into double e. The word lady is, with her, leedy, and she will run after her sister Grace, calling 'Greasy, greasy!' Her accent, however, remains unaltered, notwithstanding this metamorphosis in her pronunciation, and the jumble is splendid! All her attempts to ladyfy herself are of the same nature; her 'vaulting ambition o'erleaps itself, and falls on the other side;' she is a lady by the rule of contrary. Sometimes she tries to do the sentimental, but spoils all with a laugh, that bursts out of her eyes in light and water. Chiding the rudeness of her lover, she complains sighingly of her feminine weakness; but presently, falling into the sentiment of the old song, cries—

"'Och, what the divvle are you at?—begone you naughty man!'— and maybe hits him a slap on the face. She is much given to laughing, but is also an excellent weeper; and, by the same token, her kit consists chiefly of pocket handkerchiefs. She is 'found of the army,' and makes an excellent soldier's wife. In society, she is nothing more than a vulgar Irishwoman, ill dressed in fashionable clothes, boisterously sentimental, full of affectation and high spirits, and with a touch of generosity in her nature withal, which makes one sorry to laugh at her."

MAN,

An ape, a lion, a fox, and an ass,
Doth show forth man's life as it were in a glass.
For spoilt they are till twenty and one,
Then they turn Hops till forty be gone,
Then cunning as foxes till three-score and ten,
Then they turn asses, and so no more men.

WOMAN,

A dove, a sparrow, a parrot, a crow,
Will show you the life of a woman also;
Harmless as doves till turned of fifteen,
Loving as sparrows till thirty they've seen.
Prating like parrots till after three-score,
Then birds of ill omen, and women no more.

Maxims for Health.—Beware of studying, reading, or straining the head while at table. Laughter is one of the greatest helps to digestion; and the custom, prevalent among our forefathers, of exciting it at table by jesters and buffoons, was founded on true medical principles. Endeavour to have cheerful and merry companions at your meals. What nourishment one receives amidst mirth and jollity will certainly produce good and light blood. Never eat so much that you feel you have a stomach. It will be best to give over before you are completely eated. From a very sensible Publication, "The Magazine of Health."

A Simile.—A preacher, while descanting on the impossibility of the sinner retracing his steps after he had gone a certain length, used the following striking illustration of his position:—"My brethren, it is a very easy task to row a skiff over Niagara falls, but a tremendous job to row it back again!"—American Paper.

Among the literary curiosities in the National Library at Berlin is the identical Bible used by Charles I. on the scaffold. How it came into the hands of the present possessors is not generally known.

"England," says the Frankfort Journal, "has given a challenge to the musical world through one of her people, John Allen, of Malton, who cultivates with success a species of musical execution but little known in Germany or Italy—whistling. Long may John Allan remain without a rival!"

Each half year's catalogue at Leipsic contains the names of at least a thousand new writers, from which, and from other circumstances, a recent traveller infers that "there cannot be fewer than 50,000 persons living in Germany who have written a book."

Word misapplied (?).—A perriwig-pated fellow lately preached a ranting discourse, full of nonsense, to the small edification of his audience. "Who is the parson?" asked one of his hearers of an old lady, who had been equally a sufferer. "I don't know," she answered; "but he is one of the missionaries for the profanation of the Gospel, and he seems to be a master in his way." The good soul meant propagation!

"Broconiotica, near Corfu, July 10th, 1836.

"SIR,—Returning you infinite thanks for the efficacious specific which I have received—namely, the famous Rowland's Kalydor—I have to request a fresh supply. It has been of great service to me against the bites of those troublesome insects that infest this town: on the first application, it immediately allayed their tormenting and venomous effects.

"Also a Lady, who unhappily had for years her face afflicted with pimples—and I can assure you, that besides entirely removing them, her complexion became more pleasing and delicate, in consequence of which the Kalydor has excited the greatest enthusiasm—and you have the greatest proof of this from the continued applications of the persons to whom I have recommended it, and who after having used it, were extremely satisfied of its valuable properties. Waiting in expectation of your favouring me with the supply I have asked for,—I remain, with esteem, your obedient servant, RAFFAELE FIORE."

HANNAY AND CO., Perfumers to the Queen, to their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victoria, No. 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells-street, London.

HANNAY'S FRAGRANT ESSENCE OF RONDELETIA, for the Toilet or Handkerchief, originally prepared expressly for the use of the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe. An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered for Public Patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other Essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of Lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open free, and so which handkerchiefs so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

The Essence of Rondeletia is a most delightful and refreshing Perfume, for burning in Philosophical Pastilles.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Essence of Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Co., therefore, beg to inform their customers, that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop, 63, Oxford-street; but it may be obtained in the country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY & CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and the Seal.

Sold in Bottles at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

And in handsome Cut Glass Toilet Bottles, as supplied for the use of the Royal Family, 42s.

HANNAY'S IMPERIAL LIP SALVE, in China Boxes, at 1s. each, is an article much approved, and will keep good any length of time.

HANNAY'S HIGHLY CONCENTRATED SMELLING SALTS, in Cut Bottles, with Glass Stoppers, 2s. each.

The extreme pungency of these Salts proves them to be in a higher state of concentration than those heretofore in use, with the desirable advantage of being in bottles with air-tight stoppers, which prevents their decay, and are found to be a most useful appendage to the apartments of invalids; the large Table Bottles, if unstoppered for a few minutes, diffusing an agreeable and refreshing odour through the atmosphere, far preferable to that produced by fumigating pastilles, without the noxious and suffocating fumes produced by the charcoal contained in them. Their utility in the chamber of the sick, at church, in crowded assemblies, and at the theatre, is obvious; their beneficial effects in the case of fainting should induce every Lady to carry one in her Reticule. They can be filled into Ladies own Bottles, and they do not corrode the silver or gold mountings.

FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION,

HANNAY AND CO.'S NEW VEGETABLE SOAP.

To those Ladies whose refined tastes value the appearance of delicacy and health, Messrs. Hannay and Co., Perfumers to the Royal Family, beg to recommend their NEW SOAP, prepared entirely from Vegetable Oils, as a most invaluable Improvement in Toilet Soaps; it possesses all the detergent properties of the common alkalies Soaps heretofore in use, without any of their injurious properties, it renders the Skin beautifully soft, smooth, and delicately white; removes all Redness, Freckles, Tan, and Sunburn, and justly ranks as the most agreeable, efficient, and harmless improver of the complexion in present use, and retains its agreeable perfume to the last.

Sold in Packets of three squares at 1s. 6d., six squares 3s., or six 2s. packets 15s.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA SOAP.

This is the Vegetable Soap perfumed with the admired Fragrance of the Essence of Rondoletia, and has acquired the unqualified approbation and patronage of almost every Lady of Fashion.

Price 1s. the square, or six 5s.

HANNAY'S IMPROVED STICKING PLAISTER.

This useful article is a great improvement on the old Court Plaister, as it will adhere until a cut is healed up, and will not come off in washing the hands. Price 6d.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloreux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrina, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by the appointment of Jean Lefay, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 86, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries (if by letter, post paid) respecting it, and also show letters received from numerous patients who have benefitted by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London carriage free. Sold in Pots at 4s. 6d. each.

Notice.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

TEETH.—Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result: the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them."

GREIG THOMSON, Surgeon Dentist, informs the Public that he has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

G. T. continues to perform all the operations of Dental Surgery, and to fix natural and artificial teeth upon the most improved principles, combined with the utmost moderation in terms.

Is it credible that any member of the Medical Profession can recommend these deleterious compositions; or can any reference, real or pretended, alter the facts above alluded to?

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From Joseph Neway Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. From Bransby Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 15, 1835."

From William Hentsch, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 16, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from Indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late R. Godfrey Windos), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

ASHLEY COOPER'S BOTANICAL PURIFYING PILLS are established by thirty years' experience, are prescribed by most of the eminent Physicians and Surgeons in London, and are always administered at several public Hospitals as the only certain remedy for Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Strictures, and all other forms of Venereal Diseases in either sex, curing in a few days, by one small pill for a dose, with ease, secrecy, and safety. Their operation is imperceptible; they do not require the slightest confinement, or any alteration of diet, beverage, or exercise. They do not disagree with the stomach, nor cause any offensive smell to the breath, as is the case with all other medicines in use for those complaints, and after a cure effected by the use of these pills, the party will not experience any return of the complaint, as generally occurs after taking Balsam of Copaiba, and other drugs of the like nature which, only possessing a local action, merely suppressed the complaint for a time without eradicating it from the constitution, and the patient, on undergoing a little more fatigue than ordinary, finds all the symptoms return, and that they are suffering under the complaint as much as at first, and are at last constrained to have recourse to these pills as the only certain cure. They are likewise a most efficient remedy for Pimpled Faces, Scurf, Scorbutic Affections, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Captains of vessels should make a point of always taking them to sea, their unrivalled efficacy in curing Scurvy being known throughout the world.

The following letter, selected from numerous other professional recommendations forwarded to the Proprietor when he first offered these pills to the public, may be considered interesting.

From that eminent Surgeon, the late Joshua Brookes, Esq., F.R.S. Professor of Anatomy, &c. &c.

Dear Cooper,—I have tried your Pills in numerous instances, and my candid opinion is, that they are a most improved system of treatment for those peculiar complaints for which you recommend them, curing with rapidity, and with a certainty that I had never before witnessed; but what I consider their most invaluable property is, that they entirely eradicate the complaint, and never leave those distressing secondary symptoms (that harass the patient for life) which usually arise after the use of those uncertain remedies, Mercury and Copaiba. I think you cannot fail to have a very large sale for them.

Believe me, your's very truly, Joshua Brookes.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Purifying Pills are sold in Boxes, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each, Wholesale & Retail, at Nannay and Co's General Patent Medicine Warehouse, 63, Oxford-street, the corner of Wells street, London, where the public can be supplied with every Patent Medicine of repute (with an allowance on taking it at one time) warranted genuine and fresh from the various makers. Orders, by post, containing a remittance, punctually attended to, and the change, if any, can be returned with the order.

Ashley Cooper's Botanical Pills are Sold by one or more respectable Venders in every Town in the Kingdom; and any Shop that has not got them will obtain them from London, without any extra charge. Country Shops can obtain them through any of the London Booksellers.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 33, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those not acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

SARSAPARILLA "Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, now using some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 89, Oxford-street, four doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by R. HICKSON, 1828, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Stuffs, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by R. Hickson, 276, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Co., Howis, Moral, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lassuby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,
St. James's Palace, June 26th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.
To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 968 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Hellroyd, G. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, O. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aoriste to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 19, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2*s.* 6*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, 10*s.* 6*d.*, and 21*s.* each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

BOUQUET du BOUDOIR.—E. PARKER the Manufacturer of this new and exquisite perfume, respectfully thanks the Nobility and Gentry for the high honour they have been pleased to confer on him by pronouncing it to be the most delightful for the handkerchief now in use. Its intrinsic merits have at length obtained for it the favourable notice of the leaders of the fashionable world; its fragrance, at once the most delicate and lasting; its purity and elegance, leaving no stain, entitles it to a decided preference, either in the boudoir, assembly, or drawing-room.—To be had of the Proprietor, at his establishment for foreign perfumery, No. 194, Piccadilly; of Messrs. Howell, James, and Co., Regent-street; and of every perfumer of consequence either in town or country, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 5*s.*, and 10*s.* per bottle. Ask for Parker's Bouquet du Boudoir.

CAUTION.—The celebrity of LOPRESTI'S SAUCES, FLAVOURING CONDIMENTS, &c., having caused several unprincipled tradesmen to foist on the public innumerable counterfeits, which, with many persons unacquainted with the excellence of the genuine, have had much influence in prejudicing their patronage, the Proprietor of these Condiments, to prevent a recurrence of the like scandalous equivocal dealings with an unsuspecting public, requests they will use none but the originals, and will peremptorily refuse every substitution of those rich combinations, whose delicate and piquante flavours cannot be imitated, but by that long culinary experience and thorough acquaintance with the exquisite palates of those judges, from whom he has for many years been honoured with a most distinguished patronage.—199, Piccadilly.

WRAY'S BALSAMIC FAMILY PILLS, the most safe and certain remedy ever discovered for affections of the kidneys, lumbago, weakness, irritation, and all diseases arising from local debility, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. These Pills having been employed in upwards of 1,200 cases in private practice, within three years prior to being advertised, and in so many thousand cases since, and in no one instance known to fail, are strongly recommended as a more efficacious remedy than balsam of copaiba, cubebs, or any other medicine in present use.

Prepared only by M. O. Wray, 118, Holborn-hill; and sold, wholesale, by Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Stradling, Gate of the Royal Exchange; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, 95, Farringdon-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; and by all respectable patent medicine venders in town and country, at 2*s.* 9*d.*, 4*s.* 6*d.*, and 11*s.* each box.—Advice given to persons calling between the hours of eleven and one in the morning, and seven and nine in the evening.

DELCROIX and CO., P[erfu]mers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, New Bond-street, beg leave respectfully to caution the Nob[ility] and Gentry against the many vile imitations of their celeb[rated] Perfumery, now offered for sale with a resemblance of labels, both in type and colour, particularly their much-adm[ired] ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS and VEGETA[BLE] EXTRACT; for selling imitations of which Messrs. EAST INDIA AGENCY OFFICE, No. 5, Leadenhall-street, London.—An Office or General Agency, for the purpose of granting assistance to Officers in the Honourable East India Company's Civil and Military Service, on their arrival from, or departure for, India, has been established at No. 5, Leadenhall-street. The business of this Office is for the present conducted by Mr. James Samuel Miles, who, under the general reduction of the Establishment at the East India House, retired from that service in June, 1836, and at Lady-day, 1837, Mr. Miles will be associated with Mr. Edward Dodwell, now the Chief Clerk in the Military Pay Department, who will then retire from the India House, agreeably to the plan of reduction consequent on the altered circumstances of the Company. Mr. Dodwell having been thirty years, and Mr. Miles twenty years, in the office of the Auditor of Indian Accounts of the Hon. Company's Home Establishment, and thus become conversant with the rules and regulations of the Military and Civil Services, their Office (under the firm of Dodwell and Miles) will be found an easy medium through which to obtain accurate information in regard to the succession to Off-Reckonings, Promotions, Removals, Posting to Regiments, Retirements, and all Casualties, &c., whether Civil or Military, also the Absentee Allowance, Civil Annuity Funds, Arrears of Pay, and Off-Reckonings due to Officers; and respecting their Passage, Outfit, &c. They will also supply the form of any Application to the Court of Directors.

Grenadier Guards.—Colonel Fox commands the detachment performing garrison duty at Woolwich. On the night of the 21st instant, two sentries, on duty on the Parade, opposite the Horse Guards, left their posts, taking with them their firelocks and accoutrements. On the relief coming round, at twelve o'clock, it was discovered, and they were immediately pursued and taken the following day in the neighbourhood of the Tower. They await a Court-Martial. A detachment left Windsor on Monday for Brighton, to take up the Palace duty, Col.
Lennart is the Commanding Officer. Albion Hotel is 2d Depot.—On the 25th Maj.-Gen. Sir J. Buchan inspected this depot, on which occasion he expressed the high gratification he felt at finding them in such a state of perfection. Their clean, steady, soldierlike appearance under arms, the precision with which they performed their various evolutions, the superior management of their interior economy, the regularity and neatness of their books, and lastly the excellent conduct of the men, the gallant General said, far surpassed anything he had ever witnessed, and which reflected the greatest credit upon their Commanding Officer Major Bagnall, their Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and men. He said he should not fail [illegible] his report accordingly. Three Sergeants and [illegible] will be sent to Dublin for dis-respective regiments. 3. One field officer, one half of the captains, and one half of the subaltern officers, are always to be present with their regiments. 4. No officer (except in the performance of duty, or for the purpose of joining his regiment,) is to quit the United Kingdom without having first received his Majesty's special permission. 5. The officers employed on the recruiting service, or upon the staff of the army, are not to be included in the number hereby fixed for the constant duty of the regiment. 6. The applications for leave for regt. paymasters, and medical officers, are to continue to be made in the mode prescribed in pages 72 and 73 of the general regulations of the army. 7. In cases of short leaves of absence being requested by adjutants, riding masters, quarter masters, or veterinary surgeons of regts., it will be necessary that a special report should be made as to the mode in which their duties are to be performed during their absence. 8. The proportion of N.C. officers, trumpeters, drummers, and private men, to whom furloughs may be granted, is not to exceed ten per troop or company. When regts. are not stationed in garrisons or military districts, the officers commanding are at liberty to use their discretion in granting the indulgence of leave of absence, under the foregoing restrictions, to the officers and men under their command. This order does not apply to the officers and men doing duty with the depot cos. of regts. on foreign service. His lordship expects that the General and other officers, who are empowered to grant leave of absence under the provisions of this Order, will strictly confine that grant to the proportion of officers herein specified. By command of the Right Hon. General Lord HILL, Com. in Chief, JOHN MACDONALD, Adj. Gen.

The Anti-Dryrot Company have received notice from the Ordance, Woolwich, that they intend using Kyan's patent process in all their works.

PORTSMOUTH, Oct. 29th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Beagle went to Woolwich on Friday night. The Right Hon. Lord Elphinstone and suite arrived on Sunday, and at twelve at night the Prince Regent yacht went out of harbour and to sea. She is to touch at the Cape of Good Hope, land his Lordship at Madras, and then proceed to Muscat. One of his Excellency's suite is deputed to present the yacht to the Imaum. The Pluto was found unfit to convey the Marines and Moving Artillery to Spain, and has been sent to Woolwich to be broken up or sold. Rhadamanthus came in on Saturday from Plymouth, having conveyed the detachment of 250 Marines for the Tagus to that port. Lieut. Duffill, his officers and crew, were turned over to her; and the Marines in charge of Lieut. Danvers, R.M., embarked on Monday, and she went away about 12 o'clock. Rapid, Lieutenant the Honourable D. Kinnaird Commander, came from Chatham on Wednesday, and sailed last evening for Plymouth: she is afterwards to go to the Mediterranean. North Star was paid off on Thursday. Athol t.-s. is in dock. Ganges is dismasted in the basin, and is to be followed by St. Vincent, for the same purpose. It is intended the demonstration ships shall only have the interior fittings ready, and Illustrious and Benbow will be prepared accordingly. The masts and rigging of these ships will thus be preserved from decay. Sch. Castlereagh arrived on Wednesday from St. Sebastian, with 74 invalid, wounded, and unserviceable men of the Legion, under charge of Lieut.-Col. M'Calle and Surgeon Jenner. She quitted on the 17th inst., and has not any news. The men have been moved to the Sheerness hulk. The Samarang was commissioned this day by Capt. W. Broughton (1831). Ships in port—Norfolk convict ship at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Conway, Samarang, Barrosa tr., Athol tr.-s., Emerald yacht—in harbour.

WOOLWICH DOCKYARD, Oct. 28.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Blazer st.-v. has been brought down to Woolwich from the City Canal, where she has been to get new boilers, and has shipped a new funnel. The Pamelia ..., Lieut. Davison, arrived on Tuesday, and hauled along... ...de the Salamis hulk, as also the Echo, Lieut. W. V. "Admiralty, 3d Oct.—Sir, I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to acquaint you that Cape Florida or Key Biscaye light-house was burnt down on the night of the 24th July last, by the Indians, and their Lordships desire me to request that you will give this occurrence publicity.—I am, Sir, your very obedient servant, JOHN BARROW."

The Rena sailed from Gibraltar on the 15th, after refitting there for the coast of Africa.

Mr. Troughton, Master, invalided from the Orestes, came home from Firefly steamer.

The Beatrice, hatch, Lieut. Com. G. G. M'Donald (1824), arrived at Callao from Panama June 7th.

The Sterling transport has sailed this week from Deptford.

The following vessels are fitting for sea at Deptford: Prince Regent and Catherine Forbes troopships, Hebe freight brig for Ascension, Frances Charlotte and Margaret convict ships for New South Wales.

Additional officers and men are to be added to the coast guard service, Isle of Wight, to prevent smuggling this winter.

The Hare lugger, with one man and 166 tubs of brandy and gin, was recently taken off Sheerness Garrison Point, by that coast-guard boat, under Lieut. Pulis, and the man [illegible] to prison. She had, in a strong easterly gale, [illegible] vigilance of the numerous cruisers and boats on [illegible] ruining her cargo.

The [illegible] Expedition.—The expedition reached Buenos Ayres, [illegible] all well, with the exception of its sailor, [illegible], who continued still to be an invalid. They had various adventures with the Arabs during their descent from Anes; and some obstructions were found in the river itself, which were surmounted without much difficulty.

Sir Charles Paget will shift his flag to the Inconstant fr., and with that ship, and the Pique and Pantaloon, return to Portsmouth, after the service he is now employed on has been performed. The Vanguard and Bellerophon will finally proceed to the Mediterranean, previous to which it is probable the squadron will make a demonstration on the coast of Spain, and reinforce the garrison of Bilboa if necessary. It is said that the Pembroke and Hercules will part company off the Tagus, and join Rear-Admiral Gage at Lisbon.

By the death of Admiral Lord De Saumarez, his pay, as General of Marines, amounting to 1,700*l.* a year, is saved to the country, as that appointment is abolished. Lord De Saumarez also had a pension of 1,200*l.* a year, which is likewise saved, as well as his half-pay of 766*l.* 10*s.* per annum, making altogether a saving of upwards of 3,600*l.* per annum by the demise of this gallant officer, who is reported to have died possessed of 300,000*l.*, 100,000*l.* of which he has left to maintain the title.

The Ranger packet, from Jamaica, brings accounts that the Belvidera, 46, Capt. Strong, arrived at that island from Barbadoes, having on board Major-Gen. Sir L. Smith, on 27th Aug. The General was sworn into office as Lieut.-Governor of the Island, and Commander of the Forces, on the 30th; and the Belvidera quitted on the 2nd of September, with the late Governor, the Marquis of Sligo, on board, for the Havannah and New York, his Lordship's family being in the United States; whether the Belvidera will come to England was not known. Major-Gen. Sir Amos Norcott, the second in command at Jamaica, also returns to England. The Pincher schooner, Lieut. Byng, captured on the 12th July, the Spanish schooner slaver Precioso, from Rio Pongo, bound to Cuba, having on board 300 slaves; she chased her from Cape Ginger, where she was observed on the 9th, to Cay Sal, off Matanza, and made prize of her on the 12th, at 2. 50. a.m. The Florida Indians had burnt down the Light-house on Cape Florida, (Biscayne). Outward-bound ships should notice this, though in a great measure the mischief is compensated by the display of two New Lights in the Bahamas. The Racer, 16, had arrived from Newfoundland on 2nd Sept.; the Skipjack schooner from Chagres on 6th Sept.; and the Pincher schooner on 27th Aug. from a cruise. The Meteor st. sailed for St. Thomas's, and the Cruiser, 10, for Carthagena, on 24th Aug.; the Pickle sch. on 6th Sept. for Bermuda: The Carron st. arrived at Barbadoes on 28th Aug., in 23 days from Falmouth, and subsequently reached Jamaica on the 4th of September.

The Rodney, Capt. Hyde Parker, was at Barcelona on 27th Aug., waiting instructions from England. The Tyne, Capt. Lord Ingestrie, had recently conveyed Gen. Dodgin, second in command of the Portuguese Legion, to Vinares, to join the army marching towards Tortosa; this ship has also taken General Manuel Bretoe to Port Vendre (France). The General, not agreeing to the Constitution proclaimed at Tortosa, was fired at three times by his own men, and compelled to fly to Villacarlow, where he found the Tyne, and embarked on board her, accompanied by his daughter and Military Secretary. The Tyne was to leave Barcelona on the evening of 27th Aug., with invalids, &c. from the squadron, for Gibraltar. She lost a seaman, John Sinclair, from falling from the mizzen top-sail yard, at sea, on 24th Aug. The Childers was at Barcelona; the Clio had gone to Mahon, thence to proceed to Malaga; the Orestes was at Carthagena; the Jaseur at Gibraltar. Two frigates from Sir Josias Rowley's squadron were looked for at Barcelona, to assist in constituting a court-martial to try a marine of the Rodney, for knocking a serjeant down one of the hatchways, which caused the latter's death.

Lieut. Thompson, Agent of the Katherine Stewart Forbes tr., having received a severe hurt in the gale of the 9th ult., when returning from Halifax, was obliged to apply to quit the ship, and their Lordships were pleased to appoint Lieut. John Duncan to supersede him.

The Prince Regent yt., intended as a present from his Majesty to the Imaum of Muscat, arrived at Portsmouth on the 20th, from the River, to embark Lord Elphinstone for Bombay, of which Presidency his Lordship is appointed Governor. The yacht went into harbour, and has since been taken into dock, to have a leak stopped, which was effected in one tide. Lord Elphinstone embarked on the [illegible], and proceeded on his voyage. She is splendidly fitted, partly in the oriental taste, a point upon which long residents in India were consulted. Among the gorgeous furniture there is a piano-forte. The more superb fittings will remain covered over to prevent their being soiled before the yacht's arrival in India.

By the Firefly st., Lieut. Pearce, we have letters from the Mediterranean squadron, dated Vourla Bay, 29th Sept., and Malta papers up to the 6th Oct. The Medea had arrived there the previous day from the Admiral, leaving him in the Caledonia, with Thunderer, Edinburgh, Canopus, Revenge, and Asia (she joined on the 12th Sept.); Nautilus packet and Hind tender. The squadron had completed their winter cruising, and were to touch at Zante, and to return to Malta in a few days. Vernon had been sent to Marseilles, to take on board the Commissioners ordered from England to Malta, to inquire into some complaints which the inhabitants had forwarded home, and convey them to the island. Favourite and Magpie surveying vessels were at Malta; Rarham at Tripoli; Portland, at Athens, had not gained any tidings of the fate of her Purser; Volage at Constantinople; Sapphire at Corfu; Tribune at Smyrna. Capt. R. Parker was senior Officer on the South Coast of Spain, with Rodney, Tyne, Orestes, Childers, Clio, and Jaseur, under his orders. Sir J. Rowley expected to remain at Malta, until relieved in the command. The Manchester steamer brought letters from the Rodney and Tyne, dated 19th instant. Tyne had been to Gibraltar, but, from the near approach of General Gomez and his army to Malaga, having levied contributions in the neighbourhood, Tyne had returned to that port to afford protection to the British interests. Jaseur was at Gibraltar, the other three men-of-war and brigs were cruising along the coast.

East India Intelligence.

THE Madras Courier announces that Capt. Fitzgibbon, of the 5th Light Cavalry, had been ordered to Madras to stand his trial before a General Court-Martial. By the Madras general orders of the 25th ult., it appears that Capt. Fitzgibbon preferred the following charge against Gunner Lloyd Henry Leach, of the Second Battalion of Artillery, viz.—"Having before a Court of Inquiry, of which Col. Mildmay Fane, of H.M. 54th Foot, was President, and which assembled at Trichinopoly on Wednesday, the 3d of February, 1836, falsely accused me (Capt. Fitzgibbon) of conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman." Gunner Leach was tried by a General Court-Martial and most fully acquitted, the charge being voted "unfounded, unwarranted, and malicious." This case of Capt. Fitzgibbon's assumes a graver aspect, both with regard to the original accusation, and this attempt to crush the accuser.—Military Gazette, May 21.

The Firefly steamer, which arrived at Falmouth from Malta, 26th Oct., has brought the overland despatch from Bombay of the date 15th July, and intelligence from Bengal to the 20th June. The accounts received contain no news of political importance. We have not received our file of papers by this conveyance, which prevents us giving the list of appointments, but hope to be able to present them to our readers next week.

The Court of Directors have come to the resolution of making a considerable addition to the Ecclesiastical Establishment in India; and that, in future, all appointments will be made as Assistant-Chaplains, with a retiring pension after 18 years, including three years' furlough, except when compelled by ill-health to resign the service.

A Calcutta Paper, received by despatch, states that the Chamber of Commerce had solicited the Government to allow grain, raw cotton, and all other gruff goods, to be shipped from the merchants' godowns without passing through the custom-house, and that this had been conceded, but at present with a limitation to rice and other grain and pulse, coals dunnage, cotton, and also sugar, when shipped in British vessels for any British possession. The indigo crop is at present in a very precarious state, the plant being generally very small, and the river rising very rapidly.

By private letters from Calcutta, we learn that a meeting was held on the 18th June at the Town-hall of Calcutta, to determine upon the measures that should be adopted to prevent the final success of an act passed by the Supreme Government depriving British-born subjects of the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Judicature, and rendering them amenable to the native courts. The object of Government in passing the act was to equalise the Indian laws; but as this equalisation has been considered to have the effect of debasing the European to the level of the Native, instead of raising the Native to an equality with the European, it has been earnestly resisted. There were about six hundred persons at the meeting. Mr. Turton, the barrister, proposed the following resolution:—"That in consequence of the passing of Act No. 11, the Government has declared an intention of abolishing all appeal to the only Courts of Justice in India independent of the executive Government, whereby the rights and property of British subjects resident in the interior are rendered insecure, and the application of British skill and capital to the improvement of the resources of India will be checked; and it is therefore expedient to memorialise the Court of Directors and the Board of Controul to repeal or disallow this act, and that it be referred to a Committee to prepare this memorial." The resolution was seconded by Mr. Dwarkanauth Tagore, the principal native merchant in Calcutta, who gave a description of the state of the Company's Courts in the interior, eulogised the British laws as administered by the Supreme Court, and dwelt on the great obligation the natives of India were under to intelligent Englishmen for all the liberty they enjoyed, and how much they were bound to co-operate in preserving to them their laws. Another resolution was proposed, which recommended an appeal to Parliament, and both were carried with loud acclamations. It is intended by the British inhabitants of Calcutta to depute Mr. Turton, the barrister, to England, with a salary of 2000*l.* per annum, to carry the petition before Parliament, and otherwise to employ his talents in furthering the wishes of his constituents. Mr. J. B. Macaulay is understood to be the author of the act complained of. The expense to which the parties are willing to submit to attain their object, is a proof at least of their sincerity.

Burmese Prize Money.—A paragraph having appeared in a previous number, stating that the Burmese prize-money is in course of payment, we have made inquiry upon the subject, and have ascertained that the distribution has commenced in India, but that some months must elapse before the necessary information can be received to enable the Court of Directors of the East India Company to pay the shares in this country.

A plan had been submitted to the Governor-General for establishing a wet-dock in the very heart of Calcutta; but though the advantages were fully acknowledged, it was feared the sum required would be too large to raise by subscription. A deputation of merchants had waited on the Governor-General on the subject of the new tariff, the result of which was said to be, that the export duty on sugar and cotton would be relinquished.

At a meeting of the principal Merchants and Agents in Calcutta, interested in the uniformity of currency, on the 19th May, the following resolutions were carried:—1st. That it was most desirable, for the general convenience of commerce, to establish one currency, and one denomination of weights and measures, throughout the Bengal Presidency. 2d, That the new, or Company's rupee, of which 106*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* are equal to sicca rupees 100, be universally adopted in all commercial dealings. 3d, That the Indian maund, or mun, of 40 seers of 80 tolas, equal to 82⅔ lbs. avoirdupois weight, being the weight established by Government, and approximating so nearly to the present Calcutta Bazaar maund, be the standard employed in all transactions. 4th. That the imperial gallon be used as the standard of liquid measure. 5th. That the English yard be substituted in long measure for the Indian ungle hut, and other Indian long measures. That all goods be bought and sold for cash. That it being the intention of Government to fix the par exchange at 2*s.* British currency per Company's rupee, the meeting adopt this rate to be the commercial par of Company's rupees. That all persons interested do affix their names to these resolutions, and they lay on the table of the Exchange Rooms for that purpose 15 days.

The following letter from the Commander-in-Chief to Brigadier Bowen accounts for the claim of Col. Faithful to a Brigade command being refused:—

"In determining who is the proper officer to nominate to the command of a vacant brigade, the interests of the Government and the Army are the paramount considerations, and he cannot persuade himself that it ever could be the intention of the Hon. Court of Directors to dictate, that the interests of any individual officer, or class of officers, should supersede the good of the Army. He considers that it is necessary for that good that the officer placed at the head of a Brigade should know his duties as a Regimental Officer, and should be capable of instructing the Brigade under his command in all points of their duties, according to the regulations of the Army, and that he should not merely be capable of passing them by rote through a few manœuvres, but that he should be a competent judge of the manner in which the Commanding Officers under him discharge their duties, and be equal to instructing them should they require instruction. He has the highest respect for the officers of Artillery, and he well knows their many high qualities; but unfortunately he doubts their general attainments in these points, and, therefore, he deems them unfit in ordinary cases to receive such commands as Col. Faithful covets. If Col. Faithful is an exception to this, and is master of the military qualifications alluded to, then the Commander-in-Chief will be sorry to have passed him over, and will remedy the injury on the earliest opportunity; and he offers to Col. Faithful his permission to come to head-quarters forthwith, and he will place a Brigade, at Barrackpore, in his hands, to enable him to show his fitness for such a command under his own eye, or he will do the same thing on the first favourable opportunity which may present itself when he goes to the upper provinces.

"Entertaining the opinions which he has thus developed, Col. Faithful will not be surprised that the Commander-in-Chief has passed him over; and His Excellency desires to add, that so long as an appointment to a military command depends on his recommendation, fitness for that command on the part of the officer coveting it will be his first consideration, and the personal interests of an individual quite secondary; and he will continue to consider the conduct which is the result of such views to be a proper discharge of his duties to the Government and the Army, until he is otherwise instructed."

At Vellore, on the 14th May, Lieut. Campbell and Ensign Wood, 9th Madras Native Infantry, were proceeding in a buggy along the principal road from the cantonment to the barracks, when part of the harness broke, and, the horse setting off at full speed, both the officers were thrown out. Ensign W. escaped without any material injury; but Lieut. C. fell forward, so as to be in front of the wheel, which passed over his head, and fractured his skull in so dreadful a manner that he expired on the following day.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Ensign Edward Selloo, 4th Madras Native Infantry, was charged by Lieut.-Colonel John Green, commanding same regiment, with scandalous and infamous behaviour, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Bangalore, 21st April, 1836, without provocation, made use of grossly abusive and highly insulting language towards Lieuts. H. W. Wood and H. Colbeck, both of the same regiment, and in having at the same time and place presented a loaded pistol at Lieut. Wood with intent to shoot him. Upon both of which charges the Court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to be discharged the service.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—As the evidence on the trial affords a strong presumption that Ensign Selloo was insane at the time when he committed the offence with which he was charged, I consider him to have been entitled to an acquittal on these grounds, and remit the sentence accordingly.

(Signed) R. W. O'CALLAGHAN,
Lieut.-Gen. and Com.-in-Chief.

Ensign Selloo has been since transferred to the Madras Pension Establishment.

Affair of Honour.—Yesterday a hostile meeting took place on Wormwood Scrubbs, between Ralph Fergusson, Esq., of Holloway, and Martin [illegible], Esq., of Sloane-street. After the first exchange of shots the seconds attempted a reconciliation. At the second fire Mr. Fergusson received a slight wound in his arm, and Mr. S. a ball in his groin. The quarrel arose from an insult offered by Mr. Simpson to Mr. Fergusson's sister, at Drury-lane Theatre.

Longevity in the Peerage.—Baron Ashdown completed his 81st year on the 3d ult.; Gen. Earl Cathcart, his 81st, the 17th ult.; Gen. Earl Cavan, 75d year, the 10th ult.; the Duke of Montrose, his 63d year, the 8th ult.; the Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, his 72d year, the 14th ult.; Baron Stawdale, his 74th year, the 24th ult.; Baron Arden, his 80th year, the 1st inst.; Viscount Dungannon, his 75d year, the 2d inst.

SKETCH OF THE WAR AND POLITICAL ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN UPPER AND LOWER PERU, SINCE JULY, 1836.

BY AN OLD SOLDIER.

The war and revolution I am going to describe have, unlike almost every military revolution, been attended with the most beneficial effects for the countries which they assailed, as having promoted a division of the two provinces of Upper and Lower Peru, and the establishment of institutions which otherwise would not have taken place, and which promise great future prosperity. Those who have directed their attention to the affairs of these two republics of BOLIVIA and PERU, must be aware that the political division of the two territories in question was unnatural, and consequently obstructive of commercial prosperity, and even of tranquillity for both countries. Bolivia, deprived of the four southern provinces of Peru, was without means of egress for her productions; whilst importation was almost prohibited, on account of heavy duties imposed by the government of Peru. On the other hand, the great extent of this republic, under one single government, rendered it a dangerous neighbour to Bolivia; as it was easy, both by incursions on her territories and other means, to affect her internal quiet, and interrupt her prosperity. A sad example of this was seen in the time of Gamarra's administration, when, himself, at the head of an army, invaded Bolivia, and caused a material disturbance in the republic; upon which occasion General Santa Cruz, then in Chili, was called to take the reins of government and restore the country to order. This he accomplished with that decision and firmness which form the most prominent features of his character; and since then six years have elapsed, during which Bolivia, under his administration, has enjoyed the most perfect quiet.

With respect to Peru, the great extent of her territory, and the power which the government derived from it, far from being beneficial to the republic, had ever proved a source of calamity; because it facilitated to ambitious and revolutionary men, the accomplishment of their views, and the promotion of those civil contests which for a long period have distracted that country. Santa Cruz failed not to perceive the evils which resulted to both republics from that injudicious division of territory. The want of a sea-port for his trade was felt every day; but he also perceived, and was well aware of this truth, that peace is the seed of prosperity. Upon this principle Santa Cruz avoided any contest of arms, and devoted himself to the improvement of his republic, to the creation of institutions which were wanting, to the exercise of arts and sciences, and, in fact, to the development of every element of modern civilization; the rapid progress of which furnishes another proof that the improvement of nations depends not so much on the means of opulence which they may possess, as on having at the head of their affairs a man of genius, integrity, and patriotism.

During the internal convulsions that agitated Peru in the latter years of Gamarra's administration, the President of Bolivia was called upon from almost every quarter of Peru to interfere; every friend of order in that distracted country turned his attentions to the Chief, under whose administration the [illegible] republic enjoyed the blessings of [illegible], but he constantly refused to take any part in [illegible], and persisted in his plan of neutrality [illegible] an alteration to the utmost [illegible] both of the republic and of Peru presented itself, and rendered the enterprise both necessary and worthy the deviation from the pacific system.

When, in 1838, Orbegoso succeeded Gamarra in the administration of Peru, that [illegible] convulsed by a conspiracy, which the latter [illegible] to put down the usurpation. He failed in his scheme, and was [illegible] Bolivia, where, according to [illegible] he was, in the [illegible] Santa Cruz. Salaverry [illegible] in his resolutions, and [illegible] of effecting them—one of these [illegible] he was a partisan of Gamarra, and [illegible] secretly with him in his exile, [illegible] conspiracy against the two Presidents, Orbegoso and Santa Cruz. [illegible] with which he [illegible] of the sea [illegible] sidemble army [illegible] Santa Cruz, [illegible] another army, [illegible] of Bolivia. [illegible] quitted Lima and [illegible] himself with [illegible] place Salaverry [illegible] was proposed [illegible] Peru. In these [illegible] Cruz [illegible]

[illegible] elected. Santa Cruz knew that he could reckon on the vote of every honest Peruvian, and he acceded to the wishes of Orbegoso. A treaty was then negotiated between these two Chiefs, the principal articles of which were, the division of Peru into two states, and their confederation with Bolivia. This measure, however, was to be submitted to the consideration of two assemblies, which were to be convoked, one in the south, another in the north of Peru. This treaty having been terminated, Santa Cruz set off for Peru in the beginning of June, 1835, at the head of the best army that has ever been seen in South America. His troops had been for a long time the admiration of the neighbouring republics on account of their discipline and the excellent order in which they were kept. On the 16th of June he passed the river Desaguadero, which rises in the celebrated Titicaca, lake that divides the two countries, and his first campaign was directed against Gamarra. The two armies met at Yanacocha, in the south of Cuzco. In a single battle Gamarra's troops were routed and himself put to flight, and was indebted for his escape to the speed of his horse, and to his having quitted the field of battle in good time. The details of this action reflect great credit on Santa Cruz, who commanded in chief, for his excellent tactics and gallantry; but they have already been published in Europe. Salaverry, to whom the defeat of Gamarra was a deadly blow, perceiving the difficulty of his position, embarked with all his troops, and made a descent in the valley of Ica—(S. lat., 14 deg. 5 min.)—whence crossing the mountains, he arrived on the banks of the river Pampas, in Ayacucho, or Huamanga; but there finding that Santa Cruz was waiting to give him battle, and fearing the encounter, he made a precipitate retreat, in which he lost his rear guard. Returning upon his steps, he re-embarked, and set sail for Arequipa: the Bolivian army followed him by land, effecting a march of 300 leagues across the most rugged and cold mountains of that continent, and suffering under the greatest privations. At length the two armies met, and, after various serious engagements, the battle of Socabaya, or Monte de Luna, near Arequipa, fought on the 7th of February, 1836, put an end to the ambition of Salaverry, and to military despotism in Peru. Salaverry took to flight, but was pursued, overtaken, and shot in the square of Arequipa, with his principal followers: his troops either perished or were made prisoners; his colours, and every thing else belonging to him and to his army, fell into the hands of Santa Cruz. The troops which followed Orbegoso took the fortresses of Callao, where Salaverry had left garrisons; and the rest, seeing the total destruction of their party, yielded without resistance to the legal government.

Thus were extinguished the elements of usurpation in that republic; and in the short period of about eight months, since Santa Cruz took arms against the conspirators, the great work of pacification was accomplished.

It remained now to put the treaty into execution. The Assembly of the South met at Sicuani, and having discussed the point in question with more dignity than is generally observed in the Legislative Assemblies of South America, voted that the new State should be composed of four departments, viz., Cuzco, Puno, Arequipa, and Ayacucho, and that it should be called "South Peruvian State," and federated to Bolivia. This same Assembly conferred on Santa Cruz the executive power of this new State, under the title of Protector, and acquainted the Government of the North with their proceedings, which were all approved of, and the Assembly of the North were supposed to meet at Huaura on the 15th July. At the same time the Government of the North invited Santa Cruz to proceed to Lima, where his presence and administrative talents were of great use in accomplishing the great regeneration of the country.

This is a brief narrative of events which I have witnessed, and which have rooted out from Peru the weeds of Spanish misrule. It will be the task of the historian to fill his page with the minute details of many interesting events which took place during the contest, many of which are [illegible] of the most providential escape as [illegible] of the [illegible] perseverance, and military skill of the [illegible] Santa Cruz, and his brave [illegible]

The circumstances [illegible] are in this part of the world very different. [illegible] for the [illegible] of [illegible] are [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NOTICE.

NAVAL AND MILITARY OFFICERS, AND THE PUBLIC IN GENERAL, are respectfully informed that Mr. COLBURN, the Proprietor of the UNITED SERVICE JOURNAL, has actively recommenced business as a PUBLISHER, at

No. 13, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET.

All MANUSCRIPTS, NARRATIVES of VOYAGES, TRAVELS, &c., therefore, intended for Publication by him, are in future requested to be forwarded to the above address.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We must decline exchanging with Newspaper Proprietors who do not regularly send their papers in return. This particularly applies to the Liverpool Telegraph and Maidstone Gazette. The Telegraph of the 12th only reached us on Wednesday last.—We shall be glad to hear further from "R. E."—We consider the arrangement "P." refers to, and the constant repetition of Ships in Ordinary, when brought forward for repairs or commissioning, would be absurd under the head of "H. M. Ships in Commission." We endeavour to make that portion as concise as possible, placing as much as we can under "Naval Intelligence;" but still repetitions will occur. The adoption of "P.'s" suggestion would take up space better applied to other matters.—We doubt the truth of the statement to which "Coriander" refers! he should address himself to the quarter he alludes to: we never meddle with such matters.—"A Marine Officer" is right as to the party he names.—"S. S." can have the interview he requests, by calling at the Office between 11 and 4 on Thursday.—We cannot be responsible for the neglect of newsmen; but any of our contributors who do not receive the paper regularly should write to us.—We shall be glad to hear further from so able a Correspondent as "X. M. P."—We will attend to "P. F. T."—"Common Sense," "A Friend to Naval Merit," "Sentry," and several other friends next week:—An interesting sketch of the 1st West India Regiment is unavoidably postponed till next week.—We are not at liberty to answer the question of "X. O." He must be aware that, for obvious reasons, the destination of a ship is not always truly reported, as it has been found that seamen, in entering, prefer certain stations.

Although an additional half-sheet is given with the present number, we still find ourselves greatly in arrear with our numerous correspondents; many of whose favours are in type. Mr. Chatfield's letter, and our commentary thereon, will certainly appear next week.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1836.

WE have this day completed a rapid survey of the present actual position of the Naval force of Russia; and a perusal of the detail in our last and present week's Journal must give rise to serious reflections.

Although a fleet equipped after such a manner could effect little far from home, particularly if it should be encountered by an enemy squadron manned with seamen; yet it will be admitted that such an imposing force, created, as it were, within these few years in our immediate neighbourhood, should not be altogether viewed with indifference; for, great as our maritime resources are, if they be not applied, or placed in a condition to be made available promptly and effectively, we might just as well be without them.

The position which this country has attained cannot be better described than in the words of the First Lord of the Admiralty, in his late eloquent address at Hawick, when describing the policy of the Government of which he forms so prominant a member:—

"Abroad, the preservation of peace, a jealous assertion of the rights and interests of this great empire in every part of the globe; at home, the advancement of civil and religious liberty, a just regard for the honest wishes of the people in the reform of abuses by which they felt themselves aggrieved, deep reverence for the Constitution, which they were resolved to maintain inviolate, rigid economy in the public expenditure, the encouragement of commerce, and an anxious care for every branch of our national industry. Look abroad, then, and you will find the pacific policy of England not confined to her own shores, but extending its interests to remote nations, and gratefully acknowledged by those powerful States who have sought our mediation to compose their differences. At home, what depended upon itself the Government has achieved. Taxation has been reduced, the revenue has improved, commerce and industry have flourished, and they are manifest in every class of society—the surest indications of prosperity."

Now let any reasonable man, whose mind is not totally perverted by prejudice or party, contemplate this picture (for it is true), and also the general prosperity which pervades all classes and interests throughout this happy land at the present moment, and say, would it not be madness to risk the interruption of such a state of things?

From domestic broils the good sense of the people will, in a great measure, preserve us; but the wisdom of our rulers is not always enabled to steer clear of foreign strife, for our interests are so intimately connected and mixed up with those of other States, that scarcely a move can be made without a necessity for our interference directly or indirectly.

The best and surest means to preserve peace is to be prepared for war, and to maintain our Navy particularly in such force as to convince the world that we are able and ready on the instant to punish any aggression or insult to our flag; now, when we view the present state of the Navies of France, Russia, and America,—to say nothing of the minor ones of Holland, Denmark, and Sweden,—and consider that it is the interest of all these States to break down that power which has shorn them of their colonies, and monopolises the share of commerce and manufactures which they would otherwise possess, it becomes not only a matter of prudence, but self-preservation for us to uphold an extensive Navy. It may be said, that such a course will induce foreign nations to do the same, and that when they find Great Britain in a hostile attitude, with a large force equipped, and in the position of a boxer, stript, and with his arms in guard, as if prepared for fight, they think it necessary for their own security to be prepared also. Now we have tried the experiment of disarming, either with a view of inducing rival nations to follow the same plan, or under the more baneful policy of an ill-judged economy,—and we have seen the British Navy reduced to such an extent that, we hesitate not to say, has perilled the best interests of the country. But so far from such a course having any effect upon the proceedings of our neighbours; they have never ceased to increase and organise their Naval resources, to extend their fleets, and to foster the nurseries that produced their seamen; until America has grown into a maritime importance little inferior to our own, and France, from a state of absolute prostration, is now again a powerful rival.

We will appeal to every well-wisher of his country, who considers affairs seriously, whether this policy on our side should be continued? Of what avail is all our skill and industry, our favoured position, our internal resources, our coals, minerals, and all the materials for manufacture, for consumption or supply, which Providence has showered upon this happy land in boundless profusion? How long can we reckon upon the application or enjoyment of these if we neglect the very means which serve to secure us the possession. We have shown that the Navy of Russia, contemptible as it might be considered in efficiency, more than doubles in actual force any Fleet which we could produce, under a considerable time; and the Navy of France nearly equals our own in extent, whilst the Americans have still greater maritime resources, and, however they might wish to avoid being parties in an European quarrel, they would surely be drawn into such for the protection of their flag.

We have witnessed the time, and it may come again, when these and other nations have all combined against us. That they failed in effecting our destruction was owing to the policy which maintained our Navy to its greatest extent, and by such policy we passed through the ordeal triumphant.

We hesitate not to say that, considering the extent and the distance of our various Colonies, the necessity for suppressing piracy and the Slave trade, and supporting the honour of our flag in all parts of the world, but more particularly for placing ourselves at ease and security at home, the present amount of ships in commission ought to be doubled. There should be an effective squadron of ten or a dozen ships of the line always available, independent of those on distant stations, and every ship commissioned should be effective for war, and have a full war complement. Such an attitude would do more to preserve the peace of Europe, and of the world, than any policy which the most skilful statesman could adopt; and we are certain that so correct is our impression of the feeling of the country in this respect, that the funds required for any reasonable increase of the Navy, which Ministers might propose would be cheerfully voted by a British Parliament. An increase of the Navy estimates of little more than a quarter of a million in the present year by added 5,000 men to our effective force; it follows that a million would give us an increase of 20,000 men. Can any one imagine, that when the revenue of the country presents such a prosperous aspect; when we count the progressive increase not in thousands or tens of thousands, but in millions, the House of Commons would refuse the sum to effect the incalculable good which would result from giving employment to our officers, seamen, and shipwrights, thereby securing the wanted skill, and placing the right arm of our strength upon an efficient basis. Such a policy would, in fact, by increasing the security of our possessions, and also preserving the blessings of peace, give such a buoyant vitality to trade, that those who view, with astonishment its present unexampled state can hardly contemplate.

THE indifference which formerly existed to matters connected with India has given place to an eager anxiety to ascertain information regarding it. The Articles which have appeared in this publication since last April, on the state of the Army in India generally, but more particularly on that portion of it styled His Majesty's, we rejoice to learn have created an interest and sympathy which a few years ago we should have despaired of arousing. The military and civil community now alike await with anxiety the arrangements by which an early relief may be afforded to 20,000 of their fellow subjects from that pestilential climate. The public are deeply interested in the decision of the Horse Guards. Few families are there in this country who have not members serving in the Army, and who view with dread the continuance of a system which leaves a regiment only four years at home out of forty-five, ex. gr. the 17th Foot! Rejoice now states that the 80th regiment, which only returned from India in 1833, is to be sent there again, viz [illegible] credit, because we have seen an instance in the 17th regiment of similar bad arrangement.

The present state of the regiments in India is truly pitiable. There are still two regiments of Cavalry and four of Infantry, which have been abroad since 1819, and of these only one, the 20th, is ordered home. This regiment even will not reach England before next year. What hope than can we have that the 11th and 13th Light Dragoons, the 16th, 45th, and 54th regiments of Infantry, shall be all relieved before 1840 at the soonest; yet these corps all embarked in 1819 from their native land. We indulged the vain hope, as it has since proved, that the 18th, 33rd, 35th, and 82d regiments, might have been made available for the relief of the regiments in India, either by proceeding direct or relieving at other Colonies corps which might go on to India. It now seems that the regiments in the Mediterranean, Mauritius, and Ceylon, which have four out of their ten companies at home, and whose six companies serve abroad only ten years, have a prior claim to be relieved to those regiments in India which have all their effectives in nine companies abroad, and which are doomed to serve twenty years in the debilitating and deadly climates of Hindoostan. We see this in such a clear light, that we cannot refrain from strongly expressing our conviction, that the regiments in India and their fair claims to an earlier relief have been overlooked in the late arrangements. We have endeavoured to draw the attention of the military authorities to a consideration of the subject, and if our advocacy has not been successful, we can honestly say, that we have done our best: we have abstained from attributing to men in power the intention of acting unjustly. We have stated our belief that the Army in India is almost looked upon as belonging to the Honourable Company, and that its turn of relief is invariably set aside to be effected of necessity by the proceeding of one regiment in every sixteen or eighteen months from New South Wales. The Army of His Majesty in India feels most acutely this neglect. No officer of talent or reputation, or even moderate means, will accept service in a country to which he must proceed for twenty years. Let but the service in India be limited to twelve, or fifteen years even, and we doubt not that officers will be found of a superior order, and recruits of a better description, to fill our ranks.

No one can for a moment deny that the dress of the army has been of late years considerably improved, and, although it is a subject which at first sight appears to be of trifling moment, we think experience has shown that it merits attention; first, because in service much of the soldiers comfort and power of enduring fatigue depends upon it; and, second, because in peace the smart appearance of a corps does much towards persuading young men of a good description to enlist in it. Since the commencement of the Peninsular War, powder, pigtails, gaiters, and other useless and cumbersome ornaments have been discontinued, and utility has been considered the chief object to be attained; but we cannot help thinking that both utility and the comfort of the soldier were lost sight of when the present shako was invented. We have never heard a difference of opinion as to the fact of its being the most uncomfortable, not to say painful, head-dress which a man can wear. In hot weather it becomes almost an oven, and retains its heat for an immense time; in rainy weather it literally conducts the rain down the back of the neck, and thus enables it to wet a man to the shirt ere his great coat has been damped; while at all times it is so heavy that, on a march, the first thing a soldier thinks of relieving himself from is his shako; added to which, it is extremely difficult even for an officer to get a shako made to fit him comfortably. To the officer, however, it is a matter of but little moment, as he wears his forage cap on a march, and but rarely puts on a shako except on a field day, when he seldom fails to complain loudly of its inconvenience. We know of no head-dress so convenient or so handsome as that which the 7th Hussars used to wear a few years back, and which it is said the Horse Artillery are shortly to be supplied with. Should this, however, be objected to, a small Hungarian boar-skin cap, about half the size of those now worn by Grenadiers, would be much lighter and more convenient than the shako, and would not catch the wind like the present Grenadier cap, which, with all its disadvantages is, even now, much preferable, in both respects, to the shako. Neither the Grenadier cap nor the shako are, however, at all adapted to hot climates; nor, indeed, could we ever discover the reason why regiments stationed in those climates should ever be required to wear either the one or the other; a forage cap being the only head-dress which can be worn with any tolerable degree of comfort or advantage to the soldier.

But as our object is rather to point out the inconvenience of the shako than to suggest any substitute we shall here leave the subject, well satisfied if we can direct attention to it.

With regard to the clothing and appointments of the line, we should say that it would be difficult to invent a more serviceable and, at the same time, soldier-like and handsome dress than that worn by some of the crack regiments; and we have often wondered why the same good taste has not been displayed in the dress of the whole army. On service these sort of distinctions are but little thought of or attended to; but in a long peace, when the smart appearance of a corps is its best passport to favour, they become invidious, and cause much discontent. The difference which wings, facings, and lace, will make in the appearance of men, of an equally good figure and size, is more than enough to deceive even a soldier's eye, much less that of a civilian; it follows, therefore, that Light and Fusilier corps, which wear these distinctions, easily obtain a better class of recruits than the most distinguished Battalion regiments; this gives them at once a superiority, enables them to maintain discipline with less punishment, and, by giving less trouble, to gain favour in the eyes of their superiors, who are seldom blind to the charms of commanding a smart and well-dressed brigade, even were all equal in point of discipline.

We venture to assert, without fear of contradiction, that the whole appearance of the 6th regiment will be so altered by its change of dress that the officers themselves will be surprised at the improvement to the appearance of their men; and though the character of that regiment cannot be more distinguished than it has ever been, the advantage attached to a change, apparently so unimportant, will soon be felt in the superior class of recruits which now enter its ranks, and the additional value which officers attach to commissions in it.

Upon principle we do not think wings well adapted for service, as they very soon spoil if slept on; scales, such as are worn by the Dragoon Guard regiments, are more serviceable, though not so handsome as wings. If, however, one regiment is allowed to wear wings, we do not see why the whole army should not be allowed the same indulgence, as it cannot but be very mortifying to any regiment, particularly such as may have been greatly distinguished on service (like the Forty-fifth and Thirty-eighth regiments), to find themselves brigaded with, and completely eclipsed in general estimation by, regiments wearing these distinctions, but who have not seen half as much actual service or hard fighting. Nor can it be alleged that they are granted to such regiments only as are destined for particular service; because, by a late regulation, all are required to be equally practised in light movements, and all are equally liable to be called on to perform them. The Line feel that there may be reason in the privileges granted to the Guards, and acquiesce though they cannot but regret, that they should be debarred the honour of attending upon the person of their Sovereign, but look with jealousy and disgust upon favours unequally distributed among themselves.

To turn now to the dress of the officers. We cannot but comment upon the tawdry and unsoldier-like appearance of the two double of lace which deck the collar and cuffs of the regimental coats. When new they look gaudy, and ill-adapted for service; but when only a few weeks old, they have a worn and thread-bare appearance, which is anything but pleasing. We are of opinion that a soldier should wear nothing (but his epaulettes) which has not some real or apparent use; and we do not think the profits of the lacemen should be considered in preference to the pockets of the Subaltern, who, notwithstanding Mr. Hume's assertion, can ill afford to purchase unnecessary finery out of 5s. 3d. per diem. If, however, we must have something gay, a small strip of embroidery on the collar would not be more expensive, would look much better, and last twice as long as lace *. To the double-breasted coat we have a strong objection; first, because by far the greatest part of our army is serving in hot climates, to which it is particularly ill-adapted, and where, although the shell-jacket is allowed to be worn occasionally, it is still much used—(and here we cannot but ask, why are not shell-jackets allowed to be worn always and on all duties in hot climates? Is a uniform of such paramount importance that martyrdom must be endured for its sake?); secondly, because it is much less easily made to fit well than a single-breasted coat.

Any one who has seen the undress of the Staff—we mean the red single-breasted coatee, without lace or embroidery, will, we think, admit that it is the only really handsome and soldier-like dress worn by Officers of Infantry in our service. Of the blue coat we should say exactly the reverse; because it is only worn in cold climates, and should therefore be, as indeed it is called, a sort of great coat. A double-breast is, therefore, more appropriate, and, we think, handsomer, as may be seen by those which the heavy Cavalry wear. There should also be some distinguishing mark for different ranks on the blue coat; the same, perhaps, as that worn in the Navy,—one narrow gold band round the cuff for a Captain, two for a Major, and three for a Lieutenant-Colonel. Where rank is so eagerly sought and so dearly purchased as in the Army, every one is well pleased to have it recognised at once and without difficulty, which can never be the case while the epaulettes are the only distinctions, as it would require the careful examination of an experienced eye to distinguish the respective ranks of a Captain and a Sub-altern.

While we are on this subject we cannot but remark on the unhappy appearance of Infantry mounted Officers. If we consider how few officers of the line can afford to keep horses until their rank entitles them to forage, and how much fewer attain that rank until too late to learn to ride, we shall scarcely be surprised at their not being good horsemen, or that their horses should not be in general of the best description. If this be admitted, how much more must they require to have every advantage which can be afforded them in the way of horse furniture and equipments. We should have supposed that those who provided so well for the Cavalry, who are by profession good riders, would scarcely have forgotten those who are, as Sir Colquhoun Grant used to say, proverbially the contrary.

Again, we observe, that the Field Officers of the Rifle Regiments are the only Infantry Officers who are allowed to wear the sabre tache, without which convenient and, we may say, necessary appendage, the sword must jerk violently about, and frequently strike the horse's legs if galloping. To those mounted officers who are liable to be sent with despatches it is almost indispensable, as if the despatch should be at all too large or inconveniently shaped to be put in the breast, we know not where they can put them, unless in the cap, which is always liable to fall off if the wearer goes at all faster than a walk.

We also observe, that both the Field and Battalion Officers of the Rifles wear cartouche boxes; for what reason the latter wear them we know not, as they are not provided with pistols; while the Field Officers of the line, who wear holsters and carry pistols (and, what is more to the purpose, require them on service), have no where to put their cartridges, unless it be in their pocket.

We have been thus particular in remarking on the dress of mounted Infantry Officers, because we have heard a rumour that some alteration was intended, and that it would be in some measure assimilated to that of the Hussars or Light Cavalry. We see no objection to such a dress, as they cannot be required to be in uniformity with the men. But, whatever the change may be, we trust it will be one adapted to the performance of those duties which we are told in His Majesty's regulations, and which we know, by experience, cannot be effectively performed on foot.

HAVING in our last detailed the rates, number, and armament of the Russian Fleet, we shall now proceed to describe the organisation of the crews, and the probable effect which might be anticipated should circumstances at any time produce a rupture between the two countries, and bring the Navies of England and Russia in collision.

To each line-of-battle ship is attached a Regiment, or, as they call it, an Equipage, consisting of 1100 officers and men; and every Equipage, besides furnishing a crew for the large ships, mans also smaller ones, when the following rule is observed. Three decker and a Corvette, an Eighty-four and two Brigs, or a Seventy-four and a Frigate. There is also an extra Equipage, which furnishes crews for steamers, and for a small squadron of flat-bottomed vessels, kept for exercising the Cadets on the Neva, under the Emperor's eye. So that the crews of the Russian Fleet amount to no less than 30,800 men in the Baltic, and 19,800 in the Black Sea—altogether 50,600 men! Their Officers take precedence in the following order:—Admirals, Vice and Rear, command the Fleet and divisions thereof; First Captain (a Colonel of the Equipage) commands the Line-of-Battle Ship; Second Captain, the Frigate; Captain-Lieutenant, the Corvette; First Lieutenant, Second Lieutenant, and Midshipman. The promotion is by seniority, although the rule is not always adhered to. Each division of the Fleet is distinguished by blue, white, or red flags; but the colour does not imply the rank of the Admiral, as in our service.

In order to create and maintain a supply of Officers, two establishments of Cadets are kept up; the first, of six hundred, at St. Petersburg, for those in the regular line; and the other, of two or three hundred, for Masters. The whole of these Cadets are sent to sea with the Fleet every year.

They have a Board of Admiralty, or Council, consisting of six Admirals, and the Minister of Marine presides in the same capacity as our First Lord of the Admiralty.

The nominal pay of their Officers is low, but they have allowances for extra rations, table-money, and servants, which fully enable them to maintain their rank at home; and, when abroad, their pay is considerably increased, every paper rouble which they receive being then paid as a silver rouble, equal to three paper roubles and one-fourth. In fact, their pay is nearly quadrupled, to place them on an equality with the Officers of other nations.

The annual expense of the Russian Navy is, 23,000,000 roubles in the Baltic, and 16,000,000 in the Black Sea;—total 39,000,000 roubles, or 1,625,000*l.*

As regards the construction of their ships, they have copied various forms and models from English, French, and American builders, and possess themselves of any new invention very shortly after it is adopted in other countries. Scarcely two of their ships are alike. Most of their constructors have been educated in our Dockyards, and therefore the principles of Sir Robert Seppings, Dr. Inman, and others, are familiar to them. They have lately adopted the fastenings of Sir William Symonds, which they consider a great improvement, and intend to copy his lines in the ships they are about to build.

The Russia, 130, is fastened upon Symonds's plan; their best oak is used in her construction, and she may last, with care, twelve or fifteen years; but the majority of their ships can only ten years.

The Russia is building under the direction of Colonel Papoff; her length [illegible] feet, beam 57, and she partakes of the fine lines and sowbelly. The same officer is also building an eighty-four of Inch; and Colonel Arnb, a [illegible] who was educated in the late School of Naval Architecture, Portsmouth Dock-yard, from 1827 to 1830, is now building a seventy-four (to carry eighty-eight guns) upon Dr. Inman's (his preceptor's) lines: she is 188 feet long, and 50 beam.

As every functionary in Russia is distinguished by some Military rank, their Naval Constructors form a branch of the corps of Engineers; and so completely Military are they, that even their Ship-wrights are soldiers. When they commence building, they march a regiment into the Dock-yard and, with very little instruction, set them to carpentering. As might be supposed, the Ship-wrights' work is, under these circumstances, clumsily performed; but they consider that it answers the purpose very well. They have not made much progress with steamers, although they have lately turned attention to them, and Admiral Greig was despatched to England to make observations. A steam-vessel of large dimensions was launched in July last, called the Beaver, or Giant: she is 186 feet long, 32 feet beam, and has engines of 300-horse power, has a howitzer mounted on a circular sweep to throw a shell of seventy-two pounds, and two others to throw shells of forty pounds. She is a narrow, wall-sided, ugly-looking craft, said to be on the lines of the Nile, built in England for the Pacha of Egypt.

During the exercise the ships manœuvred slowly and heavily, sailing very unequally, owing to the difference of construction, being generally crank, although deeply immersed, considering that they had but a small store of provisions on board. If victualled for six months, nearly the whole of them would be brought with their lower-deck ports within three feet of the water's edge. They generally keep very open order, fearing to run on board of each other. In the sham fight on the 20th of July, when the Emperor made the signal for the weather column to attack the lee, and also to double upon the rear, they engaged at much too great a distance, and their fire was exceedingly slow and badly supported; in short, the manœuvre was very lubberly performed; and, from the disparity of size in the ships, and want of skill in their crews, they would be no match in Fleets upon the ocean for English, French, or American ships of far inferior force. But the men are strong, hardy, sober, willing, and obedient; and were they kept at sea the whole of every summer, and more pains devoted to make sailors of them than is now applied to their soldiering, they would soon become tolerable crews; and certainly such a force is a formidable one under any circumstances, when we consider that it is yearly equipped, and cruising within a few days' sail of the River Thames.

List of the Russian Fleet which manœuvred in the Baltic in the month of July last, under the immediate inspection of the Emperor. The following is the order in which the ships were formed:—

Whilst we have, from time to time, expressed our opinions freely and honestly as regards the necessity for a thorough reorganization of the Coast Guard Service, closely in accordance with the suggestions offered by Numa and our other talented and experienced correspondents, yet we have ever been ready to acknowledge the important benefits which different parts of the Coast Guard establishment have occasionally afforded to shipwrecked vessels, and vessels in distress. Often as we have had the satisfaction of recording these acts of gallantry and zealous exertion on the part of the Lieutenants and Boatmen belonging to this service, we never remember to have heard of more dashing enterprises than those which occurred off Exmouth during the gales of the 9th and 10th instant, when the Chief Officer, Lieutenant Shaw, finding, on the first occasion, that a yacht, the Red Rover, had foundered on the Warren sand, launched his galley through a heavy surf, and, though twice upset, at length reached her, and saved the crew; and again on the 10th, when another yacht in the Roads was in imminent danger of being wrecked, and when it was evident that, if she and her crew driven on shore, every soul on board of her must have perished, this gallant officer, in the middle of the gale, at 12 o'clock at night launched his boat, and with his brave associates, after two hours' exertion, got to the vessel, when, seeing that the only chance of saving her was by getting her under sail and working her up to a more sheltered roadstead, he, in spite of every obstacle, effected his object under a close-reefed foresail and storm jib, thus obtaining for himself and crew the heartfelt gratitude of all who were on board of this vessel, and the admiration of every soul that witnessed their daring efforts, which we sincerely hope will meet the reward they so richly merit.

We understand that a Quarterly Report on the various subjects of study at the Royal Naval School, and perusal of each scholar separately, has recently been adopted for the satisfaction of the parents, and is forwarded to such as desire it. This is in addition to the one usually sent home at the Midsummer vacation, and the Monthly Report which lies at the Office in London and at the School for inspection. We feel assured that the most beneficial results must arise from such facility being afforded to the parents for judging of the actual progress made by their sons; more especially to those who reside at a distance and have not the opportunity of personally communicating with this valuable Institution.

In addition from the papers we have received [illegible] Army [illegible] regulations [illegible] new scale of Retiring Pensions, the acceleration of promotion, which is so much required, being in no degree advanced; and it is therefore suggested, that the three Presidencies should memorialize the Home Authorities for the deduction of one furlough from the new scale. The granting of this real boon has so often been advocated in our own columns, that we should be at a loss for further pressing it on the consideration of the Court of Directors and Board of Control, but for the circumstance that the Indian Army have recently experienced the bitter disappointment of losing all hopes of a Retiring Fund. We have conversed with the eldest officers at home on the subject, and all concur in the opinion we have so repeatedly expressed; and as we have cause personally to esteem Sir John Hobhouse, we submit this appeal to his judgment, with confidence that the time is not distant when it will have full consideration.

Having in our last Paper briefly noticed the contemplated change respecting the rank of Colonel in the Indian Army, we feel ourselves called upon to animadvert on the system which is still pursued of evading the just and true claims of the East India Company's Officers. The proposed change is no less than the fifth or sixth which has taken place. These have originated by departing from the regulations of 1796, which had been settled on a fair and equitable basis by his late Majesty George the Third, to the satisfaction of all. It was then directed—"That the Officers of the East India Company's Forces should take rank and post in India according to the same rule as prevailed in the Royal Army, that is, by the dates of commission; and it was further provided, by the same orders, that every regiment of Infantry, Cavalry, or Battalion of Artillery, or Engineers, should be commanded by a Colonel, whose promotion to that rank regimentally should place him on the general list of Colonels to be promoted to the rank of Major-General, according to date, and the practice of His Majesty's service in regard to the corps of Artillery, Engineers, and Marines, whose promotion is regulated in the same manner as that of the Indian Armies, solely by seniority."

The above regulation was altered in 1806, on ex parte statements made to the Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's Army, that certain Lieutenant-Colonels of the Royal Army serving in India were superseded by other Lieutenant-Colonels of the Indian Armies who had attained the rank of Colonel regimentally. Thus the regulations of 1796 were rescinded, thereby inflicting a grievous injury on the officers of the Company's Service who have not the same sources open to them, that of purchase, favour, or merit, by which the officers of the Royal Army may rise to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel or Colonel.

In 1809 the system of 1796 was again in force, by granting to the Colonels of regiments their rank from the time they succeeded to regiments; but this grant had no retrospective effect, and was regulated originally by the introduction of Brevets, among [illegible] at the three Presidencies, causing [illegible], confusion, collision, and disappointment. The [illegible], in justice, ought to have been retrospective, which would have obviated the inconsistency of Officers, who attained their regiments as [illegible] having commissions dated the same day (say June, 1809) as those who were only [illegible] Colonelcies. The principles emanating from this order of 1829 have been so numerous, and of such serious consequence, as to lead to other alterations, the effect of which has cancelled the order of 1829 altogether, leaving the affairs of the Indian Army in a state of anxiety, difficulty, and hardship, and detrimental to the public service.

The injurious consequences that must arise to an Army on constant active service to be dependent on His Majesty's Army for promotion, at constant peace, at a distance of half the circumference of the globe, must be apparent;—their loss of rank is grievous, and their depressed and degraded interest is too clearly illustrated by disgust and disappointment. The regulations of 1796 were just, and gave general satisfaction, with the means of providing for the wants of the Service in Colonels, and consequently of Generals, had it been adhered to. At the present moment there is not a single General Officer available for the Staff of the Indian Army; hence the Indian Governments have been compelled to employ Colonels, with the commission of Brigadier-Generals. On this point, however, the East India Company's Officers must prove the gracious attention of His Majesty, that justice may be done to a body of officers whose devotion and loyalty have always been proverbial.

Considerable benefit has been derived from the practice of paying Seamen and Marines a portion of their wages monthly, and thus giving them the opportunity of purchasing the necessaries which they are continually requiring, or the means for enjoyment when on leave on shore in foreign countries; to procure which they were formerly in the habit of disposing of their clothes for a very trifling consideration; but it is still matter of complaint that the quarter-deck Petty Officers do not partake of this benefit, as we find by a letter which we this day insert.

The practice of retaining a considerable portion of the seaman's wages, and constantly keeping him in arrear, was adopted for the purpose of making the retention of his person more sure; for he could not desert without the certainty of forfeiting two or three months' wages. The necessity for this does not exist at present; and it is usual for the seamen to receive, not only a portion monthly, but the months' wages in advance when the ship is ready for sea. The commissioned officer, on receiving his appointment, draws three months' pay in advance, and afterwards the whole of his pay by quarterly bills, in whatever part of the world he may be; and we are not aware of any sufficient reason why the same indulgence should not be extended to the young gentlemen.

At all events, the Mates, whose pay is about sufficient to support them in that rank, and whose allowance from their friends is generally withdrawn, or greatly abridged, when they obtain it; and also the Clerks, who seldom have any allowance at all, might be permitted to draw their pay in the same manner as the superior officers. The pay of the young gentlemen being merely nominal matters little; but as the aforesaid officers remain many years in those grades without a possibility of advancing, it is but reasonable that every indulgence which could be, should be given to them, and the means of keeping up the respectability of the service, and supporting themselves in foreign service, yet [illegible] is practicable. We are, therefore, not without opes thet the matter will be accomplished ere og.

The repeated communications that continue to made to us on the subject of the conveyance of oops in hired transports, make it necessary that e should again express our sanguine hope that e Government will at once put an end to this stly-condemned system, by causing half-a-dozen moro of our small class Frigates to be fitted for is duty. These ships being jury-rigged, and with sloop-of-war's complement of men and officers, ould not be of much greater cost to the country an the hire of merchant ships as transports, whilst e advantages resulting from this arrangement ould be incalculable. Amongst the many that e are prepared to adduce, we consider the far etter protection of the lives of our gallant soldiers be the first and principal one that ought to kept in view; and a reference to the list of ansports that have been totally wrecked, with oops on board, within the last ten years, will at nce show those who have the power to amend the vil, that its recurrence through the same cause ught never again to be risked. In a man-of-war tted for this service, our brave soldiers and their amilies will not only receive tenfold accommodaion to that which they can ever have in a merhant vessel hired as a transport, but the security f their lives will be advanced in a still higher atio; hence, we sincerely hope that measures will be taken, without loss of time, for the adoption of the regulation which we so earnestly recommend.

We have much pleasure in announcing the appointment of Capt. L. Davies to command the fine corvette, Dido, a selection as creditable to the impartiality and penetration of the First Lord of the Admiralty as it will be gratifying to the service generally, for a more deserving officer could not have been fixed on. It is well known that considerable interest has been made for the command of this ship, being a beau ideal of beauty, and of Captain Symonds's construction; and various reports, of the applications of officers and the name of her intended Commander, have, from time to time, been circulated. We find, however, that Lord Minto has rejected all in favour of an officer who had nothing but merit and high professional reputation to recommend him, but that merit is of no ordinary kind.

It will be in the recollection of our readers that Capt. Davies commanded the Rose, sloop of war, in the Battle of Navario, and so gallantly and peculiarly did he distinguish himself as to call forth the admiration of the whole combined fleet; and the French and Russian Admirals having represented his conduct, and the assistance which they derived from his exertions, to their respective Sovereigns, he was presented by each of them with orders of distinction.

It must be most gratifying to Captain Symonds to find that his ship has fallen into such hands, for Captain Davies was the active First Lieutenant of the Acasta, and other crack frigates, during the war, and bears the character of one of the best seamen in the Navy. We may, therefore, be sure that he will very soon place the merits of the Dido in their proper view.

In scanning over some manuscript Essays on Naval Architecture by French authors, we have been much amused at the different proposals for increasing the height of the ports of their line-of-battle ships from the water's edge. Our neighbours seem apprehensive (and not without reason) that ships deeply immersed might be caught at disadvantage by our 32-pounder frigates; and various are the schemes suggested, such as decreasing the weight, and even the number of guns, calculating upon a few tons saved thereby, as well as in the provisions for diminished crews, without considering that all these contrivances tend to weaken the positive force of the ships.

Whilst racking their invention to accomplish a 6 or a 7 feet port, which seems to be the desideratum, and calculating savings of pounds and ounces with this design, they totally overlook the weight of ballast in the hold, a weight carried for no other purpose than to counteract the tendency of the ship to heel over, and finally to capsize.

In fact, the French scientifics, as well as our own, who appear to have lit their lamp at the light of our neighbours, have been wasting their time in theoretic speculation upon abstract principles of little worth, instead of demonstrating this plain question: Whether the great amount (or, indeed, any amount) of ballast or unprofitable weight is required in a man-of-war; and whether a ship may not be constructed after such a form, and the weight of armament, stores, provisions, &c., which she must necessarily carry, so disposed as to supersede the necessity for extraneous weight, of no other value than to counteract the disposition to heel over?

It may be necessary to mention that the allowance of ballast for a French 120-gun ship is stated to be 640 tons! whilst the weight of her ordnance, and every appurtenance including powder, shot, &c., is one hundred tons less! In fact, the ballast alone is a fourth part of the whole weight which the ship is designed to carry, including masts, and every article except the bare hull. But our neighbours are not singular in this respect; a reference to "Naval Calculations and Displacements" will show that an English first-rate, out of 2142 tons, being the weight of every thing received on board, carries 373 tons of iron ballast and tanks; and, supposing the tanks to weigh about 60, there is, we insist, upwards of 300 tons of extraneous weight on board.

Prejudices are hard to overcome; but it appears to us that, until the principle of Sir William Symonds was brought into practice, our Naval constructors were altogether on the wrong tack. They had adopted an increase of length, without preserving even the corresponding breadth of the old builders; and, to counteract the tendency which narrow vessels must ever have to heel over, they loaded them with ballast. Theirs might, therefore, be called the "counteracting principle," now happily exploded; for it is proved that ships can be constructed, which not only equal, but excel all competitors in the attributes which constitute perfect men-of-war, such as speed, stowage, and capacity, and, moreover, have stability equal to carry away the masts before they incline beyond the angle which their guns command; and all this, with little or no ballast, or weight of any kind, over that required for the ship's use. The Pique has at this moment only 17 tons of iron ballast on board, and the Vanguard about 50 tons; yet both these vessels' stability has been put to the severest trial within this month, and we are firmly of opinion that even this small quantity may be advantageously removed and something useful substituted.

Next to the improved shape and increased breadth, the great merit of the Surveyor's principle is, preserving that breadth for a short distance above the load line, in order to support the ship when pressed by the wind; and this feature he has most happily denominated bearing, and a more appropriate name to represent its utility could not be conceived, although it appears not to be included within the vocabulary of scientific terms. We shall reserve some further observations we had intended to make, and in conclusion enliven this subject, of which our readers must be tired, with an appropriate anecdote: we will, as Cobbett used to say, "tell them a story."

The late Member for Galway, the philanthropic Mr. Martin, being on a visit on the coast of Scotland, had his sensitiveness mightily disturbed by accounts of the treatment which the jackasses employed to carry fish to market from a neighbouring station experienced at the hands of their ruthless masters; and in order to satisfy himself of the matter, and take measures for alleviating the evil, he proceeded forthwith to the spot. He found the denizens had, for time out of mind, been acting on the counteracting principle—they slung a basket of fish on one side of the ass, and to preserve the balance true, a stone of corresponding weight on the other, thus loading the poor beast with a double burden. Gentle reader, we leave thee to make the application, and to reflect whether the conduct of these ignorant fishermen was a jot more ridiculous than that of ship-builders, who, under the pretension of science, adopt the very same course.

We have elsewhere alluded to the mode of paying Quarter-deck Petty Officers, and we fully concur (as indeed we generally do) in the opinion of our respected correspondent, "Tristram," that it is politic to increase the pay of Petty Officers before the mast as the certain means of obtaining the services of our best mariners; for were the wages assimilated nearly to what the merchant offers, there cannot be a doubt but that the well-behaved, orderly men, who are provident enough to think of the pension and numerous other advantages, would be found willing enough to engage in the Royal Navy. As regards the equalisation of pay of different rates, we believe the present system is continued because the seaman always prefers a frigate or smaller vessel—and it would be difficult to persuade him to enter for line-of-battle ships, was not the difference of pay an inducement. We have never heard any other reason for the continuance of a practice which must give increased trouble in keeping the accounts; and were it abandoned, we fear the difficulty of procuring Petty Officers for large vessels would be increased, so long as the men are allowed to volunteer for any ship they please.

Duke of Wellington.—The city subscription for a tribute to the Duke goes on most suspiciously. Above 2000*l.* have already been collected, though hardly any public bodies have yet moved in the matter, and a great number of individuals have not had time nor opportunity to fulfil their expressed intentions. No doubt it will be worthy of the hero, and of his admirers in the metropolis of the mercantile world.

His Lordship's health seems perfectly restored, and his spirits are excellent.

The Post-office has adopted the plan of having a steam vessel always ready at Falmouth, to send out and meet wind-bound ships, in order to bring their letters into port. Such a regulation promises to be of considerable advantage to commerce. If passengers, as well as letters, could be included in the arrangement, it would be additionally beneficial.

THE CHIEF OF WATERLOO.

FROM THE SECOND EDITION OF FROST'S "SONGS."

We will not—need not—name him!
His deeds shall live in fame,
Whom those that dare to blame his
Have neither place nor name;
But thinking, as we think him,
To Britain's glory true,
At flowing cups we'll drink him—
The Chief of Waterloo.

His name hath filled the breezes
Wherever breezes blow,
From where the pole-star freezes
To where the tropics glow!
Whene'er he moved, before him
Gaul's mailed eagles flew,
And Conquest hovered o'er him—
The Chief of Waterloo!

Like him unmatched on ocean,
This Nelson of the Land,
By one red day's devotion
Left no work for his brand.
Rich, happier than the Roman,
His fame, with honours due,
Shall outlive every foeman—
The Chief of Waterloo!

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—King Leopold took his departure a few days since for Brussels. The Duke de Nemours left Paris on Saturday for Africa, to join Marshal Clauzel's expedition to Constantine. It is said that changes will shortly take place in the higher personnel of French diplomacy.

ROSSIA.—Accounts from Moldavia up to 4th Oct., state that the Russian garrison of Silistria has entirely left the principality. The troops go into cantonments beyond the Pruth, and have observed the most excellent discipline.

SPAIN.—Telegraphic Despatch.—Bayonne, Oct. 24, 10 o'clock.—Gomez returned to Cordova on the 13th, and moved towards La Mancha on the approach of Alaix, who arrived at Cordova on the next day. Rodil was on the 14th at Valdepenas. It was not known at his head-quarters what direction he was taking. The passes of the Sierra Morena were occupied by bands. There was no communicating with Andalusia except by Estremadura. It appears that no engagement has taken place.

The siege of Bilboa has commenced. The force before Bilboa is commanded by Eguia. This leader was at Durango on the 22nd, with the artillery; while Villareal, with three divisions, was at Zornoze, prepared to cover the operations. There is a rumour of 250 officers of Espartero's army having resigned and left it.

HOLLAND.—The Prince of Orange left the Hague on the 24th for the head-quarters of the army at Tilburg. The Government has granted the sum of 4,000 florins for the purchase of Oriental manuscripts for the library of the University of Leyden.

TURKEY.—A new organization of the Empire, dividing Turkey into ten Prefectures, to be administered by the Governors-General, and as many Lieutenant-Governors, is in preparation. The Governors-General are to take the title of Muschir. They are to have the nomination of Civil Officers, but they themselves will remain responsible.

ITALY, Rome, Oct. 11.—Don Miguel lives in a very retired manner in the country, amuses himself with the chase, and comes once a week to Rome. One of his suite, Senor Gulao, formerly Minister of Justice and Councillor of State, died lately, and Miguel is said to be very much grieved at his loss.

MALTA, Oct. 8.—H.M. frigate Vernon was despatched a few days ago to Marseilles, for the Commissioners for examining into the disaffection here. Since the public announcement of the nomination of these gentlemen, the clamour of the party against the British Government has a good deal subsided.

WEST INDIES.—Intelligence has been received from Barbadoes of the 23d ult., and from the other islands of a recent date. Barbadoes had been visited by an epidemic fever, which was raging with great violence. Antigua papers contain the report of a committee of the House of Assembly there, on a despatch addressed by Lord Glenelg to the Governor, Sir Evan M'Gregor. The report accuses the Governor of having been guilty of the most unconstitutional conduct, and charges him with having asserted falsehoods in his despatches to Lord Glenelg. It concludes by expressing a hope that the British Colonial Secretary will promptly mark his sense of the impropriety of the Colonial Governor's conduct by his immediate dismissal. The Jamaica papers mention that in the course of one year and ten months, since the abolition of slavery, 34,000*l*. has been raised by the negroes to ransom 1,000 of their body from apprenticeship.

GIBRALTAR.—On the 12th Sir Alexander Woodford, K.C.B., took the usual oaths required, on his being appointed Governor of Gibraltar. The Commission was read, and the oath administered by the Hon. Baron Kidd, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. A number of fugitives from Malaga have sought refuge at Gibraltar.

Dwarfs.—Don Santiago de los Santos, a Spaniard, of twenty-five inches in height, who has performed at the Adelphi and Victoria theatres, having, in July 1834, committed matrimony with Miss Ann Hopkins, aged thirty-one, and of the altitude of thirty-eight inches, the consequence was, a boy, born alive, in Holborn, on Sunday morning. Its own span was thirteen and a half inches, and its span of life above an hour; its weight one pound four and a half ounces avoirdupois. At St. George's Church, Bloomsbury, they refused to bury such a mite; and the progeny of the Santos is to be exhibited in spirits, and deposited in a public museum.

Sic Transit. It.

Speed.—Mr. Horace Smith, in a lecture delivered at Brighton on the powers of steam, and the future prospects it opens to the world, mentions a projector, whose enthusiasm carried him so far, that he prognosticated the time would shortly arrive, when, by steam and rail-road, "a man might travel from Brighton to London in less time than he could stay at home!" Of course it must be by the line without a tunnel.

Theatres.

DRURY LANE.—The tragedy of Othello was performed at this theatre on Monday evening, and repeated on Wednesday: we saw it on the latter evening, the house was tolerably well filled on the admission of half-price. We have already taken a general view of Mr. Forrest's style of acting, and given our opinion as to his qualifications, and perhaps should not have reverted to the subject so fully as we are about to do, but for the opposite, and, in some cases, invidious accounts which have been given by a portion of the press. So opposite, indeed, in all their bearings to each other, that no one, possessing the least reliance on his own judgment, should, in our opinion, trust to either, but go and judge by the evidence of his own sense. Various, indeed, have been the opinions of Mr. Forrest's talents for his profession—some have decided them as excellent—some as tolerable—others, as all but bad; all these opinions have been given with the same confident air of decision, and yet all could not be correct. After reading The Morning Chronicle report of Mr. Forrest's first appearance as Spartacus, let the reader peruse the article in the same paper on Mr. Forrest's second performance of that part. Take The Courier the day following this gentleman's debut, and the same paper of Tuesday last, and the reader will find that the critics, in both instances, contradict their first statements. So much for the accounts in the daily prints. Mr. Forrest had, on his first appearance, to combat (in our opinion) with more than the usual difficulties which fall to the share of an actor—he had to appear in a wretched bad tragedy. This objection, however, was completely obviated on his appearance in Othello, a part for which he has many physical and mental qualifications. As we have already said, in our last week's notice, this actor's forte is energy and power; he seizes upon a character with vigour, and sustains it firmly throughout, but without ever betraying those splendid flashes of innate genius which made us tremble before the mighty master, Kean! His performance of the Moor is a fine manly piece of acting, full of fire, and by no means deficient in feeling. We must, however, warn him against the introduction of new words, and to guard against false emphasis and wrong pronunciation. Our limits will not allow us to point out the various beauties of his performance: we admired his address to the senate the least. In the third act, and in his dying scene, he was frequently warmly and deservedly applauded; his postures were picturesque and graceful, and his deportment easy and dignified. He is certainly the best representative of Othello at present on the English stage. The deep and subtle villain, Iago, was most admirably personated by Warde. This is not a part to win the favour of an audience, and it is by force of excellent acting alone that its representative can elicit even the smallest portion of applause. His malignity and perfidious designs render him so much an object to be despised, that the actor is often identified with the part, and not unfrequently comes in for a share of the contempt. It is, therefore, no small praise to Warde to say, that his performance of Iago was applauded throughout warmly and unanimously. Cooper's Cassio is entitled to praise; his drunken scene was comic and consistent with effect. Miss Taylor looked well as Desdemona, but she cannot act the part; there is too much comic playfulness in all she does to render her performance in tragedy at all effective. One of the finest pieces of acting in the tragedy was the performance of Miss Huddart, in the part of Emilia. In the latter part of the fourth act, and throughout the entire of the fifth, this lady carried away all the applause; and richly she merited it. We do not remember to have seen this part so well acted before. At the end of the tragedy, Mr. Forrest, Mr. Warde, and Miss Huddart were called for; the two gentlemen appeared, and bowed their thanks; but the lady did not appear, to receive the well-merited honour intended for her.

COVENT GARDEN.—The attraction continues at this theatre. On Tuesday this house was again crowded to overflowing, to witness the performance of Othello.

ST JAMES'S.—The opera of Artaxerxes was performed at this theatre on Thursday last, on which occasion the house was crowded to the roof. Miss Rainforth's debut is highly spoken of in the daily papers; we shall take an opportunity, next week, of noticing her performance at some length.

SURREY.—A new piece called Oh, Hush! was produced at this house on Monday, and met with what it richly deserved—a pretty considerable share of disapprobation. It is said to have been written by Mr. Rice, the American actor, and to have been played upwards of two hundred nights in New York. If such vile rubbish was played "with applause," the Americans are more easily pleased than any other people on the face of the globe; for certainly we never had the misfortune to witness so vile a piece in the whole course of our experience as critics. Oh, Hush! is destitute of everything that should constitute a drama; it has no plot, character, incident, or dialogue ensued, at the falling of the curtain, the disapprobation was so great, that we trust the Manager will have the good sense to withdraw the piece.

The Northern Lights. [illegible] of these lights, statistically [illegible] occurred on Saturday [illegible] o'clock, and continued till [illegible] the eastern horizon, and streaming [illegible] for a [illegible] reached, and spreading [illegible] seemed. As before, the watchmen and police thought it was a great fire, whilst engaged in its raging somewhere about the Minories. The firemen at the Bank office, in Watling-street, were called up by the watchmen on Southwark Bridge, who felt certain it was a fire. At Farringdon-street station, and Jermyn-square, Mitcham, the firemen were, in like manner, aroused by the police; but on this occasion the engineers were too weary to send out their engines, for the men and horses to be unnecessarily tired, without first making a good survey. At Watling-street, Henderson, the engineer, sent a man to the top of the house, whose report confirmed him of the real nature of the phenomenon. Brookland, of Jermyn-street, sent one of his men down the Whitechapel-road. The man, when he started, made first for the Minories, where the fire appeared to be; but as he advanced the brilliant glare gradually shifted its position, and at last appeared to rest over Mile-end. While he was following it, the day gradually broke, and all the rich crimson hues quickly faded away, giving place to the grey light of the morning. These appearances, so unusual so far south, are considered to indicate a severe winter. They are highly interesting to the artist from the richness of the colours they present, and the beautiful manner in which they are intermingled.

A short time ago, Lieutenant-Colonel Elmitt, an Officer of Transylvania, being believed to be dead of the cholera, at Hermanstadt, in that province, was hastily buried. On examining his effects a ring of great value was missing, and his servant suspected of having stolen it. The man insisted that his master never took it off his finger, and, consequently, the coffin was taken up, in order to ascertain the fact; when, to the horror of those present, it was evident that the Colonel had been buried alive, as the body was turned on its face, and the flesh of one of the arms had been eaten off.

THE LATE REAR-ADMIRAL JOHN [illegible]

This Officer—a brother of the noble family of Lauderdale, and brother of the gallant Lieutenant-Colonel of the 76th Regiment, who fell at one of the stormings of Burtpoor, under General Lake, in 1805—was a Midshipman on board the Regent, 98, bearing the flag of Sir John Jervis, during the reduction of the West India Islands in 1793, and, by his conspicuous gallantry, recommended himself to the notice of that distinguished Commander, to whose patronage he was indebted for his subsequent advancement.

At the [illegible] of Fort Fleur d'Epée, April 12th, 1794, Mr. [illegible] distinguished himself greatly, most gallantly [illegible] Captain Faulkner, and killing several of the garrison with his own hand; and during the subsequent operations [illegible] was actively engaged, until—being made Acting-Lieutenant—he succeeded to command the Naval Brigade in [illegible], all the Officers senior to him being killed, wounded, or knocked up by excessive fatigue.

He was made Lieutenant into the Winchilsea, and soon afterwards returned to England, in company with his Captain, Lord Cochrane, [illegible] the Leeward Islands. In this ship he was [illegible] 74, and subsequently of the Elephant, 74 guns.

Being promoted Commander of the Tartar, he was actively employed on the coast of Spain, in the protection of convoys. Returning to the West Indies, he [illegible] most probably in suppressing a mutiny which broke out, and he obtained the Commander-in-Chief, Earl St. Vincent, that he would [illegible] Post Captain, with the rank of Rear-Admiral, with remembrance of his Captain's [illegible] of "Duncan, Nelson, and Victory," in the midst of a most obstinate dispute, manifesting itself in those words. This Post rank was confirmed on the 12th of April, 1807, and he subsequently [illegible] the Channel squadron, [illegible] on service.

On the renewal of hostilities, he commissioned the Boadicea, 38, and made a gallant attempt upon the Dryade, French 74, and La Canonnière, 36, which ships he supposed were aground; but, finding his mistake, he made his escape from this very superior force with trifling damage.

He continued employed on [illegible] service [illegible] bearing the character of an [illegible] officer, and performing [illegible] in the same ship. In 1807 he [illegible] another [illegible] 38, for the purpose of [illegible] and, calling at [illegible], he brought the Oporto Convoy safe to England. Portugal at that time being in possession of the French.

In 1809 he was on half-pay, and does not appear to have been employed until 1812, when he took the command of the [illegible], 98, in the Medi[illegible], in which ship he remained until the close of the war.

This officer was promoted to a Flag on his late Majesty's Coronation, July 19, 1821 and [illegible], January 5, 1826, Dora, eldest daughter of [illegible], Esq., of Bedford, [illegible]. He died, at his house in [illegible] Square, on the 30th inst., after a short illness.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

TRISTRAM [illegible] NG A PLYMOUTH NAVAL ARCHITECT FOR WRITING FOR AND AGAINST [illegible]'S REGISTER, SHOWING THE [illegible] OF RAISING THE PAY OF THE [illegible] OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

Sir,—[illegible] you a point-blank question. Suppose I were to [illegible] private piece against you, "without rhyme or reason," and send my correspondence for publication in another Gazette, to undo all, or condemn all, which I have said or done in yours; what would you think of me? "You would be unworthy of my friendship or consideration; from that moment you would cease to be my friend Tristram." I ask you a point-blank answer of an honest man.

Another question, Mr. Editor—what do you think of that mathematical person, who signed himself "Naval Architect, and Lloyd's Surveyor of British and Foreign Shipping for the Port of Plymouth and the Neighbourhood," and who [illegible] wrote in your last year's No. 106, on the advantages of that Society?—

"The shortness of the time since the first establishment of this great merchants' book may, in some degree, palliate the blank columns of qualification; but the most faithful interpretation of a book coming forth so incomplete, is the disinclination of parties to have their ships so overhauled for registration, for reasons best known to themselves, &c."

"What is the object of this new national maritime institution? To counteract fraud; to protect Merchants and Underwriters; to protect property that may hitherto be borne from land to land; and to prove a safeguard, as it were, for the life of the thoughtless tar, who ships himself in the floating beast of burden, without ever considering whether she has a bottom to float on.

"To enlist all shipowners under the banners of this Institution, the Committee, constituted by representatives from the three grand divisions of the mercantile world, viz.—Shipowners, Merchants, and Underwriters, offer the most liberal terms and advantages, &c.

"This Institution is in its infancy; it requires support; it promises important advantages—advantages reciprocal to the united mercantile interests of Great Britain. That there should be evasion by owners to comply with the regulations, it is to be regretted; that there should be no legislative authority to support this Institution is still more to be regretted, if it be only to preserve human life."

In the Shipping Gazette of the 13th August, 1836, No. 191, this identical person, writing a letter on the "Marine Insurance Company," thus [illegible] himself against "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," which he had, but a year before, supported with fair and full advocacy in the Naval and Military Gazette:—

"Before admitting the sea-worthiness of the ship, it will become the Directors' duty to be satisfied with the full demonstration of the same. Now, through what channel is this satisfaction to be conveyed? The grand question. Certainly not through 'Lloyd's Register Book of Classification of Vessels.' If the Directors rest their discretion of the qualifications of such vessels here, then the Institution will not exist for six months; [illegible] this day week candidly acknowledged before the Committee of Shipowners that the losses of the shipping for the last twelve years' guarantee would double those of the twelve preceding years. In this period we lose more than 2,500 vessels lost, founded by wreck and foundering, 1000 of which [illegible] it will also be [illegible] to find, were abandoned during the fall of last year, and all through the misdirection of the Institution to [illegible] the [illegible] and humanity, [illegible] the selection of [illegible]."†

[illegible] the [illegible] "Marine Insurance Company" that "it was in contemplation for the Directors [illegible] Why? Because the [illegible] Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping for the Port of Plymouth and the Neighbourhood" [illegible] in his letter in the Shipping Gazette "Naval Architect and Surveyor of Shipping." Oh! Mr. Editor, Mr. Editor, oh! to [illegible] your name to such [illegible]—to ruin it in another!

Page 180, "quick" is omitted in the explanation before "march," and may be mistaken to mean slow time.

Page 181, the cautions and commands are totally omitted in Sect. 69.

Page 183. Is the word of command "shoulder forward?" Should it not be "shoulders forward?"

Page 186. This movement is directed to be performed in slow time, vide "march" in margin and explanation. "Shoulder forward" is here singular. Why so?

Page 186. The caution is not given for this movement. "March" indicates that it be performed in slow time.

Page 188. In Section 69 the caution is also omitted.

Page 194. The several cautions should be printed as such in the margin.

Page 199. In par. 3, the cautions and commands should be given.

HE COAST GUARD OR PREVENTIVE SERVICE.

Sir,—In the belief that measures are in progress for anding the present Coast Guard Service, so as to make of utility towards manning our Navy, in the event of an ergency, I should not presume to offer any remarks upon present state of this establishment had I not of late n the most gross misrepresentations connected with its tended efficiency, set forth in another journal. For the e of truth, then, I must beg to say a few words in anr to these extraordinary mis-statements; and first I l ask the individual, whoever he may be, that has, I not but consider, interestedly misled the Editor of the rnal in question—How many of the six thousand men, o he says now belong to the Coast Guard, are qualified make even "topmen" in our ships of war? My sinre belief is, not one-tenth, or even a twentieth of this numr; the majority of the men now belonging to this Service t being suited in any way for the Navy. Next, I would quire how it can possibly be said that the Preventive, or ast Guard Service, is of an "essential benefit to the venue," when it must be known to every man belonging it that smuggled spirits, throughout the whole of the asts of England, Ireland, and Scotland, are as cheap d as plenty as they were twenty years ago? Consee nily it must be evident that success does not attend the easures adopted for the suppression of the contraband ade by this force; and that the indefatigable labours of e officers and men attached to it are of little or no avail. hat some of these gallant individuals have rendered essenl benefits to shipwrecked vessels, I fully admit; but it annot be pretended that, because the property in some alf-dozen or dozen vessels annually has been partly saved these means, we ought to keep up an establishment at a early cost of ABOVE HALF A MILLION for this object. This ould, indeed, be paying dearly for such casual advantages. o, Sir; if we must have a Coast Guard, let it be so orained and so formed as that it shall be a sure and certain rce, with which to man, as they ought to be manned, at east half a dozen sail of the line in a week, if required. Whereas, as I have said, I am positive that the whole Coast Guard Service—of five or six thousand men, or whatever it may be—would not at this moment produce five undred able, thoroughbred seamen, such as ought always o be found in our ships of war, if we would desire to phold our Naval greatness; nor, in my belief, even the half of this number! Of what use, then, I ask, is it to keep up an establishment which yields no essential advanage whatever, either towards the suppression of an uggling, or as a reserve for manning our Navy, and the maintenance of which exceeds the hundredth part of the annual revenue of the United Kingdom? These are facts which cannot be shutted by any of those interested persons whose sole bject is to keep things as they are, regardless of their ountry's welfare; and who care only for the "loaves and shes" which this Service continues to yield to them or to heir friends.

A LOVER OF TRUTH.

THE COAST-GUARD SERVICE.

Sir,—Having seen in your paper of last week a letter n the subject of the Coast-Guard, containing a reflection on a portion of the Service which I have the honour to ommand, I beg you will (in common justice to a number f Officers and men, whose duty is of the most arduous escription,) insert this letter in your next publication. When I tell you, that from the proximity of this part of the Coast to Cherbourg, the Coast-Guard men are frequently set in the winter on night duty sixteen hours at a time, ou will, I am confident, not refuse an act of retribution to deserving men, whose characters must otherwise suffer by he letter above alluded to.

I do not mean to deny that foreign spirits can be bought very cheap in Dorsetshire, for it is known to be impossible o put down smuggling entirely. But the cheapness of the liquor is more owing to the vile quality of the stuff, than to the quantity which is imported by smugglers. So bad is it, that, at the Custom-House sales of seizures, no purchasers can be found for it for family use, and it is sent to London for re-distillation. No respectable person will drink it on account of its poisonous qualities, and therefore its sale is confined to those who like best that which intoxicates soonest, without regard to the evil consequences of drinking alcohol, rendered more deleterious by the frequent admixture of vitriol to raise its strength.

On other parts of the coast, where a better description of spirits is smuggled, people go many miles to purchase at Custom-House sales, as I have myself witnessed when commanding a different district. I am Sir, your obedient servant,

C. KNIGHT,
Commander R.N., Inspecting-Commander.

Weymouth, Oct. 25.

[We have in our present columns, as well as on many other occasions, acknowledged the services of individuals of the Coast Guard. With respect to the letter of Philo Navus, we must leave that gallant officer to make his reply; his opinions however, we must add, accord with those of another officer, who signs himself A Lover of Truth, and whose letter we this day publish.—ED.]

REGIMENTAL PROMOTIONS AND SALE OF COMMISSIONS.

Sir,—Allow me to call your attention to the system of promotion caused by half-pay Officers being placed on full-pay in regiments for the purpose of selling. I believe this originates from a War-Office regulation intended for the benefit of all regiments as well as for general economy; but why is it observed in some cases and not in others, when the circumstances are similar? A Field-Officer, junior in age to the one going on half-pay, is generally brought in to sell, that the half-pay list may be weeded of its youngest members; and when this rule is deviated from the reasons are obvious, from the very name of the individuals who are provided for. Take the recent instances of promotion which appeared in your Naval and Military Gazette of the 29th July, 15th and 21st October last. Contrast these with the Gazette of 8th July, and remark that, in this latter case, it was the second exchange that had taken place in the space of five months without giving promotion, the former one having taken place on the 26th February last. Private influence is so conspicuously marked in these latter exchanges, together with the exchange of the 24th April 1835, as to have become the subject of animadversion in several quarters, and a high official situation must be necessary to conduct such proceedings as these.

Chatham, 24th Oct. JUSTICE.

PRESENT SYSTEM OF DISCHARGING SOLDIERS

Sir,—Your having inserted the letter of An Old Serjeant in your invaluable Journal a few weeks since, leads me to hope that you will not object to call the attention of the higher Military powers to a case which I think will be considered one of some hardship, and one which I fear is by no means a solitary instance of the inconvenience (to say the least of it) of the present mode of discharge, at a time, too, when the Military authorities appear anxious to benefit the deserving soldier, and afford encouragement to young men of respectability who may wish to join the service.

I am now 50 years of age, have been in one regiment 30 years, the last 26 of which I have been what I may term a working non-commissioned Officer, filling situations which required the utmost correctness of conduct as well as considerable activity. I have not only never been tried by Court-Martial, but never entered in a Defaulter Book, nor reported for the most trivial irregularity after my service of one-third of a century. A situation is offered to me, which would, in addition to the pension which I trust it will be considered I deserve, enable me to pass the evening of my life in quiet and respectability; but, Mr. Editor, my age, my service, and the growing infirmities which, in common with all of my years, I must experience, do not avail me. I must wait until the next inspection (eight or nine months) before I can be even recommended for discharge, and I must then proceed to Chatham for an indefinite time, to be medically inspected and treated. (In the mean time the situation must be filled up.) Does not this state of affairs require a little looking into and correction, and should there not be a greater facility allowed to a man thus situated to obtain that reward for which he has so long faithfully laboured?

Like the "Old Serjeant," I must disclaim all intention presumptuously to arraign my superiors. Obedience, the first duty of a soldier, has been instilled into me, and I have ever used my humble endeavours to train up those under me in the same principles. I write because I am convinced that the framers of "Warrants" do not always know where "the shoe pinches," and because I am also convinced that their good sense will not be offended at a suggestion, even if the exigencies of the service do not permit them to act upon it.

CERVEAON.

[This subject well merits the attention of the Authorities at the Horse Guards: on a former occasion we noticed the inconveniences and hardships resulting from the system.—ED.]

LORD DE SAUMAREZ.

[The following Sonnet, sent us by a correspondent, shows how this excellent officer and worthy man was beloved in his native isle, on his quitting it to take the command at Plymouth in 1824. If his countrymen then mourned his absence, how much more poignant is their grief now that he is removed for ever from weeping relatives, admiring friends, and grateful partakers of his unbounded benevolence and charity!]

Town Sarnia*, cease your unavailing grief!
Nor mourn your Hero, and the best of men;
It is Old England calls the gallant chief,
Who fought for her—bled, and would fight again!
Hope consolation in safe return,
With well-won honours, to bless your Isle once more,
To wipe Want's tears from orphans as they mourn,
And share the blessings of the grateful poor.
Britain can ne'er forget his deeds of yore!
Whilst History tells who toil'd our rights to save,
Fame will proclaim his name from shore to shore—
"Saumarez the pious, generous, and brave!
"Saumarez the pious, generous, and brave!
Who, for his country's weal, so nobly stood
The brunt with Rodney, Jervis, Nelson, Howe!"

A FRIEND TO GRATITUDE.

Literary Notices.

Impressions of England. By Count Edward de Melfort. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

THIS book furnishes a pleasant estimate of our national characteristics, and of their effect on the mind of a foreigner. Count Melfort has evidently enjoyed the most favourable opportunities for seeing and describing English manners in almost every class of life; and the great interest he evidently takes in the nation, has induced him to turn to the fullest account the facilities afforded by his position. He has been a favoured guest in the aristocratical circles, he has mixed with the middle classes, and pursued with unwearied curiosity his investigations among the lower ranks of our society. Then, his passion for field-sports sent him roaming over many of our provinces, and enabled him to give, at some length, what we regard as no little curiosity, to wit, a sketch of English rustic life, by the pencil of one of the modern French noblesse. The work is, in all respects, an exceedingly curious one—curious no less on account of the novelty, and force, and justice of many of the writer's remarks, than from the singular and whimsical misapprehensions into which our foreign investigator has once or twice fallen. But all is done with perfect kindness, and with a spirit and originality which remind us occasionally (and this is high praise) of Goldsmith's "Citizen of the World." The book derives no little value from the personal anecdotes scattered up and down its pages, and which, for the most part, being very piquant, will ensure an extensive circulation to the Count's "Impressions."

The Confessions of an Elderly Gentleman. Illustrated by Six Female Portraits, from highly-finished drawings by E. T. Parris. By the Countess of Blessington. Longman and Co.

We are glad to meet with further specimens of the versatile talents of this very clever Countess. The veritable confessions of an elderly gentleman, six times in love, have afforded scope for an amusing tale and much pointed satire upon coquettes, flirts, roués, and coxcombs. Her ladyship seems to have a most perfect knowledge of the thoughts and doings of such characters, and her exposé we expect, will prove a very attractive and popular publication. The engravings are excellent representations of female beauty.

The Forget Me Not. Edited by F. Shoberl. Ackerman and Co.

Our old favourite well maintains its position. Amongst the contributors this year are Mr. James and Mrs. Gore, whose names are sufficient recommendation for the work. We have also essays and poems by Mr. Charley, Mr. T. H. Bayly, Mrs. Abdy, Miss Landon, Delta, James Montgomery, and many others. Several of the papers are clever compositions, and most of the illustrations, eleven in number, have great merit. "Lady Blanche," from a painting by E. T. Parris, and engraved by C. Rolls, is an exquisite portrait; and the engraving by the same artist of "Faithful Carlo," from a picture by E. Landseer, is no less deserving of praise.

The Desultory Man. By the author of "Richelieu," &c. 3 vols. Saunders and Otley.

MR. JAMES is one of the best informed and most entertaining writers of the day, and his works are especial favourites at the domestic hearth, from the high moral principle and generous spirit they tend to encourage. A few weeks past we offered our meed of praise for his history of the Black Prince, a work of great study and research: and he has now, under the title of the "Desultory Man," placed before us several of his light effusions. These papers have appeared at different times in various periodicals, and many of them have been much admired; in their present collected form they constitute a very amusing miscellany of tales and sketches, which will be prized by all the lovers of light reading, of anecdote, fiction, and historical reminiscences. We must, at least, find room for one extract.

"Every one has heard of the Whisperers of Ireland, who pretend to, and really possess, the extraordinary art of taming the wildest horses, which they apparently accomplish by the simple process of whispering to them. This faculty of whispering is not at all confined to Ireland, however, but is common, in different forms, to a great many other countries. Every one has heard of the Laplander's habit of whispering in the ear of his rein-deer; and in various parts of Britanny, several of those whisperers are to be met with, whose success is invariable. They are there called Sorciers, and generally exercise the trade of farriers, curing horses of a variety of diseases in a manner truly extraordinary. One time, being at the little village of Bicherel, we had an opportunity of seeing the skill of a Sorcier put to the proof. Our worthy host, Monsieur G——, had shortly before purchased a beautiful bay mare, whose only defect appeared to be that nobody could ride her; and we do believe that Alexander himself would have found him; and we do believe that Alexander himself would have nd no means of taming this Bucephalus. After having ent a whole morning together with our host and his groom, the vain endeavour to conquer the vicious spirit of the mal, our friend, Monsieur de G——, shrugged up his oulders, with the usual gesture of a Frenchman when he forced to have recourse to some unpleasant expedient. ff n'y a pas de remède," said he; "the horse must be t to the sorcier;" and accordingly he gave orders to his rçon d'écurie to take it down the next morning to the vil-ge at which the aforesaid sorcier made his abode. This casioned inquiries, the answers to which soon determined m not to allow the taming of the shrew to take place with-t our presence; and on the first expression of a wish to on the spot at the time, our friend, whose hospitable odness and desire to give us all kinds of information and easure during our visit to his house we shall not easily rget, instantly arranged a party for the next morning, in dar to let us see the effect of the sorcier's power, in the st instance, and afterwards shoot over the ground in our turn to the manoir. . . . About six in the morning we t out, on horseback, for the dwelling of the sorcier, with a oom leading the horse in question, who remained quiet hough as long as no one attempted to mount him. How-er, after riding about six miles, as we came near the place f our destination, M. de G—— resolved to see whether the istance might not, in some degree, have quelled the spirit f the animal, and giving his own horse to the groom, he ounted the other, who let him fix himself very peaceably the saddle, but at the moment our friend attempted to rge him forward every muscle in his body seemed to be nimated with rage. He reared, he plunged, he kicked, and ft no means untried to shake his rider from his back. M. e G—— was a good horseman, and kept his seat; but he oon found that his situation was not a pleasant one, and at-empted to dismount; but this the animal would not suffer ither, rearing more tremendously than before, and showing strong inclination to throw himself over on his master. ust at this moment, a short, sturdy little man, attracted by he noise, came forth from the blacksmith's shop, towards hich we had been apparently directing our steps; and ap-roaching the spot, looked on for a moment as a spectator, nerely exclaiming, le coquin! At length the groom, im-atient of his apparent apathy, cried out, 'Mais souffle donc, 'rançois! Il va tomber, je le dis.' . . . 'Does Monsieur ish it?' demanded the sorcier, for such he was. . . 'Nom de Dieu!' cried the groom; 'S'il le veut!' . . s soon as he had said these words the sorcier watched his pportunity, and threw his arms round the horse's neck, hich, not accustomed to such embraces, reared more vio-ently than before, raising the little man off the ground with im. But he kept his hold, not at all embarrassed, and ontrived, in that awkward situation, to fix his mouth upon he orifice of the animal's ear. What he did, we know not. o one can suppose that the mere breathing in the animal's ar could have any effect; but his hands were occupied olding tightly round his neck, and the only thing we could bserve was that firm pressure of the mouth upon its ear. However, in a moment, the animal became less restive, tood still, shivered a little, as with cold, and from that mo-ent his spirit was gone. . . Monsieur de G—— dis-ounted, paid the sorcier his ordinary fee, which was no more than a few francs, and after the excitement, and sur-rise, and all that sort of thing, had passed away, we took o our guns and turned our steps homeward. It may well e supposed that our conversation for the rest of that day oured very much upon the sorcier; and, after several anec-dotes of the same nature as the above, M. de G—— related he following. . . . 'Our Curé,' said he, 'is a very excel-ent good man, but a little superstitious; and, about two years go, hearing a great deal about this sorcier and his feats of magic, he considered it his duty to preach against him; which he did so effectually for more than one Sunday, that the poor blacksmith lost all his custom; and as the priest had taught the peasantry to consider him as somewhat worse than the devil, he might have starved, if a circum-stance had not happened which delivered him from the ana-thema. . . . 'Our good Curé had saved from his stipend a few hundred francs, with which he determined to buy himself a horse, to enable him to visit the farther parts of his extensive cure with less inconvenience. Accordingly, when the fair of Dinan came round, he set out, and confident of his own judgment, bought himself a beast, which, doubtless, he imagined possessed all the qualities with which horse was ever endued. It was brought home the next day, and in the face of the whole parish, the saddle was placed on his back, and the Curé mounted. . . The horse stood stock still. The Curé gave him a gentle cut with his whip. The beast did not budge. The priest then applied a smarter blow. The horse lashed out behind, and in a minute the Curé was seen flying, like a black swan, into the pond before his own door, while the horse, as if quite satisfied with the exploit, stood as immoveable as a stone, with his head down to his knees, and his ears bent back upon his neck. . . . What could be done?—the Curé was not a man to try it again; and though he offered his horse at bargain to every one in the village, nobody would buy it. Day after day passed, and the horse stood in the stable, eat the Curé's corn, and did nothing. More than unce, the idea of applying to the sorcier occurred to the Curé. At first he could not resolve upon such a thing, and many an argument did he hold with himself concerning the propriety of it. At length, however, the necessity of the case overcame his scruples, and he determined to send him to the sorcier; but how to do it, now became a serious question. He had preached so much against the practice that he was ashamed of visiting to it himself. . . . At length, however, he took courage, and one dark night led the horse with his own hands all the way to the house we were at this morning. As soon as our friend François saw him, 'Ah, Monsieur le Curé,' said he, 'I thought you would come to me at last; but do you think I will cure your horse after you have ruined me?' The Curé now tried all his eloquence, but the sorcier was as hard as a flint; however, at length, he was somewhat moved. . . . Allons, Monsieur le Curé,' said he, 'I will make a bargain with you. You have preached me down when I could do you no good; you shall now preach me up—and I'll cure your horse.' This was a hard pill to swallow, and François would do nothing to gild it; but what could the Curé do? The priest could get on no longer without his horse, and the horse would not budge a step under the Curé. So there was only one question asked: 'Has the devil anything to do in the matter?' 'Not a wit!' answered François; and the horse being left at the sorcier's for security, on Sunday we had a sermon completely clearing François from the accusation of dealing with the devil; and on Monday the Curé was cantering all over the country."

The English Annual. Edward Churton.

THIS handsome octavo volume is an acknowledged reprint from a popular periodical, "The Court Magazine." It contains all the best papers of that work, with its excellent portraits of our Female Nobility, and is published at a less price than most of its gay and brilliant competitors for public favour. We do not believe that Naval and Military readers are over fond of poetry, but no one will begrudge the space we give to the verse of Richard Brinsley Sheridan:—

TO ELIZA *.

Oh! Summer, sweet and lovely are thy days!
Yet not without alloy thy gifts we share;
How full of peril is thy lightning's blaze—
How full of terror do thy meteors glare.
But when no more the flickering lightnings play,
And when no more the meteor's blaze is seen,
With double joy we bless thy milder ray.
With double joy we hail the calm serene.
Such, my Eliza, are the woes of love—
Wrath's lightning eye—the storm that grief lets fall;
But when from reason's sun the clouds remove,
The dear delightful calm o'erpays it all!

* The first Mrs. Sheridan.

SPRING.

From yonder copse, yet poor in shade,
And scantly clad in green,
Why burst such notes to charm the glade,
And praise the season's queen?
Each breeze, each flower that glads the sense,
To us new raptures bring,
But are these warblers tutored thence
To hail the coming spring?

Ah! no, they little mark the flower,
They little heed the breeze,
Nor early beam nor genial shower,
Can call such strains as these.
But, with their annual passion moved,
'Tis love that bids them sing,
And still to love, and to be loved,
Is all they feel of spring!

Shall I, then, life's chill winter fear,
Whose bliss no seasons bound?
Shall I, who love throughout the year,
One hour in grief be found?
A life of love is endless May;
Fortune, I brave thy sting,
For though thou may'st o'ercast my day,
Each night shall still be spring.

Flowers of Loveliness. Ackerman and Co.

THIS handsome volume contains twelve groups of female figures emblematic of flowers, with poetical illustrations by T. H. Bayly.

"In flowers and blossoms love is wont to trace
Emblems of woman's virtues and her grace;
Both pure, both sweet, both formed with curious skill,
The quaint analogy surprises still."

The designs are by Mr. Uwins, Miss Sharpe, Miss F. Corbaux, Mr. Wood, and Mrs. Seyffarth. The best plates are decidedly those of the Myrtle and Primrose, which are worthy the talents of Fanny Corbaux. Mr. Bayly's poetical illustrations are, like all his writings, light and pleasing.

Astoria; or, Enterprise beyond the Rocky Mountains. By Washington Irving, Author of 'The Sketch Book,' 'The Alhambra,' &c. 3 vols. R. Bentley.

AGREEABLY to the promise in our last we now proceed to lay before our readers some portions of this interesting work. We will begin with the narrative of the tragical fate of the Tonquin, after landing some of the intended settlers near the mouth of the Columbia river.

"We have already stated that the Tonquin set sail from the mouth of the river on the 5th of June. The whole number of persons on board amounted to twenty-three. In one of the outer bays they picked up, from a fishing canoe, an Indian named Lamazee, who had already made two voyages along the coast, and knew something of the languages of the various tribes. He agreed to accompany them as interpreter. . . . Steering to the north, Captain Thorn arrived in a few days at Vancouver's island, and anchored in the harbour of Naweetee, very much against the advice of his Indian interpreter, who warned him against the perfidious character of the natives on this part of the coast. Numbers of canoes soon came off, bringing sea-otter skins to sell. It was too late in the day to commence a traffic, but Mr. M'Kay, accompanied by a few of the men, went on shore to a large village to visit Wicenenish, the chief of the surrounding territory, six of the natives remaining as hostages. He was received with great professions of friendship, entertained hospitably, and a couch of sea-otter skins was prepared for him in the dwelling of the chieftain, where he was prevailed upon to pass the night. . . . In the morning, before Mr. M'Kay had returned to the ship, great numbers of the natives came off in their canoes to trade, headed by two sons of Wiconanish. As they brought abundance of sea-otter skins, and there was every appearance of a brisk trade, Capt. Thorn did not wait for the return of Mr. M'Kay, but spread out his wares upon the deck, making a tempting display of blankets, cloths, knives, beads, and fish-hooks, expecting a prompt and profitable sale. The Indians, however, were not so eager and simple as he had supposed, having learned the art of bargaining and the value of merchandise from the casual traders along the coast. They were guided, too, by a shrewd old chief named Nookamis, who had grown grey in traffic with New England skippers, and prided himself upon his acuteness. His opinion seemed to regulate the market. When Capt. Thorn made what he considered a liberal offer for an otter skin, the wily old Indian treated it with scorn, and asked more than double. His comrades all took their cue from him, and not an otter skin was to be had at a reasonable rate. . . . The old fellow, however, overshot his mark, and mistook the character of the man he was treating with. Thorn was a plain, straightforward sailor, who never had two minds nor two prices in his dealings, was deficient in patience and pliancy, and totally wanting in the chicanery of traffic. He had a vast deal of stern, but honest pride in his nature, and, moreover, held the whole savage race in sovereign contempt. Abandoning all further attempts, therefore, to bargain with his shuffling customers, he thrust his hands into his pockets, and paced up and down the deck in sullen silence. The cunning old Indian followed him to and fro, holding out a sea-otter skin to him at every turn, and pestering him to trade. Finding other means unavailing, he suddenly changed his tone, and began to jeer and banter him upon the mean prices he offered. This was too much for the patience of the captain, who was never remarkable for relishing a joke, especially when at his own expense. Turning suddenly upon his persecutor, he snatched the proffered otter skin from his hands, robbed it in his face, and dismissed him over the side of the ship with no very complimentary application to accelerate his exit. He then kicked the peltries to the right and left about the deck, and broke up the market in the most ignominious manner. Old Nookamis made for shore in a furious passion, in which he was joined by Shewish, one of the sons of Wiconanish, who went off breathing vengeance, and the ship was soon abandoned by the natives. . . . When Mr. M'Kay returned on board, the interpreter related what had passed, and begged him to prevail upon the captain to make sail, as, from his knowledge of the temper and pride of the people of the place, he was sure they would resent the indignity offered to one of their chiefs. Mr. M'Kay, who himself possessed some experience of Indian character, went to the captain, who was still pacing the deck in moody humour, represented the danger to which his hasty act had exposed the vessel, and urged him to weigh anchor. The captain made light of his counsels, and pointed to his cannon and fire-arms as a sufficient safeguard against naked savages. Further remonstrances only provoked taunting replies and sharp altercations. The day passed away without any signs of hostility, and at night the captain retired as usual to his cabin, taking no more than the usual precautions. . . . On the following morning, at day-break, while the captain and Mr. M'Kay were yet asleep, a canoe came alongside in which were twenty Indians, commanded by young Shewish. They were unarmed, their aspect and demeanour friendly, and they held up otter skins and made signs indicative of a wish to trade. The caution enjoined by Mr. Astor, in respect to the admission of Indians on board of the ship, had been neglected for some time past; and the officer of the watch, perceiving those in the canoe to be without weapons, and having received no orders to the contrary, readily permitted them to mount the deck. Another canoe soon succeeded, the crew of which was likewise admitted. In a little while other canoes came, and Indians were soon clambering into the vessel on all sides. . . . The officer of the watch now felt alarm, and called to Capt. Thorn and Mr. M'Kay. By the time they came on deck, it was thronged with Indians. The interpreter noticed to Mr. M'Kay that many of the natives were short mantles of skins, and intimated a suspicion that they were secretly armed. Mr. M'Kay urged the captain to clear the ship and get under way. He again made light of the advice; but the augmented swarm of canoes about the ship, and the numbers still putting off from shore, at length awakened his distrust, and he ordered some of the crew to weigh anchor, while some were sent aloft to make sail. . . . The Indians now offered to trade with the captain on his own terms, prompted, apparently, by the approaching departure of the ship. Accordingly a hurried trade was commenced. The main articles sought by the savages in barter were knives; as fast as some were supplied they moved off, and others succeeded. By degrees they were thus distributed about the deck, and all with weapons. . . . The anchor was now nearly up, the sails were loose, and the captain, in a loud and peremptory tone, ordered the ship to be cleared. In an instant a signal yell was given: it was echoed on every side, knives and war-clubs were brandished in every direction, and the savages rushed upon their marked victims. . . . The first that fell was Mr. Lewis, the ship's clerk. He was leaning, with folded arms, over a bale of blankets, engaged in bargaining, when he received a deadly stab in the back, and fell down the companionway. . . . Mr. M'Kay, who was seated on the taffrail, sprang on his feet, but was instantly knocked down with a war-club and fleeg backwards into the sea, where he was despatched by the women in the canoes. . . . In the mean time, Capt. Thorn made desperate fight against fearful odds. He was a powerful as well as resolute man, but he had come upon deck without weapons. Shewish, the young chief, singled him out as his peculiar prey, and rushed upon him at the first outbreak. The captain had barely time to draw a clasp-knife, with one blow of which he laid the young savage dead at his feet. Several of the stoutest followers of Shewish now set upon him. He defended himself vigorously, dealing crippling blows to right and left, and strewing the quarter-deck with the slain and wounded. His object was, to fight his way to the cabin, where there were fire-arms; but he was hemmed in with foes, covered with wounds, and faint with loss of blood. For an instant he leaned upon the tiller wheel, when a blow from behind, with a war-club, felled him to the deck, where he was despatched with knives and thrown overboard. . . . While this was transacting upon the quarter-deck, a chance medley fight was going on throughout the ship. The crew fought desperately with knives, handspikes, and whatever weapon they could seize upon in the moment of surprise, but were soon overpowered and mercilessly butchered. As to the seven who had been sent aloft to make sail, they contemplated with horror the carnage that was going on below. Being destitute of weapons, they let themselves down by the running rigging, in hopes of getting between decks. One fell in the attempt, and was instantly despatched; another received a death-blow in the back as he was descending; a third, Stephen Weekes, the armourer, was mortally wounded as he was getting down the hatchway. . . . The remaining four made good their retreat into the cabin, where they found Mr. Lewis, still alive, though mortally wounded. Barricading the cabin door, they broke holes through the companion way, and, with the muskets and ammunition which were at hand, opened a brisk fire that soon cleared the deck. . . Thus far the Indian interpreter, from whom these particulars are derived, had been an eye-witness of the deadly conflict. He had taken no part in it, and had been spared by the natives as being of their race. In the confusion of the moment he took refuge with the rest, in the canoes. The survivors of the crew now rallied forth, and discharged some of the deck guns, which did great execution among the canoes, and drove all the savages to shore. . . For the remainder of the day no one ventured to put off to the ship, deterred by the effects of the fire-arms. The night passed away without any further attempt on the part of the natives. When the day dawned, the Tonquin still lay at anchor in the bay, her sails all loose and flapping in the wind, and no one apparently on board of her. After a time, some of the canoes ventured forth to reconnoitre, taking with them the interpreter. They paddled about her, keeping cautiously at a distance, but growing more and more emboldened at seeing her quiet and lifeless. One man at length made his appearance on the deck, and was recognised by the interpreter as Mr. Lewis. He made friendly signs, and invited them on board. It was long before they ventured to comply. Those who mounted the deck met with no opposition; no one was to be seen on board; for Mr. Lewis, after inviting them, had disappeared. Other canoes now pressed forward to board the prize; the decks were soon crowded, and the sides covered with clambering savages, all intent on plunder. In the midst of their eagerness and exultation, the ship blew up with a tremendous explosion. Arms, legs, and mutilated bodies were blown into the air, and dreadful havoc was made in the surrounding canoes. The interpreter was in the main chains at the time of the explosion, and was thrown unhurt into the water, where he succeeded in getting into one of the canoes, According to his statement, the bay presented an awful spectacle after the catastrophe. The ship had disappeared, but the bay was covered with fragments of the wreck, with shattered canoes, and Indians swimming for their lives, or struggling in the agonies of death; while those who had escaped the danger remained aghast and stupified, or made with frantic panic for the shore. Upwards of a hundred savages were destroyed by the explosion, many more were shockingly mutilated, and for days afterwards the limbs and bodies of the slain were thrown upon the beach. . . The inhabitants of Newestee were overwhelmed with consternation at this astounding calamity, which had burst upon them in the very moment of triumph. The warriors sat mute and mournful, while the women filled the air with loud lamentations. Their weeping and wailing, however, was suddenly changed into yells of fury at the sight of four unfortunate white men, brought captive into the village. They had been driven on shore in one of the ship's boats, and taken at some distance along the coast. . . The interpreter was permitted to converse with them. They proved to be the four brave fellows who had made such desperate defence from the cabin. The interpreter gathered from them some of the particulars already related. They told him further, that, after they had beaten off the enemy, and cleared the ship, Lewis advised that they should slip the cable and endeavour to get to sea. They declined to take his advice, alleging that the wind set too strongly into the bay, and would drive them on shore. They resolved, as soon as it was dark, to put off quietly in the ship's boat, which they would be able to do unperceived, and to coast along back to Astoria. They put their resolution into effect; but Lewis refused to accompany them, being disabled by his wound, hopeless of escape, and determined on a terrible revenge. On the voyage out, he had repeatedly expressed a presentiment that he should die by his own hands; thinking it highly probable that he should be engaged in some contest with the natives, and being resolved, in case of extremity, to commit suicide, rather than be made a prisoner. He now declared his intention to remain on board of the ship until daylight, to decoy as many of the savages on board as possible, then to set fire to the powder magazine, and terminate his life by a signal act of vengeance. How well he succeeded has been shown. His companions bade him a melancholy adieu, and set off on their precarious expedition. They strove with might and main to get out of the bay, but found it impossible to weather a point of land, and were at length compelled to take shelter in a small cove, where they hoped to remain concealed until the wind should be more favourable. Exhausted by fatigue and watching, they fell into a sound sleep, and in that state were surprised by the savages. Better had it been for those unfortunate men had they remained with Lewis, and shared his heroic death; as it was, they perished in a more painful and protracted manner; being sacrificed by the natives to the manes of their friends with all the lingering tortures of savage cruelty. Some time after their death, the interpreter, who had remained a kind of prisoner at large, effected his escape, and brought the tragical tidings to Astoria. . . Such is the melancholy story of the Tonquin, and such was the fate of her brave, but head-strong commander, and her adventurous crew."

The following will be read with breathless attention. The scene is brought palpably before the eye. One beholds the poor, gasping, naked, and unarmed fugitive, flying like the wind before his savage pursuers, and knowing that one false step, even the slightest stumble, would ensure lingering torments and death.

"The next morning early, as the party were yet encamped at the mouth of a small stream, they were visited by another of these heroes of the wilderness, one John Colter, who had accompanied Lewis and Clarke in their memorable expedition. He had recently made one of those vast journal voyages so characteristic of this fearless class of men, and of the immense regions over which they hold their lonely wanderings; having come from the head waters of the Missouri to St. Louis in a small canoe. This distance of three thousand miles he had accomplished in thirty days. Colter kept with the party all the morning. He had many particulars to give them concerning the Blackfeet Indians, a restless and predatory tribe, who had conceived an implacable hostility to the white men, in consequence of one of their warriors having been killed by Captain Lewis, while attempting to steal horses. Through the country infested by these savages the expedition would have to proceed, and Colter was urgent in recommending the precautions that ought to be observed respecting them. He had himself experienced their vindictive cruelty, and his story deserves particular citation, as showing the hairbreadth adventures to which these solitary rovers of the wilderness are exposed. . . . Colter, with the hardihood of a regular trapper, had cast himself loose from the party of Lewis and Clarke in the very heart of the wilderness, and had remained to trap beaver alone on the head waters of the Missouri. Here he fell in with another lonely trapper, like himself, named Potts, and they agreed to keep together. They were in the very region of the terrible Blackfeet, at that time thirsting to revenge the death of their companion, and knew that they had to expect no mercy at their hands. They were obliged to keep concealed all day in the woody margins of the rivers, setting their traps after nightfall, and taking them up before daybreak. It was running a fearful risk for the sake of a few beaver skins, but such is the life of the trapper. They were on a branch of the Missouri called Jefferson's Fork, and had set their traps at night, about six miles up a small river that emptied itself into the fork. Early in the morning they ascended the river in a canoe, to examine the traps. The banks on each side were high and perpendicular, and cast a shade over the stream. As they were softly paddling along, they heard the trampling of many feet upon the banks. Colter immediately gave the alarm of "Indians!" and was for instant retreat. Potts scoffed at him for being frightened by the trampling of a herd of buffaloes. Colter checked his uneasiness and paddled forward. They had not gone much further when frightful whoops and yells burst forth from each side of the river, and several hundred Indians appeared on either bank. Signs were made to the unfortunate trappers to come on shore. They were obliged to comply. Before they could get out of their canoe, a savage seized the rifle belonging to Potts. Colter sprang on shore, wrested the weapon from the hands of the Indian, and restored it to his companion, who was still in the canoe, and immediately pushed into the stream. There was the sharp twang of a bow, and Potts cried out that he was wounded. Colter urged him to come on shore and submit, as his only chance for life; but the other knew there was no prospect of mercy, and determined to die game. Levelling his rifle, he shot one of the savages dead on the spot. The next moment he fell himself, pierced with innumerable arrows. . . . The vengeance of the savages now turned upon Colter. He was stripped naked, and, having some knowledge of the Blackfoot language, overheard a consultation as to the mode of despatching him, so as to derive the greatest amusement from his death. Some were for setting him up as a mark, and having a trial of skill at his expense. The chief, however, was for nobler sport. He seized Colter by the shoulder, and demanded if he could run fast. The unfortunate trapper was too well acquainted with Indian customs not to comprehend the drift of the question. He knew he was to run for his life, to furnish a kind of human hunt to his persecutors. Though in reality he was noted among his brother hunters for swiftness of foot, he assured the chief that he was a very bad runner. His stratagem gained him some vantage ground. He was led by the chief into the prairie, about four hundred yards from the main body of savages, and then turned loose to save himself if he could. A tremendous yell let him know that the whole pack of bloodhounds were off in full cry. Colter flew, rather than ran; he was astonished at his own speed; but he had six miles of prairie to traverse before he should reach the Jefferson Fork of the Missouri; how could he hope to hold out such a distance with the fearful odds of several hundred to one against him! The plain, too, abounded with the prickly pear, which wounded his naked feet. Still he fled on, dreading each moment to hear the twang of a bow, and to feel an arrow quivering at his heart. He did not even dare to look round, lest he should lose an inch of that distance on which his life depended. He had run nearly half way across the plain when the sound of pursuit grew somewhat fainter, and he ventured to turn his head. The main body of his pursuers were a considerable distance behind; several of the fatter runners were scattered in the advance; while a swift-footed warrior, armed with a spear, was not more than a hundred yards behind him. . . . Inspired with new hope, Colter redoubled his exertions, but strained himself to such a degree, that the blood gushed from his mouth and nostrils, and streamed down his breast. He arrived within a mile of the river. The sound of footsteps gathered upon him. A glance behind showed his pursuer within twenty yards, and preparing to launch his spear. Stopping short, he turned round and spread out his arms. The savage, confounded by this sudden action, attempted to stop and to hurl his spear, but fell in the very act. His spear stuck in the ground, and the shaft broke in his hand. Colter plucked up the pointed part, pinned the savage to the earth, and continued his flight. The Indians, as they arrived at their slaughtered companion, stopped to howl over him. Colter made the most of this precious delay, gained the skirt of cotton-wood bordering the river, dashed through it, and plunged into the stream. He swam to a neighbouring island, against the upper end of which the driftwood had lodged in such quantities as to form a natural raft; under this he dived, and swam below water until he succeeded in getting a breathing place between the floating trunks of trees, whose branches and bushes formed a covert several feet above the level of the water. He had scarcely drawn breath after all his toils, when he heard his pursuers on the river bank, whooping and yelling like so many fiends. They plunged in the river, and swam to the raft. The heart of Colter almost died within [illegible] saw them, through the chinks of his concealment, passing and repassing, and seeking for him in all directions. They at length gave up the search, and he began to [illegible] his escape, when the idea presented itself that [illegible] set the raft on fire. Here was a new source of horrible apprehension, to which he remained until nightfall. Fortunately the idea did not suggest itself to the Indians. As soon as it was dark, finding by the [illegible] that his pursuers had departed, Colter [illegible] and came up beyond the raft.

He then await silently down the river for a considerable distance, when he landed, and kept on all night, to get as far off as possible from this dangerous neighbourhood.

By daybreak he had gained sufficient distance to relieve him from the terrors of his savage foes; but now new sources of inquietude presented themselves. He was naked and alone, in the midst of an unbounded wilderness; his only chance was to reach a trading post of the Missouri company, situated on a branch of the Yellowstone river. Even should he elude his pursuers, days must elapse before he could reach this post, during which he must traverse immense prairie deserts of sterile, his tasked body exposed to the burning heat of the sun by day, and the dews and chills of the night season; and his feet lacerated by the thorns of the prickly pear. Though he might see game in abundance around him, he had no means of killing any for his sustenance, and must depend for food upon the roots of the earth. In defiance of these difficulties he pushed resolutely forward, guiding himself in his trackless course by those signs and indications known only to Indians and backwoodmen; and after braving dangers and hardships enough to break down any spirit but that of a western pioneer, arrived safe at the solitary post in question."

It is of incidents such as these that the "strange eventful history" of "Astoria" is made up. Its publication will, if possible, extend the fame of the rare genius that penned it, and amply warrant the eagerness caused by its announcement—an eagerness never equalled, except by that which formerly arose when a new work was promised by either Byron or Scott.

NEW MUSIC.

My Beautiful Rhine. A Ballad, the Music adapted by G. W. Reeve from a Composition of Herr Helstigs. Leoni Lee.

THIS song has been rendered exceedingly popular by the delightful singing of Mrs. Honey; it is of a light and fanciful character, the melody is a very agreeable and pleasing composition.

Sol Fa Duett. The singing lesson between Master and Scholar, as sung by Mr. Barnett and Miss Stanley, in the Burletta of "Harmony Hall." Leoni Lee.

A PLEASING little trifle, but there is very little originality in the subject. Young vocalists will, however, find it a useful lesson to practise.

The Rose of Killarney. A Ballad from the new and admired Operetta of "Kate Kearney." Leoni Lee.

THIS is a very pretty little song, and is delightfully sung by Mrs. Waylett. We cannot say much for the originality of the music, which is, we think, borrowed from two well-known Scotch airs; the ADAPTER has done his work with great taste.

My Own Sweet Native Vale. A Song from the Operetta of "Kate Kearney," the Poetry by W. Collier. The Music by A. Lee, Esq. Leoni Lee.

Decidedly one of the best songs of the season, and ought to be in the possession of every lady of taste. The melody is of Swiss character, and is beautifully adapted to the words. It is nightly encored at the Queen's Theatre, where it is delightfully sung by Mrs. Waylett.

Not having been able to attend the first performance of The Duchess of Ormond, at Drury-lane Theatre, (a piece since withdrawn), we are indebted to a friend for the following accurate report of the plot of the play:—

SIR WILLIAM KNIGHTON.

Sir William Knighton originally devoted the medical profession as an apprentice to an apothecary at Tavistock; and, after a residence of a few months in London, returned to that town to settle as a general practitioner. This, however, not proving agreeable to his taste, or satisfactory to his ambition, he soon returned to London, and settled as an accoucheur. The College of Physicians having admonished him for practising as a physician without a degree, he went to Edinburgh, where he remained two sessions; and, having obtained a degree from the Archbishop of Canterbury, was admitted a licentiate. From this time he remained in London till 1810, when he accompanied the Marquess Wellesley to Spain, and returned with him when the mission was at an end. On this nobleman retiring from office, he asked his late Majesty to appoint Knighton one of his physicians. Soon after this he became acquainted with Sir John M'Mahon, by whom he was speedily admitted to terms of intimacy; and they continued on the most confidential footing until the death of the latter, who made Sir William his executor. Among the papers which thus came into his possession were some relating to certain private affairs of the late King. Instead of endeavouring to turn this circumstance to any profitable account, Knighton instantly carried the documents to Carlton-house, and placed them at once, without comment or condition, in the hands of the rightful owner. From that hour may be dated his admission to Royal favour: the Prince Regent, struck at once with the importance of the benefit and with the delicate manner in which it had been conferred, appointed Knighton to an important office in the Duchy of Cornwall; in 1813 raised him to the baronetage; and, at a later period, presented him with the grand cross of the Guelphic Order.

His reputation was now at its zenith, and his business continued very extensive till the removal of Sir B. Bloomfield, who had succeeded Sir John M'Mahon in the office of Private Secretary. On the elevation of this gentleman to the Peerage, and his mission to Sweden, Sir W. Knighton, who had previously been a frequent visiter, now became an inmate, at Carlton Palace, was invested with the offices of Private Secretary and Privy Purse—appointments which he retained till the death of George IV. Before his connexion with the Court, Sir W. Knighton practised chiefly, though not exclusively, as an accoucheur. He is said to have been extremely cautious of his reputation—always calling in additional advice whenever there was any manifest danger; and succeeded in amassing a very large fortune by his original profession. From the time of his accepting the appointments above mentioned, he, of course, wholly abandoned practice; but he still retained an intimacy with several members of the medical profession, some of whom were indebted to him for many acts of kindness and consideration. He had latterly suffered from embarrassment of breathing and oppression about the chest, which proved to be dependent upon enlargement of the heart, and ended in dropsical effusion into the right pleura and pericardium, which proved fatal on Tuesday, the 11th inst., in the 60th year of his age.

Sir W. Knighton was unquestionably a man of excellent talents, but he was still more conspicuous for his fine sagacity and knowledge of the world. His success in life was remarkable, but such was at one time his interest at Court, that it is quite certain he might have commanded almost anything which the highest influence in the empire could bestow; yet he never showed himself either avaricious or greedy of honours. He was scrupulously punctilious in all the observances and etiquettes of society; but, amid the polish which his manners and character received from the circumstances into which he was thrown, he still retained unimpaired the impress of his early friendships.
